My Uncle Marshell Petain wanted to start a tavern with a paramilitary theme. He'd have weapons on the ceiling, photos on the walls showing great battles, daggers and bayonets under glass on the bar.

Upstairs he'd have a special private party room for angry vets with pictures of certain past presidents for spitting practice.

No lighting would be allowed in the club itself. Dueling and stabbing would be encouraged to go out to the alley.

I'll bet after a few beers those guys would have nothing but fun. What an exciting place! Guys would come from a hundred miles away just to spit.

Can you believe the bank turned down such a winner!

Uncle Petain said it was because the economy was weak. He'll try again next year.

UMass wants respect in Kentucky rematch

By Candice Flemming
Collegian Staff

Massachusetts and Kentucky ... the No. 1 and No. 2 teams in the nation... arguably the top defensive team and top offensive team in the nation.

Sounds a lot like a National Championship type game doesn't it? In fact, that's the way a lot of people are viewing it as — the real National Championship matchup.

The Minutemen and the Wildcats are meeting in the second Final Four matchup at approximately 8 p.m., after Mississippi State and Syracuse play each other in the first game at 5:42, but most agree that the contest between UMass and Kentucky will decide the National Champion.

"This is the marquee game," freshman guard Charlton Clarke said. "This is the championship game for us, because if we don't beat them we don't go to the championship."

"You've got the two hottest teams in the country. It's going to be a dog fight," Donta Bright said. "It's the type of game you hate to see a team lose."

It's also just another game that the Minutemen are supposed to lose.

They weren't supposed to beat the Wildcats in their season opener and they weren't supposed to beat Georgetown. Entering the season, UMass' guards weren't supposed to be that good and the team wasn't supposed to compile a 35–1 record, let alone go to the Final Four — but they did.

On Saturday, they aren't supposed to beat Kentucky again, as they will enter the game as 9 1/2 point underdogs.

"We like being underdogs," Marcus Camby said. "People weren't picking us to get out of the bracket. There's no pressure on us. No one's expecting us to win. We just have to go out there and play UMass basketball, keep playing like we have all year long."

"There's really not any pressure for us," Clarke said. "We knew we would go this far. This is just the next step. It's just another game we have to play and go out and win."

The Wildcats will no doubt be entering this game with revenge on their minds after the Minutemen shocked them with a 10-point victory on Nov. 28.

The Minutemen on the other hand will enter this game looking for something they haven't got all season — respect.

UMass coach John Calipari said that respect is earned by winning a National Championship, and his players agreed.

"They want this game for revenge, we want it for respect — so something's got to give," Camby

Baseball enjoys sun, wins during 5–1 spring break

By Casey Kane
Collegian Staff

Like many college students, the members of the Massachusetts baseball team spent their spring break in the Florida sunshine, but unlike the beachcombers and sunbathers, the Minutemen were not there for fun.

UMass 8, Bucknell 7

In the first game of the road trip, the Minutemen were led by a pair of senior Northampton natives.

Behind the pitching of David Dart and the work of Justin Kelly at first base, UMass squeaked out a win against Bucknell. The win was the Minutemen's first of the year.

The left-handed Dart allowed only two runs on seven hits, while striking out five, in his six innings.

Righty Scott Barmby collected the win, pitching the final inning and two- thirds.

Kelly turned in a three-for-four performance, which included two doubles and a single. Brad Gorrie swung the bat well for the Minutemen, firing off a home-run and a triple.

UMass 17, Bucknell 5

After a narrow escape in the first game against Bucknell, the Minutemen came back with a vengeance, destroying the Bison 17-5. The game was played in six innings due to the 10-run rule.

Right-hander Jason Bennett earned his first win of the season, throwing eight strikeouts. He gave up five runs on 11 hits, walking two.

The Minutemen had six players with more than one hit, and they scored six runs in the sixth inning. Kelly was again solid for UMass, blasting a three-run homer in the sixth.

Nate Murphy and Ryan Thistle each turned in triples, and Ryan Jette and Pete Gautreau had doubles.

UMass 10, Millersville 3

The Minutemen continued their winning ways in the third game of their Florida road swing, cruising to a win over Millersville, 10-3.

With the win, UMass evened its record at 3-3.

Second baseman Muchie Dagliere went three-for-four on the day, nearly hitting for the cycle. He tallied a single, double, and a home-run.

Massachusetts claimed a 5-0 lead when Jette launched a two-run homer, adding to UMass' 3-0 advantage.

Millersville came within two, scoring three times in the bottom of the fifth.

UMass put the game out of reach in the top of the eighth, scoring five.

Chad Sullivan, a righty from Amherst, worked five innings, allowing three runs on five hits. He struck out six, walking just three.

Chad Paronto worked the final three innings in relief to pick up the save.

Northwestern 6, UMass 4

The Massachusetts win streak came to an end when the Minutemen fell to Northwestern, 6-4.

The loss brought UMass' record to 3-4.

UMass held a slight advantage, 2-1, after three innings, two

Tocchet simply a Bruin; Rangers toughen up; Clark returns to Leafs

Kottler on the NHL

Only weeks removed from one of the most stagnant periods in local sports, these are suddenly high times in the commonwealth for several reasons — the UMass men's basketball team has reached the Final Four, baseball's first regular season game in April kicks off another year of optimism for die-hards of the Old Towne Team, and the Boston Bruins may actually keep the early weeks of summer cool with their 29th straight trip to the NHL playoffs.

Oh, they haven't iced anything yet, but their newfound grit and ability to beat contending teams is sufficient to believe the streak will be extended.

And isn't it funny that General Manager Harry Sinden, a man who drew my ire for hiring Steve Kasper and that of the public for trading for Kevin Stevens (enjoying Tinsel Town, Señor Stevens?), pulled precisely the right string once more by shipping Stevens west for Rich Tocchet, who is, simply, a Bruin.

As Boston annually surpassed preseason expectations during the last decade, which were founded on their lack of talent that has long been the direct result of owner Jeremy Jacobs' Scrooge-like purse strings, the Bruins roster was forever dotted with names that weren't household, but were perfect fits in the Boston Garden. Guys like Kluzak, Poulin, Propp, Christian, Hughes, Donato, and now Tocchet.

We all thought Stevens' black and gold sweater would fit him more like a glove. It did, just like another glove did on O.J. Simpson. The pressure was too much for him, so he was quickly stripped of the crest he longed to wear.

Tocchet was as happy as anyone to get out of LA (wonder how much lower attendance is sans Gretzky), but his route to Boston never seemed so natural. Here was an aging, injury prone winger who could find the net but had a greater propensity for the penalty box. That style worked well in Philadelphia and Pittsburgh, but Boston has been miserable in penalty killing. What use did it have for a player who projected to score little more than Stevens while costing still more power play goals?

The Bruins didn't need to look any further than Stevens to figure that outcomes and predictions often look very different when all is said and done. Consider whose spot Tocchet has filled in the lineup: the one so well occupied by Cam Neely in times of health. I said recently that Neely's absence meant an early vacation for Boston, but that was without realizing the extent of Tocchet's contribution.

For the better part of 1995-96, the Bruins skated in their new home without a trace of the determination that was their staple for years. What happened? Answering that question won't change their lousy record over the season's first 50 games, but Tocchet has spearheaded the return to genuine Boston hockey, played with few superstars but abundant desire.

• I find it amusing that Al Iafrate's status is listed as day-to-day. I guess season-to-season is not an option. You have a better chance of seeing Comet Hyakutake than Planet Iafrate.

• As the abbreviated 1994-95 season wore down, I predicted the Rangers would not make the playoffs. Oops. They even won their first round series over Quebec. Of course, the victory hinged on the poorest piece of officiating I have ever seen, Alexei Kovalev's boo-hoo that woo- wooed zebra Andy Van Hellemond into a fine (more on Kovalev in a moment).

New York will have home ice this time around, perhaps in a series with Boston, a meeting that hasn't taken place in many years. But GM Neil Smith still made a deal before last Wednesday's trade deadline, in part acquiring bruisers Marty McSorley and Shane Churla from the Kings for three prospects.

Lacrosse looks to extend BC dominance

By Matt Vautour
Collegian Staff

The road swing continues for the No. 12 Massachusetts men's lacrosse team, but the end is in sight, as the Minutemen will finish their four-game road trip this afternoon against Boston College at 3 p.m. at Alumni Field.

The Eagles will check in at 3-2, coming off two straight wins over Fairfield and Marist, but they have a tall order ahead of them if they hope to upset the Minutemen.

Upsetting UMass is something the Eagles have struggled with in the past. The Minutemen (2-2) have dominated the all-time series with the Eagles, winning all 22 games dating back to April 23, 1974.

For the underdogs to have any success, they will have to get strong performances from their top players.

Kevin McLane leads the Eagles with 14 goals and 10 assists in the five games, while senior attackman Matt Prybylski has added 11 goals and four assists.

In goal Mark Mulvoy has been the Eagles No. 1 netminder but has a lofty 14.0 goals against average.

UMass coach Greg Cannella said that is is important for his team to get ahead early to avoid the upset.

"If we don't come to play and stay after them, they're going to stay in the game," Cannella said. "Anytime you play a team that you're supposed to beat, the longer you keep them in the game, the longer they feel they can stay with you. It's important that we get out in the first quarter and match their emotion."

The Minutemen finished 1-2 during a tough Spring Break to even their record at 2-2.

Virginia 15, Massachusetts 9

UMass hung with the No. 4 in the nation for most of the game, trailing only 12-9 with only five minutes to go, but the Cavaliers added three quick goals to close out the victory.

Virginia was led by Doug Knight, who is widely considered one of the top attackmen in the nation, tallied four goals to lead the Cavaliers while five other Virginia players added two goals a piece.

Senior Buddy Hoffman netted three goals for the Minutemen, while junior All-America candidate Brendan Glass added two.

"I thought our guys were prepared and I thought we played well," Cannella said. "Virginia is a good team."

Softball wins seven, Sortino wins 500th over break

By Fred Hurlbrink, Jr.
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts softball team spent its Spring Break in the Sunshine State with positive results in the Lady Seminole Tournament and a milestone victory.

Freshman hurler Danielle Henderson pitched her first of two consecutive shutouts allowing just three hits in blanking Eastern Illinois, 8-0, registering the 500th career win for UMass coach Elaine Sortino.

"The most satisfying part of it was how the kids reacted," said Sortino who was in such a coaching tizzy that she didn't realize that she had just notched victory No. 500, becoming the first Northeast region coach to reach that milestone.

"That night we went to dinner as a team, and each of the kids gave me a long-stem rose. The most meaningful thing that happened to me was that [they] each wrote me a little note — [those notes] will be with me until the day I die," she said.

As for the actual game that provided the stage for Sortino's monumental victory, the Minutewomen dominated from first pitch to last ups.

UMass exploded for four runs in the top of the third to jump out to a 5-0 lead that was more than enough for Henderson who won her fourth straight in Florida, and her fifth in-a-row overall after losing her first five decisions.

Sam Cardenas started the visitor's half of the third coming back from an 0-2 count to draw a lead-off walk. Stephanie Mareina followed with a single to right field, and both were driven in by a one-out double to left from Kelly Buckley. Buckley, catching for injured slugger Chris Martens, scored on a misplayed fly ball to left off Martens' bat. Shortstop Ashlie Hayes doubled to center with two outs, scoring Martens and capping the Massachusetts third.

The Minutewomen held the momentum as Henderson set Eastern Illinois down in order in the bottom of the third.

After an error by Hayes, Henderson induced a 4-6-3 double play, and then got opposing pitcher, Missy Porzel, to ground out to Cardenas to close out the inning.

Led by the 3-for-3, three run performance of Buckley, the Minutewomen banged out 10 hits, and plated eight while holding Eastern Illinois scoreless thanks to solid all-around defense.

Lady Seminole Tournament

Mareina, one of the team's top base stealers, reached base on a one-out walk, stole second and scored the first Massachusetts run of the Lady Seminole Invitational as the Minutewomen jumped out to a early 10-0 lead on Bradley, hanging on to win 10-5 in UMass first tournament action.

Mareina had three hits and drove in a pair of runs, in her strongest effort of the trip raising her average closer to the Mendoza line, as she produced a solid 9-for-33 showing in Florida bringing her 22-game average to .178.

The UMass offense was again paced by Buckley who was 3-for-5 and knocked in three runs. All-Tournament selection, Kim Gutridge had two hits in five trips to the plate, coming around to score twice.

Henderson threw six pitches in the first inning, retiring the top three Bradley hitters on three ground balls. She went on to set down the first eleven Braves and didn't give up a hit until a one-out RBI single in the bottom of the fifth.

The embattled freshman pitcher was hurt by four errors, and all five Bradley runs were unearned. Henderson allowed five hits and two walks while striking out one in posting her second collegiate victory.

The Minutewomen emerged from the "toughest pool in the tournament" according to Sortino), with a 4-1 record, dropping a 3-0 decision to Notre Dame, in which UMass managed a measly three hits.

"I think we took the test [of pool play] very well," Sortino said.

Their biggest victory of Spring Break — besides Sortino's 500th — was a 3-2 win over the eventual

U.S. base in Okinawa to be renewed

TOKYO (AP) — Prime Minister Ryutaro Hashimoto will renew controversial U.S. military base leases on Okinawa since the island's governor has defied a court order to do so, ruling party officials said Tuesday.

Okinawa Gov. Masahide Ota said he would not sign papers renewing the base leases because residents want the U.S. military off the southern Japanese island.

Ota declared his stand Tuesday when Masao Morodomi, chief of the central government's Defense Facilities Administration Agency, personally urged him to comply with laws requiring him to sign the leases when the private landowners refuse.

"I understand the government's position, but there could be a case in which I can't meet the government's request," Ota told Morodomi in a conversation aired on the public broadcasting network NHK.

Ota is disobeying a court ruling that he must renew the leases by Thursday. However, the prime minister has the option of signing them under the order delivered Monday by the Fukuoka High Court branch in Naha, the Okinawan capital.

Study finds watercress may lower cancer risk

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — In a finding that conjures up images of the Marlboro Man eating dainty tea sandwiches, a new study suggests that a substance in watercress may lower the risk of lung cancer in smokers.

The study — one of several food-related papers presented Tuesday at a seminar held by the American Cancer Society — found evidence that the substance blocks a chemical pathway from tobacco smoke to lung cancer.

So does that mean smokers could lower their cancer risk by eating watercress itself?

Maybe, if they ate it for the rest of their lives, but there's no data on that question, said researcher Stephen Hecht of the American Health Foundation in Valhalla, N.Y. "The right message is not to smoke," he said.

His goal is to develop a pill for addicted smokers that contains the watercress substance and others that would block lung cancer by several chemical pathways.

Hecht's study focused on a substance called PEITC. In rats, it blocks lung cancer caused by a substance called NNK that is found in tobacco smoke, he said.

SGA candidates geared for student voting today

By Michael Elliott
Collegian Staff

Elections to decide the offices of Student Government Association (SGA) President, Student Trustee and Area Government positions for academic year 1996-1997 are set to begin today.

Unlike elections at the state and federal level, which are often tainted by negative and deceptive campaigns, University of Massachusetts students have enjoyed a rather tame election season, with the candidates resonating similar themes of improving education and quality of life here in Amherst.

Maurice Caston and Larry Plano are the candidates for president. Sean Carter, Neil Collins and Joseph Fountain are candidates for student trustee. Caston and Carter, as well as Plano and Collins, both form unofficial tickets. Students vote for each office separately.

With the recent success of the Student Activities Trust Fund relief campaign, and continuing efforts to reduce the cost of attending this University, the candidates see their fellow student body as ripe for activism.

Elections will begin at 11:30 a.m. and continue through the lunch hour until 2 p.m. Voting will resume at 4:30 p.m. and stop at 7 p.m. Thursday will follow that same schedule. On-campus residents are required to vote in the Dining Commons closest to them to ensure students do not vote more than once. Central and Orchard Hill Residential Area students must vote in the Franklin Dining Common.

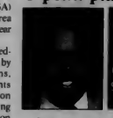
Northeast and Sylvan Residential Areas students are required in vote in the Worcester Dining Common.

Southwest Residential Area students have the option of voting in either the Hampshire or the Franklin Dining Common.

Students living in the Greek Area can vote in the Newman Center. Off-campus students will find their polling station in the Student Union Building, either by the entrance of the Hatch or in front of the Munchy Store.

The winning candidates will be announced Friday.

Caston runs with 3-point platform



Maurice Caston
Candidate for SGA President

Caston, a junior triple major in social thought and political economy, Afro-American studies and political science, has been active in the student government since his freshman year.

A strong believer in the power of SGA, Caston was inspired from the beginning of his tenure when students took control of the Admissions Building in response to the University's failure to reduce tuition and fees — a goal which, due to student pressure, was eventually met.

"[The SGA] was really keen on getting students involved," Caston said. "The push was to inform students."

Recognizing the importance of increased communication between students and the SGA said Caston, has been a guiding principle as both a Senator, and then as Chairman of the ways and means committee, public policy committee and ALANA caucus.

"I believe I can motivate people," Caston said, "by giving them the truth. We have to organize our efforts."

Caston is running on a three point platform which attempts to address student concerns with hikes in tuition and fees, food services and undergraduate advising programs.

"It's always been a constant battle to keep tuition and fees level, or lower," Caston said. "We need a new zeal — we need some new energy to go into the administration and state house to lobby for these issues."

Candidate critical of a closed SGA

Larry Plano
Candidate for SGA President

Plano, a junior legal studies and sociology double-major, said he understands why so many students are seemingly disillusioned with SGA.

"I don't like it sometimes how SGA sits up on a hill," without creating a productive dialogue with the students, Plano said.

A communication barrier has been erected between students, House Councils, Area Governments and SGA which have prevented everyone from collectively taking on the administration on important questions of debate, according to Plano.

Plano began his involvement with student government in the Field Residence Hall House Council, where he served as president. He said he found himself in a very disempowered position due to the lack of attention SGA paid to him.

"Being in that position of no power, I really wanted to stand up and get involved further," Plano said.

Following a similar experience in the Orchard Hill Residential Area Government, Plano said he realized that a the primary obstacle to effective student organizing was that of SGA itself, being that it did not effectively collaborate with students outside its ranks.

In SGA, Plano said, "you have to realize that you yourself are a student. You are not above the stu-

Finance Secretary runs for trustee

Sean Carter
Candidate for SGA Trustee

Carter, a junior economics, mathematics double-major, has been quietly rising through the ranks of student government since his freshman year, until this semester when he became a pivotal player in the SATF relief campaign.

Beginning as treasurer in the Orchard Hill Residential Area Government, Carter assisted into transforming it into "a pretty well functioning body" where students could fight for their interests in housing issues.

In January of 1995, Carter became the SGA Secretary of Finance, meaning that is was his responsibility to manage the multi-million dollar SATF.

Realizing that RSOs where consistently coming up short in their budget requests, Carter initiated a research project to better understand why the SATF was insufficient for the needs of the campus.

Carter said he identified four main areas where the administration was constricting student activities funds by mandating their expenditure on student services such as the Pioneer Valley Transit Authority, or taxing the SATF outright.

Carter's research served as the backbone for the 'Free Our Fee' RSO coalition, which recently sent a joint student- administration proposal to the Chancellor which would bring in $500,000 to the SATF over four years.

"I was committed to see this done because I thought it was ridiculous to see how much we were paying for," within the SATF that did not qualify as a student activity, said Carter.

Carters three-point platform deals with cost, food and advising; all identical to Caston's, his running mate, proposals.

On the Trustee level, Carter said he will have extra leverage, because the office has the authority to make expanded and quality advising by professors a requirement for earning tenure.

Carter's knowledge of University finances will, he said, allow him to work with other Trustees and state officials to ensure the University becomes more affordable.

"As trustee, I can sway votes to realize reductions in tuition and fees," said Carter.

Pressure effective, according to Collins

Neil Collins
Candidate for SGA Trustee

Collins, a sophomore industrial engineering major, says that politics is in his blood. The father of a publisher, Collins was exposed to politics through the lens of the media at a early age.

"I come from a different background from other candidates," Collins said, being that he has been largely removed from campus politics. "I'm able to be on the same level as the students."

Collins joined the SGA Senate his freshman year, and served on its finance committee. He said he immediately noticed that the interests of the majority of the student body were going unheard.

"My feeling is that everyone is promising way too much," Collins said.

Opening up what Collins perceives as a closed SGA will be on the top of his agenda if elected.

"We've got to make sure that students are informed," Collins said.

In addition, Collins said he will attack student concerns over food services and campus safety.

Collins endorses the idea of a "debit card" meal plan card to increase the number of options available students dining on-campus.

Finally, being especially pertinent to the Trustee position, Collins will seek to lower the cost of attending this University.

"Tuition and fees are just too high," Collins said.

Collins said that he understands what the administration and the Board of Trustees will respond to — pressure.

"You have to be able to interact on their level," Collins said. They will understand that students are upset. They will understand pressure."

Collins is critical of Caston and Carter, labeling them "SGA's hand picked candidates."

"[Plano and I] are trying to make ourselves a visible option," Collins said.

"If you want something done right, you do it yourself with the students backing," Collins said.

Fountain devoted to 'game' of politics

Joseph Fountain
Candidate for SGA Trustee

Fountain, a junior political science, history double-major is enthralled by what he refers to as "the game" of politics. With extensive experience for his age in city politics within his native Springfield, Fountain believes he has the experience to make him a effective leader as student trustee.

In 1993, he ran and lost in the election for the Springfield city council, in which he received 4,000 votes.

Through that, he was offered a job with former city councilor and current Springfield mayor Mike Albano.

That experience, Fountain said, introduced him to the complexities of politics and how one can be productive in such a environment.

"I met a lot of politicians," Fountain said, throughout the state and worked for many of them as advisors and campaign organizers.

In 1995, Fountain enrolled at the University of Massachusetts. He soon became involved in the Greenough Residence Hall House Council.

Fountain is basing his campaign on a multiplicity of issues which he feels best represents student concerns on this campus.

First on the list is food services, which Fountain said charges too much for what they provide students.

"I can't afford the meal plan," Fountain said.

Improved escort services and more call boxes are, in addition, major parts of Fountains platform. Safety in general, he said, will be a primary concern of his administration.

Fountain will seek ways to increase subsidies for child- care for undergraduates with children.

Finally, Fountain said he will seek ways to diversify the University to attract more students of color.

"Most of the people on this campus are white. Isn't something wrong with that?" he asked.

Fountain is confident that he has the know-how and political connections to make his name known on the Board and deliver for the students.

"I know without a doubt that I will be able to get money for this school," Fountain said.

Students offered big bucks by tix scalpers

By Dave Copeland
Collegian Staff

Students picking up tickets for the Final Four at the Curry Hicks Cage yesterday were greeted with more than the knowledge of where their seats will be. They were also confronted by ticket scalpers.

Wielding cellular phones and wads of cash, 10 to 12 scalpers surrounded each student as they emerged from the Cage, making offers before students knew where their seats were or if they had any. Scalpers were allegedly offering $1,000 to $3,500, depending on the location of the seats. According to Channel 22's 6 p.m. broadcast yesterday, the going rate for four tickets were rumored at $1,500.

"Some guy just put 3,500 bucks in my face," said Ryan Keenan, a sophomore sociology major. In the end, Keenan opted to keep his tickets. "If I can take my Dad to the game, it's worth something more than money."

Kevin Welch, a junior political science major, said he was offered $2,000 even before he actually knew if he had gotten picked in the lottery. "There was a friend of mine who was offered $5,000 for his tickets," Welch said, "and he sold them."

Tim Hourihan, who was distributing tickets in the ticket office, said the scalpers had not been a problem for the ticket office employees. "[The police] won't let them in here," he said. "But they've been a real problem for the students."

Hourihan added that the lone police officer assigned to the Cage could not do anything more than stand guard at the door of the ticket office unless she witnessed one of the illegal transactions.

The scalpers insisted that the longer students waited to sell their tickets, the less money they would receive. "I've been doing this for years," a scalper named Ron said. "Everybody in this business knows that once the schools get to New Jersey, the market goes down." Ron said UMass students had generally been reluctant to sell. "I've gotten a few, but not a whole bunch," he said.

Students received tickets if their name was selected in a lottery system that was used to distribute tickets. Hourihan said most of the lottery losers had been understanding.

"The students are real happy when they win, but they don't get real angry if they get here and find out they didn't get tickets," he said. There was a steady flow of students all afternoon to check to see if they had gotten tickets, according to Hourihan.

Two abortion activists indicted, could receive up to 45 years jail

By Joe Taylor
Associated Press

NEWPORT NEWS, Va. — Two anti-abortion activists were indicted on federal conspiracy and arson charges for fires at two Virginia abortion clinics.

Jennifer Sperle and Clark Martin, along with unidentified co-conspirators, dropped roadside flares and lighter fluid through a mail slot at a Newport News clinic, the indictment stated. In Norfolk, they ignited kerosene after breaking a window.

The fires caused minor damage to the abortion clinics.

The indictment stated that Sperle also tried to show others how to destroy clinics, including providing an underground how-to manual.

If convicted, Sperle and Martin each face up to 45 years in prison and $250,000 in fines.

A federal grand jury probe into the fires began Feb. 28. At least two anti-abortion activists were taken into custody for refusing to testify; one woman spent nearly a month in jail before she talked and was released Monday.

The woman, Rae Powell, said she told the grand jury that Sperle gave her a copy of the Army of God manual, an underground booklet that describes how to blow up abortion clinics.

Sperle, who moved last year from Norfolk to Wichita, Kan., was arrested in Wichita Tuesday, officials said. It was unknown if Martin was in custody. His attorney told authorities he would surrender.

"The good news here is that they got two indictments, which indicates that the Justice Department didn't just abandon its abortion violence investigation as some anti-abortionists had mistakenly claimed in January," said Eleanor Smeal, head of the Feminist Majority Foundation in Arlington. "It's encouraging that they could bring a conspiracy charge, because some anti-abortionists have been saying there is no conspiracy," she said.

For last relief from the nagging ache of taxes, we recommend TIAA-CREF SRAs. SRAs are tax-deferred annuities designed to help build additional assets—money that can help make the difference between living and living well after your working years are over.

Contributions to your SRAs are deducted from your salary on a pretax basis. That lowers your current taxable income, so you start saving on federal and, in most cases, state and local income taxes right away. What's more, any earnings on your SRAs are also tax deferred until you receive them as income. That can make a big difference in how painful your tax bill is every year.

As the nation's largest retirement system, based on assets under management, we offer a wide range of allocation choices—from the TIAA Traditional Annuity, which guarantees principal and interest (backed by the company's claims-paying ability), to TIAA-CREF's diversified variable annuity accounts. Dole blocks minimum wage vote

By David Espo
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — In a struggle drenched with presidential politics, Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole intervened Tuesday to block Democratic demands for an immediate vote on raising the minimum wage.

"On the day that Bob Dole locks up the Republican (presidential) nomination, he locks out working families who are looking for a very modest increase" in their paycheck, charged Democratic Sen. Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts.

Asked if he was aware that Democrats were marring Dole's anticipated triumph Tuesday night in the California presidential primary, Kennedy, (D–Mass.), told reporters, "We haven't lost sleep over it."

Dole charged Democrats were playing special interest politics with their maneuver to force a vote on a measure to raise the federal minimum wage from $4.25 to $5.15 in two annual increments of 45 cents.

"I assume with the AFL-CIO in town and their pledge of $35 million, this would be a fairly appropriate time to consider this measure," he said in a mocking reference to organized labor's decision Monday to back President Clinton's re-election and to raise $35 million to back the AFL-CIO's agenda in a the coming campaign.

The daylong struggle demonstrated that Dole has grasped a double-edged sword as he campaigns as his party's presidential nominee while retaining his post as Senate majority leader.

He hopes to benefit by shepherding measures to Clinton's desk, such as welfare reform, as well as by showcasing support for politically popular bills that are doomed either to veto or defeat in the Senate, such as a constitutional amendment to balance the budget.

On the other hand, he found himself on the defensive as Democrats used legislation to make additions to the nation's parks system as a vehicle for a vote on their proposal to raise the minimum wage. After hours of back-door consultations, the majority leader engineered a 97-0 vote in which Republicans joined Democrats

Caston said that as president, he will not only seek to improve the quality of food served at the University, but the dining options made available on the meal plan.

Caston said that he hopes to institue a "debit card" based meal plan, which charges students only for the amount they eat, and would further allow students to eat at any on–campus dining facility, such as People's Market and Earth Foods.

Finally, with advising, Caston said he would find ways to expand and improve the availability of faculty to undergraduate students. Current advising programs, he said, do not have the resources to sufficiently deal with the number of students in need of their services.

"Too many students don't even know who their advisor is," Caston said.

Plano said that he plans a to take on a wide range of issues, centering around fostering increased communication between SGA and other student groups.

Dealings with the administration, said Plano, would be considerably more rewarding for students assuming he can unify their voice through House Councils, Area Governments and SGA.

"The administration needs to see that I'm someone who is rallying that students to a position of power," Plano said.

In addition, Plano said he is concerned about the meal plan, conditions within the classrooms, town relations with the University and continuing SATF relief efforts.

As a off–campus student, Plano said he would take safety under special consideration.

Inmate sues NPR over refusal to broadcast commentaries

WASHINGTON — Death row inmate Mumia Abu-Jamal filed a $2 million lawsuit Tuesday against National Public Radio for refusing to broadcast his commentaries about life inside a maximum-security prison.

The series of commentaries, culled from taped interviews with Abu-Jamal at a Pennsylvania state prison, was pulled from the radio network's evening news program, "All Things Considered," on May 16, 1994, just hours before the first installment was to air.

Abu-Jamal said the action violated his constitutional right to free speech and amounted to censorship inspired by opposition from Senate Republican Leader Bob Dole of Kansas and from police officers.

"NPR caved into political pressure from Senator Dole and other opponents of Mr. Jamal's political perspective," said Debra Katz, an attorney for Abu-Jamal and the Prison Radio Project, which produced and recorded the commentaries.

NPR said it refused to air the tapes because of Abu-Jamal's role at the time as "the focal point of a highly polarized and politicized controversy" and because an appeal of his conviction was pending.

In response to the lawsuit, NPR said it was "troubled by this attempt to use the courts to dictate to an independent news organization what material it should broadcast."

Abu-Jamal, a former radio journalist, was sentenced to death for the 1991 murder of police officer Daniel Faulkner after Faulkner stopped Abu-Jamal's brother for driving the wrong way on a downtown Philadelphia street.

Supporters say Abu-Jamal was framed because he was a black activist who supported the radical MOVE organization and helped found Philadelphia's chapter of the Black Panther Party. An appeal alleging prosecutorial and judicial misconduct is pending before the state Supreme Court.

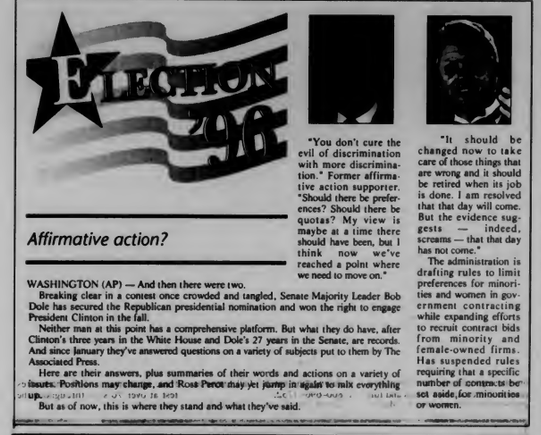
Abu-Jamal's lawsuit, filed in U.S. District Court in Washington, seeks $500,000 in compensatory damages and $1.5 million in punitive damages. It named as defendants Bruce Drake, NPR's managing editor, and William Buzenberg, vice president for news and information.

Katz said NPR had a special obligation to air diverse viewpoints because it receives public funding.

"They are really in the shoes of government and have an obligation to refrain from First Amendment censorship," Katz said.

The lawsuit also seeks return of the recordings, along with a court order that NPR broadcast the commentaries.

NPR said it aired a 17-minute documentary of the case on Aug. 19, 1995, with Abu-Jamal's perspective being one of many.



Affirmative action?

WASHINGTON (AP) — And then there were two.

Breaking clear in a contest once crowded and tangled, Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole has secured the Republican presidential nomination and won the right to engage President Clinton in the fall.

Neither man at this point has a comprehensive platform. But what they do have, after Clinton's three years in the White House and Dole's 27 years in the Senate, are records. And since January they've answered questions on a variety of subjects put to them by The Associated Press.

Here are their answers, plus summaries of their words and actions on a variety of issues. Positions may change, and Ross Perot may yet jump in again to mix everything up.

But as of now, this is where they stand and what they've said.

"You don't cure the evil of discrimination with more discrimination." Former affirmative action supporter. "Should there be preferences? Should there be quotas? My view is maybe at a time there should have been, but I think now we've reached a point where we need to move on."

"It should be changed now to take care of those things that are wrong and it should be retired when its job is done. I am resolved that that day will come. But the evidence suggests — indeed, screams — that that day has not come."

The administration is drafting rules to limit preferences for minorities and women in government contracting while expanding efforts to recruit contract bids from minority and female-owned firms. Has suspended rules requiring that a specific number of contracts be set aside for minorities or women.

Rating for the birds

Wendy Darling

Sometimes I think I should be rated R. Maybe even NC-17 or X.

The Birdcage is rated R, after all. That's right — the movie that's drawing in bigger audiences than any other movie in America is rated R. According to The Christian Science Monitor, the rating is based on the fact that the film "contains much material about homosexuality as well as nudity and vulgar language."

I wish I could say I didn't know what the ratings board was thinking when they slapped this film with an R, but, sadly, I know full well.

I saw this film a couple weekends ago and found myself giggling from start to finish. Gay men who own a night-club. Drag divas and a lip-syncing house-boy. Subtle digs at Bob Dole.

This really ought to be stopped, I bet the board was thinking. Can't have those degenerates in Hollywood exposing our young people to homosexual propaganda. They're going to get a warped view of the world!

If this was the real world, Armand and Albert would have AIDS and be hopping from bed to bed with their transsexual lovers and prostitutes. Their son would be a flaming fag. And, no one but no one makes fun of Bob Dole.

So give it an R-rating. Forget about the fact that the film really doesn't have more than maybe two swear words. No frontal nudity either, unless maybe you count the scene at the very beginning where one of the drag dancers takes off her top and flashes the audience with her bare (and noticeably flat) chest.

Nobody has sex in this film and, in fact, the subject of intercourse only comes up a couple of times in conversation. The discussion is neither explicit nor lengthy.

The Birdcage contains several sexual puns and innuendos, but probably not the kind that would permanently damage the average teenager — if they even pick up on them. As for the teenagers who get the jokes, they're probably beyond saving anyway. Let them see the movie — without their parents. Heaven forbid they see a funny movie with gays in it where gays actually have the fun, but if they want to go, why not?

There are no explosions in this movie. No guns, no knives, no big car chases, no people trapped in a burning office building being threatened by a madman. No, the only explosion in this movie is the sound of Hollywood getting it right, maybe for the first time.

Since I came out as bisexual almost three years ago, I have known a lot of gay, lesbian, bisexual and transgender people. I've lived on the 2 in 20 Floor, a UMass special interest residential program for GLBT students. I've been to every kind of queer event under the sun — dances, parades, national conferences, lectures. I've read a slew of books, seen a lot of videos and talked to a lot of people.

I've found queer culture everywhere. In Boston, on TV talk shows and even on sitcoms, on the radio, even in my hometown, where I catch the occasional rainbow bumper sticker. One place I never really got it was in films from Hollywood.

They just didn't do that kind of thing. You'd think they of all people would, but, nearly since the beginning, they haven't. Back in the old days, Hollywood censors would cut it out or filmmakers simply wouldn't put it in. No kissing, no hugging, hardly even a hint of anything "queer" going on.

Sure, there were the miserable, effeminate men who were so unhappy that they killed themselves. And then there were the psychopaths like Norman Bates who, it was hinted, were a little too fond of their mothers. And all those slightly odd next-door-neighbors and men who were forced to live with other men or the ones who had to dress like women. Nothing really out-loud, though, no main characters. Hollywood was silent.

In recent years, there has been movement. Every year there are a number of independent films about lesbians or gay men or transsexuals or bisexuals that are very good. They play in art houses mostly, though sometimes, like The Incredibly True Adventure of Two Girls in Love, they play in mainstream theaters. The major studios have also gotten into the game, and after a number of foul balls and bunts, they seem to have scored a home run.

The Birdcage gets it right. It's not about AIDS, it's not about politics, it's not about a custody battle, it's just a funny movie. Not that those themes can't be done anymore, just that there's never really been a movie featuring gays that was just, well, a movie.

In this case a movie that happens to be poking fun at the particular cultural intersection we're at here in America: conservative politicians and their followers versus a couple of gay men who have raised a happy, healthy son and are living it up in Florida.

Hollywood hasn't come all the way, however. If it had, the film wouldn't be rated R. Like the content of my mind and soul would be if people were rated. Though, as I said, maybe that'd be more like an NC-17 or an X.

Walking a thin line

Brad Davidson

We need to start addressing some of the real problems that exist at our University. We always hear and read about issues and concerns but we never truly tackle the problems. Some of the problems we already know. Tuition hikes, over crowded classes and housing rank amongst the top. However, there is one problem that I feel is the grandest of them all. A problem that administrators and student leaders fear to address. I like to call it "The Crosswalk."

As you drive down Massachusetts Avenue towards Boyden gymnasium you will encounter this deadly strip of pavement. It exists between Hampshire House and the top of the Southwest dormitories. It is part of the road, yet it stands alone. It is one with the pavement but somehow separated by yellow lines. Its independence represented by two signs featuring a walker and a blinking yellow light. One at each end of "The Crosswalk."

"The Crosswalk" has two common visitors, the walker and driver. Since the birth of "The Crosswalk," these two visitors have become fierce competitors. One might even describe them as enemies. These two enemies have had many battles throughout the years. It could be described as a war that will never end. Its victims are numerous and they have the battle scars to prove it.

Let me try to analyze the war to you, the war between walkers and drivers in "The Crosswalk." It is difficult to take sides because I have both walked and driven through the deadly zone. But in my spare time I just like to sit at the bus stop which lies adjacent to the all powerful pavement and observe the battles. Sometimes I can sit for hours and be entertained. I don't have to pay an admission price and I get to see better action then in a dozen pointless Die Hard movies.

Sometimes "The Crosswalk" will be full of people walking back and forth from class. All of a sudden I'll see a 1984 white Pontiac Trans Am with a Playboy air freshener and Slayer blasting out the speakers speeding down Mass. Ave at around 85MPH. Without any regard for the walkers, this master of the wheel doesn't slow down, instead he honks so everyone will clear the way for Mr. Cool. Men, women and children run for their lives but that's OK because I'm sure Mr. Cool made it to where he was going on time.

On the flip side we have the story of Rico Suave. Rico is the ultra-stud dude with the gel in his hair and the hippest clothing. He is usually wearing sunglasses, too much cologne and generally walks slow in "The Crosswalk" so everyone can admire his beauty.

As Rico Suave approaches the middle of the two yellow lines he is walking quickly, almost a light jog. In the short distance, Rico sees a car approaching. Mr. Suave reacts quick and runs to the start of "The Crosswalk" so he can cut the automobile off and reach his destination. The car stops but is not bothered because he sees Rico running and figures that it will only be a brief moment before he can drive through. However, the driver is wrong. Once Rico reaches the beginning of "The Crosswalk" his running quickly turns into a slow motion walk. After seventeen minutes Suave finally crosses and traffic can move once again. My advice to the driver would have been to simply run over Mr. Suave and keep on going.

"The Crosswalk" is a problem that will not go away by itself. The walkers and drivers need to unite as a community and battle it, instead of each other. Without unity walkers and drivers are powerless against its strength. If the two competitors and enemies don't take action soon they might both lose the war, the war against "The Crosswalk."

Udder madness

Marni E. Hellner

On Thursday afternoon I was reading the Associated Press wire looking for "March Madness" stories, when a story came over the satellite about a completely different type of madness — udder madness. Great Britain was experiencing an outbreak of "Mad Cow Disease."

My initial reaction was skepticism: I was sure the story was just a prank. Associated Press has been known to make up ridiculous stories and send them out over the wire, waiting to see which newspapers print it.

But the story wasn't a joke, it was frighteningly real.

Great British scientists revealed this week that 10 cases of Cruetzfeld–Jacob disease were found in British young people. CJ is a disease believed to be caused by eating beef infected with bovine spongiform encephalopathy, or "mad cow disease." CJ is the human version of mad cow disease, and is fatal.

Of the 10 diagnosed cases, eight people have already died and the other two are near death. There is no cure for the disease, which is a slow and painful way to die. According to Associated Press reports, "CJ disease is an incurable illness that gats holes in people's brains, and usually strikes people in their 60s. It afflicts just one in a million people."

Suddenly the children's rhyme, "The worms crawl in, the worms crawl out..." has a whole new meaning.

Scientists aren't quite sure where the disease originates, but they believe the current outbreak is the result of several cases of BSE in 1986. BSE appears to have an incubation period of up to 10 years. This means that people could have been infected as late as 1990. The 1986 cases have been attributed to cattle being feed sheep guts that were contaminated with another related disease called scrapie.

To recap for folks, humans are dying from CJ disease because they ate beef contaminated with BSE that had eaten sheep guts contaminated with scrapie. Funny, I never thought Scooby Doo's doggie nephew would be responsible for all that disease.

As word has spread about the diseases, countries around the world have stopped the import of British beef. A scare has spread across Europe, with thousands of people swearing off not only beef, but all meat. Some British government officials have stated they are considering slaughtering all 11 million head of British cattle and starting over to ensure their beef is free of BSE.

The price and sale of ostrich meat has risen sharply over the past few days. Restaurants and schools in England have generally stopped serving beef until further notice, with a couple of exceptions. The traditional "Beef Eater" restaurants and pubs are still serving beef, saying that the scare is nonsense.

At first, McDonald's handed out flyers to all their British customers, proclaiming all their meat passed 40 quality control checks, and was safe to eat. On Sunday, McDonald's stopped serving anything with beef until new beef could be imported. If those rumors from the '80s are true, the lack of beef isn't a really big deal because they serve a fine combination of rat and kangaroo.

Of course, Burger King had to wait until Monday to stop serving beef. They needed to prove they were better than McDonald's in one more way — the deadly way.

All this craziness has made me stop eating beef. I have actually sworn off almost all dead animal flesh for awhile to come. I have no desire for my obituary to read, "... she died from mad cow disease."

The government has stated that a case of BSE has never been reported in the United States, and they currently test cattle for the disease. If you choose to believe the government, Americans have no worries.

But the question still remains: Is this mad cow disease going to help people transition over to vegetarianism? Of course it will — soon people will be asking for their veggie burgers rare or well–done.

In any case, I won't be asking to have my burgers still mooing anymore — I'll be asking if it's tofu or barley.

It's all just udder madness to me.

Everybody has their thing

Brian Marchionni

It's lunch time, my favorite time of the day next to dinner time, and I'm having a great day. All aces. Aside from that whole "school" thing that I keep having to deal with, I couldn't be better. Then, without warning, the storm clouds roll in.

It was around 12:30 p.m., so things had gotten pretty busy at the DC. Therefore, it was necessary for me to enjoy my amorphous beef product in the company of a few strangers due to the lack of open seating. Not a problem. I'm an open, talkative person, and I'm perfectly capable of sitting amongst strangers and not saying a single word to them, as is the custom.

As I began the arduous task of eating my meal, I began to notice an immense slurping sound emanate from the mouth of one of my companions. Apparently this person had opted for the spaghetti meal at the DC. This person had also made the decision to focus every last bit of his energy into making more noise than a jet turbine while eating.

Hell (noun): Eating three meals a day with this guy. It was borderline funny how much noise this person put out. I'll wager that, even after a month of intense training in vocal projection, I would be unable to make this much noise with my food. As the meal progressed I felt my blood pressure creep upwards. In about five minutes I felt like I was standing on my head.

People, especially those whom I've shot, say I'm a little high strung. Whether or not these people are correct, mouth sounds do send me into a rage. Frankly, it's my thing. Mouth sounds drive me nuts: slurping, crunching, clicking... basically any sound generated by a person eating.

I've accepted this as a problem that I must deal with. Everybody has their tragic flaw; this guy had an eating problem. Anyway, who am I to get so angry at him just because he happens to frighten children when he eats?

The truth of the matter folks, is that everybody, high strung or not, has their thing. For me, it's mouth sounds. Others get annoyed when people tap. I know that I must cause at least two strokes a day with my burning need to constantly make the world my drum set. I know other people who absolutely cannot bear to hear another person breathe. Respiration, what a crime!

The list simply goes on and on: people reading over your shoulder, people answering the phone "Yyyello?," people who walk too slow, talk too slow or even drive too slow, people who give handshakes that make you feel like your grabbing the hand of a corpse, people who write recycled editorials that go nowhere, people who snap their gum, people who don't lift up the toilet seat, people who don't put down the toilet seat, people who don't use the toilet, etc., etc.

Where does it end? It ends with tolerance. It's something that we all, myself included, must do — tolerate others. It's no different from anything else folks. Different people, different attitudes, different feelings, different mouth sounds. True, there is a difference between a person being rude, and a person being their self; it's a fine line between them. Remember too, that for every quality you find annoying in someone else, there are many more such qualities to be found by looking in the mirror.

Perhaps the next time you entertain the idea of crossing that line, of walking over to that annoying kid who just won't stop tapping on the table and bludgeoning him with your Reuben sandwich, stop for a second, and listen to yourself breathe... annoying, huh?

Sean Carter for Student Trustee

My name is Sean Carter, and I am running for the position of Student Trustee. My runningmate, Maurice Caston, and I have been involved over the last three years in fostering student empowerment. I worked with student groups to help bring events to the campus by helping them find sources of money. Second, I have helped groups work together to produce effective legislation, most importantly, as the initiator of the Free Our Fee coalition, which with the help of dozens of students is on the verge of obtaining up to $500,000 for RSOs.

As your next Trustee I will continue to fight for student empowerment with Maurice Caston in three crucial areas. First, we will keep costs low. This means we will continue to pressure the administration in the areas of costs and access. Second, we will bring about a change in the meal plan structure. This change will allow you to eat when and where you want to. Third, we will make advising on this campus a priority. This will enable you to access your advisor when it's important to you and you will get quality advising.

Maurice and I have already begun to work upon these issues. We have the experience, the skills, and the leadership to make UMass a place where students' voices are heard.

Neil Collins for Student Trustee

Every year the SGA presents the University with its own pre–set, pre–approved, hand–picked set of candidates. Usually this scares the student population; in fact last year it was so bad the candidates were unopposed. This year the SGA even went as far as to try to pass a motion supporting Maurice and Sean for their respective positions before any of the candidates had their nomination signatures ratified.

Larry Plano and I plan to end this cycle. Now.

We are concerned with more than SAIF, unlike our opponents. Our platform consists solely of one thing: the students' voice, your voice. The trustee and president represent the student body as a whole. Your vote is your voice; voting for us will guarantee your voice is represented at every meeting we attend.

Does UMass need a change in the SGA?

We most definitely do. Many resolutions that are passed are not implemented due to a lack of leadership; there is often no follow–up to ensure the changes you want are enforced. Larry and I will provide that leadership and will fulfill every promise the SGA makes to you. On the 27th and 28th your voice will implement a change. It's time for one.

Tell us what you think. Let your voice be heard on election day.

Joseph Fountain for Student Trustee

Today is election day and it's important that you know what I stand for as a candidate for Student Trustee. Safety on campus is really important to me; so I will work toward more call boxes on campus and better escort services. I also want to work on an education program that prevents violence and a program for students trying to cope with being in this new environment.

Subsidizing child care is close to my heart. My sister wasn't able to go to college because she couldn't afford to get child care. I want to see to it that no student has to make that kind of decision. The meal plan is really expensive. I can't even afford it. There has to be a way to make it cheaper and that is what I will do, along with making the meals better tasting.

The most important thing for the Trustee to do is to bring money back to this campus and to make sure the students get heard by everyone in the administration. The first thing I'll do is call up President Bulger and meet with him, then make him come to the campus and speak to the SGA and the student body. With my salary I will set up book grants for students who show financial need. I will also personally raise $5000 for more book grants. As Student Trustee I'll get the job done. If you believe in what I say please give me your vote for Student Trustee.

DON'T I KNOW IT! IT ALL STARTS WHEN YOU MIS SOME SEEMINGLY INNOCENT QUOTA, BUT WHICH I HEAR AS AN ATTACK ON ME, YOU LITTLE CREEP.
THEN I GET DEFENSIVE AND RESPOND IN KIND, YOU STUPID WHINER.
THEN I START BOILING INSIDE AT THE PERCEIVED AFFRONT TO MY DIGNITY, AND WITHOUT WARNING, I EXPLODE IN ANGER.
YOU HEAR ME, JERKO?
IN THE FACE OF YOUR RAGE, I WITHDRAW EMOTIONALLY WHICH LEAVES ME SEETHING IN FRUSTRATION. OOH! I COULD JUST...!
WHICH GIVES ME A GREAT DEAL OF SADISTIC SATISFACTION, HEH-HEH
WHICH MAKES ME WANT TO SMASH YOU WITH SOME CRUEL REMARK, LIKE "YOU'D BE MORE SUCCESSFUL IF YOU WEREN'T SUCH A PATHETIC LOSER."
WHICH IN TURN MAKES ME WANT TO INFLICT SOME SORT OF VICIOUS INSULT ON YOU, SUCH AS POINTING OUT YOUR HUGE HONKER OF A NOSE.
AND SO TOGETHER WE WALLOW IN OUR SHARED MISERY OF HURT, BAD FAITH ILL WILL, AND LONELINESS.

DAMN WE'RE INSIGHTFUL.

Maurice Caston for SGA President

My name is Maurice Caston and I am running for Student Government President. We stand at the break of a new day full of opportunity and promise. Over the past three years we have witnessed great change within the Student Government, the University Administration and the town of Amherst. With all this change students cannot sit on the sidelines and watch as their rights are treaded upon. We must be actively involved in all levels of student life from house councils to the board of trustees.

Working with Sean Carter we will fight to keep out tuition and fees low and work to curb the cost of attending this University. We will work to improve the food services to allow students to get what they pay for. We will improve the advising services to allow students to maximize their UMass experience.

Maurice Caston as SGA president and Sean Carter as student trustee are the next level. We have the leadership, commitment and knowledge to create change. So vote for your voice Caston for SGA president and Carter for trustee.

Larry Plano for SGA President

Everyone here at UMass, students and employees, lives a part of their life here on this campus. It will be my duty as president of the SGA to confront all members of this community with issues and problems that are troubling them. I will not just focus on a couple of big issues, like SAFT relief, but I will tackle every problem on this campus from broken equipment in classrooms to poor food in the Dining Commons.

I refuse to be a leader who stands up in the SGA and is out of touch and reach with the members of this community, especially the students. I want to be the voice and ears of everyone's problems. I want everyone to feel comfortable with me and the SGA. I will maintain a solid communications structure so that everyone can tell and hear every issue.

Finally, I am one of two very qualified candidates for SGA president. However, I know that not just one person is going to better this campus, so I am prepared to work with everyone, and put myself on the line for every student's issues. Thank you, and I hope to see everyone at the polls.

Man of the house

C. Taylor Conner

The following are two scary prospects for your consideration: I didn't know the difference between the oven and the stove until I was a freshman in high school and I actually own a house now.

When you think about it, what's the big deal anyway with ovens and stoves? There's the hot part with four circles on top and then there's the hot part that made a legend out of Sylvia Plath. Much like their counterparts in human anatomy, most of these hot parts have names to distinguish them when everyone knows what they're for?

Nonetheless my ineptitude was abruptly uncovered one morning when I somehow managed to light the oven... er, stove on fire while preparing some of my much-coveted scrambled eggs (let's just say the Wesson's bottle loses a pint per liquefied chick). Believing I'd be the cow to start the Great Fire of Philadelphia, I ran into the bedroom of my peacefully slumbering mother, raving about how the oven was aflame.

Perhaps it was at this juncture that I realized the gravity of the situation presented by substituting the word "oven" for "stove" in a phrase followed by "on fire." In mathematical terms, it's... I'm not even going to try that — I'm a journalism major. In layman's terms, it's roughly the difference between Tom Jones' and Prince's versions of "Kiss."

But I digress.

One hysterical proclamation later, my mother was already out of the bedroom, in the kitchen and in control. Of course it took me a little while to get there since I couldn't help but admire the Warp Drive rainbow ass–streak she'd left behind as she jetted down the hallway. However I did get there just in time to see her put in place a saucepan lid over the "oven," thus extinguishing the looming chance of potential citywide disaster.

Needless to say she played Mr. Miyagi to my Daniel–son (originally portrayed by baby–faced wunderkind and vastly underappreciated talent Ralph Macchio) and straightened me out with a quickness. There would be no Reagoning out for me thereafter — I would be one of the select few to remember and share the secret of the stove/oven separation. And I could do that cool "Crane" move too the next time Johnny and the bad dojo crew messed with me.

Yet I fear no appliance or martial arts knowledge can save me from the responsibility that comes with being the mortgage servant of a home. Without a mother whose butt has the Enterprise stored away securely in case of emergencies, I might again be the victim of a pampered upbringing.

Surprisingly, I've managed so far. The lint filter is always clear before the next wash goes in. Aluminum foil and microwaves, though a vastly entertaining combination, should never cross paths. I figured out how to attach the vacuum accessories. A short time later I even learned how to use the vacuum.

But I still don't own a set of knives or a cutting board. Pots and pans, no matter how caked with whatever, go straight from the stove (wax on, wax off) to the dishwasher without so much as the sink as a middleman. And I have enough unrecycled newspapers in my garage to build my own tree. It's a learning process.

Why, just last week I found out what that handle on the toilet was for.

Budget woes

Sam McAfee

There has been much talk lately about the Student Activities Trust Fund (SATF). A coalition of Registered Student Organizations (RSOs) led by Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy (SCERA) recently presented demands to key figures in the school administration in an attempt to secure a source of increased funding for RSOs. Unfortunately, this approach lacks a larger perspective that can explain why the University is being financially squeezed.

For some time now the University of Massachusetts has operated at a net loss, receiving more funding from the state than is paid to the it as tuition. This process reflects the origin of UMass as a place where one can receive a quality education at an affordable price. In other words, UMass is a subsidy for us, where state funds are redistributed to the school in order to provide this service. All too often in the past, groups fighting for increased funding have tended to conceptualize UMass as existing in a vacuum. This perspective ignores national trends that have affected us in countless ways.

Since the early 1980s, mainstream folklore has painted government enterprises as inefficient wastes of tax dollars, and thus a target for financial restructuring. This ideology attempts to show privatization as a superior way of running operations like state schools, discarding the notion of UMass as a place for quality affordable education. If UMass were self–sufficient, either it would have to be downsized at a much faster rate, vastly decreasing the quality of service, or tuition would have to be increased sharply to match the cost of running the school, resulting in drastically reduced enrollment. In either case, self–sufficiency would destroy the ability of the University to provide for people who can't afford private school.

Educational restructuring is just one example in a flurry of attacks on the social fabric that By no means started with the 1994 Contract on America. In the past 15 years, corporations have responded to an increasingly competitive global market by attacking some of things that cut into their profits. As a result of their influence in government, they manage to pay few taxes, have few regulations and enjoy a steadily declining cost of labor. This then forces the government to borrow to make up for these tax breaks, shift the tax burden on to us, or cut funding for government programs.

Bringing this back to education, we must understand that the trend of increasingly sharp cuts in funding for UMass are a result of downsizing government programs like education, meaning increased tuition, crowded classrooms, overworked staff and faculty, and a quickly diminishing number of services available to students. This occurs in a context of a larger assault on us by corporations via their pressure on the government. All Gingrich and Dole are really doing is stepping on the gas.

What is necessary to combat this process? Answers will vary. However, I believe an important step is increasing the mass organizing of students around these issues. As you finish reading this editorial, students here and at other campuses are scrambling around, trying to gain support for a broad–based movement. They need your help and it is in your interest, indeed all of our interests, for you to get active.

Highway to hell

Tara MK Connelly

As I drove by the exit to the airport for the third time I wanted to scream. I watched the speedometer lurch from 80 to 120 m.p.h. and got no satisfaction from the deed. I felt like a Griswald trying to get left in London — I was pissed.

I had snapped off the radio 27 miles ago, my roommate Kristy sat beside me silently clutching the directions to the rental car place like a shield against my growing bad humor. Behind us sat my other housemates, Kerry and Kate, both equally non–vocal.

It was the last day of our hard–earned Spring Break, 10 days in a moderately sunny Florida. We had left Naples at 2:30 a.m. to make our plane in Orlando at 8:45 a.m. and I had been driving for a good four hours — on nothing. As I practiced breathing through my mouth (I heard it helped relieve stress) I recalled the days at Disney, Epcot, Sea World, Cocoa Beach and other fabulous exploits. In the midst of my positive thoughts I realized that as designated driver I was the one the took us to all these places and mixed it with the pride in getting everyone from "A" to "B" in one piece. I felt oddly sick to my stomach. On the road of life there are passengers and there are drivers. I just wanted a limo.

It's fun at first, a new car, a new area, friends, a tape deck and the heady feel of total freedom. But fun turns to frenzy after spending several hours on your feet and arriving at your vehicle to head for destinations unknown. You're tired, you're tense and the last thing you want to do is ride in a car. Anything and everything someone says sound like a sarcastic laden message. "Please change the station," barked out in clip syllables can only be answered by an equally sharp, "One minute — okay!?

You don't mean it, you might even regret it, but the little four door passport to freedom quickly turns into a confining metal box on wheel from hell. In fact we'd all get along swimmingly until we were in the car tired, hungry and at times, utterly lost.

I think I spent as much time in line at Disney and Epcot as I did driving. In fact what I will remember most about our trip will be the lines. Either the never–ending procession of people waiting for Space Mountain and the Alien Encounter, or the bright yellow kind that divides the flat, flat roads of Florida into charming lanes of one, two, three and four.

I don't know what it was — maybe the car was possessed (ever read Christine?). For instance, we spent what was agreeably one of the best days in Epcot only to want to rip each others heads off on the way to a hotel. Questions like: "Left?" "Right?" "Well, what does the damn map say!?" became cries for war. Surly is a mild adjective when describing our attitude. Actually, the only thing none of us seemed to lack was attitude and we pointed that out frequently to one another.

The ultimate breaking point came when we realized that we had five days left in our vacation and no place to stay. Sleep, or eat. Funds were depleting and enthusiasm had hit an all time low. I figure if we weren't all such law abiding citizens, someone would have been killed and we could have all safely plead insanity.

Spring Break was great, I'll admit that. We didn't mind when it rained and we were forced to don yellow rain ponchos with Mickey's head on the back. It was fun splashing in the puddles and watching the rest of the park's visitors run for cover. It was exhilarating and — oh yeah, we weren't in the car.

You will see pictures of us smiling at the beach, laughing in a hot tub and hamming it up in "Germany," but like many people who were forced to ride in close confines over break, please, please, please! don't ever mention The Car or I just might have to run your smart ass over.

"Three–thousand dollars." Excuse me?

Tim White

"Three thousand dollars is my top offer right now, but I'm still shopping."

As Rick was explaining how much he was selling his pair of Final Four tickets for, someone interrupted and told us they were selling their four tickets for $2,000 a pop.

Let me see, divide by 2, carry the one, yep, that's eight grand for four seats.

Rick, a senior at the University of Massachusetts, entered the lottery for tickets a few weeks ago and lucked out today at the Curry Hicks Cage. Apparently there were a couple of hundred people seeing if they were one of the approximately 400 students to receive a pair of tickets for the semi–finals and finals to the Big Dance at the Meadowlands.

Tickets sold for $70 each inside the Curry Hicks Cage, but the price jumped up once you stepped outside.

"There were guys swarming all around the Cage, this first guy offered me $2500, 'right now, cash,'" said Rick. "Then a guy five feet away with a cell phone confronted me and offered $3,000."

What about ethics, school spirit, all that stuff?

"Well, I couldn't believe a student would actually sell their tickets," said Rick. "Then someone offered me three grand."

Catherine lucked out even more, she sold one ticket and is still going to the game. There is one problem though...

"I have to sit with the guy," she said.

Originally the man who bought Catherine's ticket offered $750.

"He was a good guy," said Catherine. "He kept saying 'God bless you kids.'"

The guy had to leave to go to a bank, when he came back, he was so excited he tacked on another 50 bucks. Maybe it's worth it for him, first off, the tickets are second row seats and he has been a season ticket holder for four years.

Does she feel bad?

"I did at first because I felt like he was giving me his life savings," said Catherine. "But he was so willing to give me the $800, I thanked him, he said 'no, thank you.'"

Ken got his hands on a pair himself.

"I don't know whether I'm going to sell or go," he said. "It's a once in a lifetime chance, but I need the money."

He opted not to sell them on the spot, instead, he'll wait until Thursday to make his final decision, "they'll be more valuable by then anyway."

Is this unusual that people are scalping the tickets for so much money? This year is a little on the pricey side. Most likely because the arena is so small. The Continental Airlines Arena, which is hosting the game, only holds 18,500 fans.

Next year, all Final Four sites have to hold at least 30,000 people — enjoy the ride while it lasts.

"I'm going to Spain," said Catherine. "I'm going with no worries whatsoever."

Let's hope the people sitting in their seats, will be waving a maroon and white flag.

Sharon Stone succeeds; film sultry, suspenseful

By Laura Stack
Collegian Staff

DIABOLIQUE
Directed by Jerimiah Chechik with Sharon Stone, Isabella Adjani, Chazz Palmenteri
Playing at Hampshire Six

George Clouzot's 1955 classic Diabolique (also known as Les Diaboliques) about a tyrannical headmaster of a parochial all-boys school whose abused wife and mistress plot to murder him is revamped in Jerimiah Chechik's Diabolique.

Chechik's goal in remaking the French film was to spice up the original plot, and make it a bit more erotic — casting Sharon Stone, then, seems an obvious decision.

Stone slips back into her sultry, seductress stereotyped role, and succeeds — superbly. Drawing from her Basic Instinct, Sliver skills, Stone's sly mistress, Nicole, serves both as the character who holds the story together, and the film's only satisfying sub-plot.

It is no secret that Nicole is the headmaster's mistress. The small selection of teachers know, one Peeping Tom student knows and his wife even knows. In fact, the wife (played by Isabella Adjani) doesn't even care — she is closer to Nicole than to her abusive husband.

Chazz Palmenteri renders a chilling portrayal of the sadistic husband. Not only does he give his mistress a black eye after spending the night together, he is constantly demeaning and belittling his wife in front of the other teachers and students.

He also leaves his battered wife for dead when she collapses from heart problems, her fingertips within reach of her medicine bottle. Nicole, time and time again, must save her from Guy, until finally the two decide to break free.

Nicole poisons Guy's booze with sedatives, and his wife administers the drink. After they drug him, the two women drag his body into a bathtub, and drown him until his eyes roll back into his skull. The next day, the body is dumped in the school's pool, and the murderesses await discovery of the body.

One problem, though — the body never rises.

For the remainder of the film, the wife (who is supposed to be a former nun) lights candles and bites her nails, the anticipation almost giving her heart failure. She and Nicole, who once had an erotically close relationship laden with lesbian undertones, begin to suspect each other, and paranoia ensues.

Signs that Guy is still alive keep popping up to terrorize his wife. A private detective (played by Kathy Bates) confronts her in a coffee shop, and offers to help find her husband. Even though that is the last thing she wants, the supposed widow allows Bates to prowl around, making Nicole extremely tense.

The plot has enough twists to keep you guessing; however, this mystery simply isn't engaging enough to make you care. Adjani's talents extend to that of looking wide-eyed and worried for the entire film, while the superior Palimenteri is restricted to a very small role. The responsibility to carry the film falls on Stone's shoulders, which she handles diabolically, but she can't go it alone. With a plot that kills itself in the end, Chechik lets this one slip through his fingertips. C

Classy band brings space-age music to local club

By Mike Burke
Collegian Staff

Space-age bachelor pad music hits down tonight in Northampton as the hippest lounge stars around, Combustible Edison, take over the Iron Horse for a night of cocktails and fun. Dressed in tuxedos and evening dresses, the five piece band will show off their classy looks and sounds in tonight's show.

Led by the Millionaire on guitar and Miss Lily Banquette on vocals and drums, Combustible Edison formed out of the ashes of Christmas, an '80s Boston punk band. After they disbanded the two decided to change their musical slant towards the sounds of the 1950s and 1960s.

In 1991, the band first appeared on the scene as the Combustible Edison Heliotropic Oriental Mambo and Foxtrot Orchestra. The group shortened their name for obvious reason. Since then they have rode the wave of lounge music to the top, recently appearing on the soundtrack to Quentin Tarantino's film Four Rooms. Unfortunately their music was the only highlight to the dreadful motion picture.

Their music has captured the sounds of the 1950s and mixed it with the Hi-fi tunes of today. Their first two albums, L. Swinger and Schizophrenic were both released on Sub Pop and garnered rave reviews, propelling the band into the forefront of the cocktail movement.

In line with the band's image, the Iron Horse will feature an extended cocktail menu and the always intimate candlelight dinner option. Not a bad way to enjoy a swinging band.

Combustible Edison appears at the Iron Horse tonight at 7 p.m. Tickets are $8 and available at the door or in advance from the Northampton Box Office. Call the club at 584-7771 for more details.

Lightning burns new novel from bestselling author

By Seema Gangatirkar

DANIELLE STEEL
Lightning
Delacorte Press

Alexandra Parker is living a charmed life. She is a successful lawyer, with a husband who adores her and a kid that is just too cute for words. Then in a single moment, her life is shattered when she learns through a routine examination that she has breast cancer.

In Lightning, Danielle Steel, the bestselling author of cheesy romance novels, examines what happens when a person's life is changed in such a moment. In Alexandra's case, what follows is a doozy.

Alex's husband, Sam Parker, is a financial whiz kid, making millions of dollars wining and dining wealthy clients. He also has a phobia of diseases, after watching his mother die from cancer. As a result, Sam provides absolutely no emotional support and firmly refuses to believe that Alex is actually sick.

Alex is devastated when she discovers that Sam is cheating on her, with a seductive British ingenue named Daphne. As their marriage continues to deteriorate, Alex finds love and support in the arms of Brock Stevens, an associate in Alex's firm.

The turning point in the story comes when Sam gets into financial trouble and finds himself on trial for something that Steel never really makes clear. Alex is forced to choose between supporting him and being with Brock.

The problem with Lightning is that it's pretentious and superficial. Steel has a problem with repetition — she has the horrible habit of repeating everything, just in case the reader didn't get the point first ten times.

Despite the allegedly serious nature of the book, some of the dialogue and scenes are laughable. The characters, especially Brock and Alexandra, are just plain boring and don't stimulate any interest whatsoever. Daphne, Sam's mistress, while the stereotypical evil "other woman," is fortunately not cut out of the same cardboard as the other characters.

While Steel has never been known for the quality of her writing, Lightning is not even close to one of her better novels. The novel is hopelessly trivial and trite and it proves that old adage that lightning never strikes more than once is wrong. D

VALERIE MARTIN
Mary Reilly
Pocket Books

In Mary Reilly, Valerie Martin resurrects the life of a Victorian housemaid living in the house of a prominent scientist, namely Dr. Jekyll.

Mary Reilly is an observant servant, loyal and steadfast. She catches Dr. Jekyll's attention when he notices scars on her hands and neck. It's the first time anyone has really noticed Mary before and she feels flattered by the attention. At the same time, she is careful to keep the proper distance, in other words, mind her station in life.

Jekyll begins to confide in Mary and sends her on strange missions into London, missions that make Mary grow uneasy. As the story progresses, Mary frets over Dr. Jekyll's health and when he takes on an assistant of questionable nature, Edward Hyde, Mary begins to seriously fear for her beloved master.

Mary's tale is honest and clear. Her horror at Mr. Hyde and her disgust at the missions Dr. Jekyll sends her on emerge clearly from the pages. At the same time, like a good servant, Mary never questions at what she is told to do.

The story is told entirely in diary form. Martin, who found three volummes of Mary's diary, has kept it much to its original nature, including some idiosyncrasies found in Mary's writing. By not tampering with Mary's words, Martin has managed to capture the essence of a housemaid's existence and add another dimension to the strange tale of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde. B+

Russian Imperial palaces recreated in Jackson, Mississippi

By Eileen Loh
Associated Press

JACKSON, Miss. — It was 1941. Russians raced through the imperial palaces of Leningrad, frantically hauling armloads of priceless artwork to hide in dusty basements. Outside, Nazi guns shook the city.

Fifty-five years later, 616 of these priceless treasures— including gold, hand-tooled thrones, Alexander II's bronze coronation carriage, and the exquisitse five-inch Faberge Gatchina egg— are on display a world away in Mississippi, gleaming in exact replicas of the lavish palace rooms they once graced in the city that has reclaimed the name of St. Petersburg.

The six-month exhibit, "Palaces Of St. Petersburg: Russian Imperial Style" represents the largest exhibition ever in the United States of the history, romance and opulence of the lost czars and czarinas of Russia's Romanov period.

It sprang from a camaraderie between the people of Jackson and St. Petersburg, and from a desire to showcase Mississippi through its most elaborate cultural endeavor ever.

From the audio tour narrated by actor Morgan Freeman to the ornate wood parquet floors created in Russia and assembled at the Mississippi Arts Pavilion, no detail has been overlooked, said Jack Kyle, executive director of the exhibit's creator, the Mississippi Commission for International Cultural Exchange, Inc.

Among the treasures saved from Nazi looters are items— such as the enormous gold jewel-studded Bible of Empress Maria Fyodorovna— that have never before been on public display, even in Russia, Kyle said.

The idea for an exhibit that would capture the history, romance and wealth of Russian royalty can be traced to a 1993 visit to Mississippi by a Russian choir.

It was then that Pat Fordice, wife of Gov. Kirk Fordice, learned of the country's need for medical supplies and services. So Mrs. Fordice and pharmacist William L. Stevens formed the nonprofit organization Mississippians Reaching Out, which donated over $20 million in medical equipment and supplies to a St. Petersburg hospital.

Kyle said that in a show of gratitude, the people of St. Petersburg offered to loan the priceless items from the city's imperial palaces to Mississippi.

The $8.6 million cost of the exhibit makes it the most extensive cultural endeavor in the state's history, Kyle said. He said it would require ticket sales of 430,000 just to break even, but that the exhibit already had sold 150,000 before the doors officially opened last month.

Kyle, who organized Memphis' Wonders series exhibits — which included displays on Napoleon, Catherine the Great and Imperial Tombs of China— decided to focus the exhibit on the Russian imperial palaces, the official homes of czars and czarinas.

He chose five rooms from the great palaces encircling St. Petersburg: Peterhof, Catherine Palace, Gatchina and Pavlovsk, to be painstakingly re-created.

The master craftsmen hired to copy Paul I's Throne Room or Empress Maria Fyodorovna's Lantern Study are the artisans who labored to re-create the actual palaces, after the 900-day Nazi siege during World War II left them bombed-out and in near ruins.

"This is as accurate a reproduction as possible, short of getting on an airplane and flying to St. Petersburg and viewing those palaces in person," Kyle said.

Moldings in the baroque Portrait Hall and Blue Formal Sitting Room from Catherine Palace, the Yellow (Banquet) Hall from Peterhof, the Throne Room from Gatchina, and the Lantern Study from Pavlovsk Palace are cast from the palaces' actual moldings, Kyle said. The parquet floors are near-duplicates of the originals.

Everything else is genuine, he said, and were the personal possessions of the Russian royal families. That includes the various thrones belonging to the Russian royals; Alexander II's malachite desk set; the last czar Nicholas II's military uniform, which he wore to his wedding to Alexandra, and the Faberge' Gatchina Egg he presented to his mother, Dowager Empress Maria Fyodorovna; Catherine the Great's gold saddle and naval uniform dress; Paul I's priceless "Asia" and "Africa" tapestries; and Peter the Great's silver gilded drinking cups encrusted with garnets.

Everything in the exhibit had been removed from the palaces before the Nazis' deadly siege, which killed an estimated 800,000 in Leningrad.

"They literally heard guns going off outside the palace and were still taking things out. Many were put in trains and sent away to the Ural Mountains and Siberia. Others were taken inside St. Petersburg and stored in the basement of St. Isaac's Cathedral and the Hermitage Museum," Kyle said. "Now they're here."

in keeping the issue alive without addressing it.

On a party line vote of 50-43, Dole then closed the Senate until Wednesday.

Dole conceded that sooner or later, Democrats will get their vote. But "not today and not tomorrow and hopefully not this week," he said as the Senate spent much of the day in a series of legislative timeouts known as "quorum calls."

Democrats said otherwise, claiming they had engineered a vote for Thursday. Whatever the course of the issue this week, Democratic Leader Tom Daschle said the issue would be raised again and again as it reaches voters concerned about paychecks that don't keep pace with inflation. "We will continue to bring this us until we are satisfied that the Senate is on record," he said after the Senate had adjourned for the day.

Many Democrats believe there's political mileage to be gained from seeking an increase in the minimum wage, although many Republicans oppose it.

It's a sure-fire applause line for Clinton, who frequently raises it in terms of a family-values issue by suggesting that everyone talks about family values but the minimum wage is one place where politicians can put their money where their mouth is.

Braveheart wins Oscar for best picture, director

Mel Gibson & Thompson take statues in role reveral trend

By John Horn
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Role reversal was the rule at the Academy Awards, where an actor, Mel Gibson, won for directing, an actress, Emma Thompson, triumphed for screenwriting and rookies looked like pros.

Gibson's Braveheart won a leading five Oscars on Monday night, including best picture and director. Gibson also starred in the epic about a 13th-century Scottish patriot. Gibson, a plaid-vest flashing from between the lapels of his tuxedo, thanked writer Randall Wallace and producer Alan Ladd Jr. for bringing the script to a "fiscal imbecile."

"Now that I'm a bona fide director with a golden boy," Gibson said during his acceptance speech, "I suppose what I really want to do is act." Braveheart was only Gibson's second outing as a director, the first being The Man Without a Face in 1993. He follows a line of Oscar-winning actors-turned-directors: Robert Redford, Warren Beatty, Woody Allen, Kevin Costner.

Thompson, an on-screen acting force from Howards End and The Remains of the Day, won for her screenplay adaptation of the Jane Austen novel Sense and Sensibility — her first produced movie script.

And clearly, inexperience was no hindrance. Nicolas Cage took the best actor award for his role as a suicidal alcoholic in Leaving Las Vegas, his first appearance in the category. Mira Sorvino (Mighty Aphrodite) and Kevin Spacey (The Usual Suspects) collected Oscars for supporting actress and supporting actor in their first nominations.

Sorvino thanked her father as the veteran actor openly sobbed in the audience. "When you give me this award you honor my father, Paul Sorvino, who taught me everything I know about acting," she said.

Cage breezed to the podium and marveled that Leaving Las Vegas could be made for $5.5 million, and on 16mm film stock when most movies are made on 35mm or 70mm film.

Emma Thompson snags the Oscar for Best Screenplay with Sense and Sensibility.

"I know it's not hip to say it but I just love acting and I hope that there will be more encouragement for alternative movies where we can experiment and fast-forward into the future of acting," he said.

Nomination veteran Susan Sarandon won for best actress for Dead Man Walking, her first win in five tries.

In a three-hour, 36-minute show with Whoopi Goldberg as host, political comments and discussion of national Oscar pickets were kept to a minimum.

Goldberg quickly moved to defuse the Rev. Jesse Jackson's call to protest the show because there was only one black person out of 166 nominees.

Ridiculing Jackson's call for all Oscar participants to wear rainbow-colored ribbons to signify their concern, Goldberg quipped: "You don't ask a black woman to buy an expensive dress and then cover it with ribbons."

Not that the evening was without its highly charged moments. In a surprise appearance, paralyzed Superman actor Christopher Reeve came out onto the Oscar stage in his wheelchair and issued a call for more socially responsible movies.

Following a movie montage from such issue-driven films as Norma Rae, Philadelphia, Coming Home, and Thelma and Louise, Reeve urged Hollywood to continue making movies more centered in virtue than profits.

"Hollywood needs to do more," he said. "Let's continue to take risks. Let's tackle the issues. In many ways our film community can do it better than anyone else."

Kirk Douglas, his speech impaired by a recent stroke, received an honorary Oscar for "50 years as a creative and moral force in the making of motion picture community." He has never won an acting Oscar despite a remarkable film career that includes Spartacus, Lonely Are the Brave, Lust for Life and dozens of other films.

Oscars protest sees lukewarm support

By Jeff Meyer
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES— Though demonstrators marched at ABC stations across the country during the Oscars telecast, Jesse Jackson's campaign to protest Hollywood's treatment of minorities failed to ignite much on-camera fervor.

Few of the black celebrities at Monday night's Academy Awards ceremony wore the multicolored ribbons Jackson asked them to wear to show support for the protests.

Chief among those who didn't was host Whoopi Goldberg, who poked fun at Jackson in her monologue.

"Jesse Jackson asked me to wear a ribbon — I got it," she said. "But I had something I wanted to say to Jesse right here, but he's not watching, so why bother."

Dianne Houston, the only black person among the 166 Oscar nominees, wore the ribbon but defended the film industry, saying she stood as a tribute to Hollywood's changing attitude toward minorities.

"I'm wearing the ribbon because I am here to affirm change," said Houston, who failed to win for direction of a best live-action short film. "I'm here to affirm the fact that we're here, things are changing, things are beautiful, things are good."

Quincy Jones, the black producer of the Academy Awards show, also wore the ribbon but was critical of Jackson's tactics.

"This is not the place to do it," he said. "We've been fighting this battle for 35 years and a lot of people are helping and more and more people are understanding that there's room for everybody."

Jackson led about 75 marchers at the Hollywood studios of KABC. The civil rights activist called for demonstrations at ABC stations because the network broadcast the awards show.

"The message is... we have two talents: We have skilled talent, capable of producing, directing, acting and we have box office market strength," Jackson said.

About 200 people answered Jackson's call in Chicago, marching in bone-chilling temperatures in front of ABC-owned WLS. And about 40 people protested outside ABC's Detroit affiliate, WXYZ.

The Rev. James Holley, pastor of Detroit's Little Rock Baptist Church, said blacks make up a large segment of the movie-going public and they may boycott movies as part of the protest.

"The movies will be selected to show the motion picture industry the impact of our economics," Holley said. "Without our dollars, that will show just how much the worth of those pictures are."

Braves remain National team to beat

FRED HURLBRINK
Baseball

The National League is Brave territory, but in 1996 the Launching Pad will be under attack by some young guns. Perennial doormats Florida, New York and San Diego have all assembled talent that will enable them to compete for the coveted Wild Card. But still, the road to the World Series should go through Atlanta.

East Division

1. Atlanta Braves— How can they lose? Greg Maddux keeps getting better and Tom Glavine has become the most consistent lefty in the senior circuit. The Braves avoided a scare by re-signing power hitter extraordinaire Fred McGriff, and behind him they have an impressive corps of young stars in Chipper Jones, Javier Lopez and Ryan Klesko. Jeff Blauser will not repeat last season's grotesque display (.211, 12 HR, 31 RBI). The Braves will be tough to beat.

2. Florida Marlins— Hard to believe, but they have put together a solid team with all of Wayne Huizenga's money, and smart management: Jeff Conine, one of the most under- rated players in the game, anchors a strong outfield with Devon White in center and a healthy Gary Sheffield in right. Terry Pendleton is the cornerstone of an otherwise young infield with budding star Quilvio Veras at second base. They have a solid staff of hurlers to compliment a damaging offense.

T3. Montreal Expos— Felipe Alou will keep this team from falling any further, while his son Moises should rebound from a sub-par '95 campaign (.273, 14 HR, 58 RBI). The good news is that the cost-cutting has stopped, the bad news is that they don't have a whole lot of talent to cut. Rondell White could be the next great center fielder (.295, 13 HR, 57 RBI, 25 SB). Carlos Perez and Pedro Martinez are the building blocks of a shaky pitching staff. Rumors abound about Alou and Jeff Fassero going to the Red Sox.

T3. New York Mets— They aren't the worst team in the East anymore. They are however putting too much stock in a young and inexperienced pitching staff. They are a very talented bunch, led by Jason Isringhausen, but a lot can happen in a full major league season (Bill Pulsipher is already hurt). They have good power at the corners. Look for less Mets' jokes on Letterman.

5. Philadelphia Phillies— No speed. No pitching. No consistent power threats. Gregg Jefferies is the most talented player on this team that used to thrive on its strong personalities— now they just clash. Mark Whiten could be such a great player, but he doesn't want to be. The Phillies picked up Todd Zeile and Benito Santiago, and they are moving Darren Daulton to the outfield. Poor Jim Fregosi.

Central Division

1. Cincinnati Reds— Barry Larkin, reigning NL MVP, is the foundation of one of the most talented teams in baseball. He and Bret Boone provide outstanding up-the-middle offense/defense while Hal Morris provides a solid all-around first sacker. Reggie Sanders looks to emulate last year's monster numbers (.306, 28 HR, 99 RBI, 36 SB), but the rest of the outfield is a question. Better-than-average pitching top to bottom, with the hopeful return of a healthy Jose Rijo.

2. Houston Astros— Houston should re-name the Astrodome the B-Hive. Jeff Bagwell, Craig Biggio and Derek Bell are three of the brightest young stars in the majors. Sean Berry was jettisoned from Montreal and Brian Hunter is an emerging star. If the pitching is consistent, the 'Stros will be a force to reckon with.

T3. Chicago Cubs— Ryne Sandberg is back in the Windy City. He re-joins first baseman Mark Grace, the least talked about superstar in baseball, in a solid infield with Rey Sanchez and Dave Magadan. The Cubs' best asset is an amazingly talented outfield. Thirty-thirty man Sammy Sosa and Luis Gonzalez flank gold-glover Brian McRae. Jaime Navarro is the best of a suspect pitching corps.

T3. St. Louis Cardinals— Tony LaRussa has put together a strong team that may contend for a playoff berth. The only problem is that every one of LaRussa's additions (Ron Gant, Gary Gaetti, Royce Clayton, Mike Gallego, Luis Alicea, Andy Benes, Todd Stottlemeyer and Dennis Eckersley) have gigantic question marks after their names. Whether it's health, or age, or desire — or just talent, this team is one big '?'.

5. Pittsburgh Pirates— The Pirates are a distant fifth, as a matter of fact, they'll be the worst team in the majors. Jim Leyland is a good manager, and he understands the rebuilding process, but they've got a long way to go. Jay Bell is a terrific all-around shortstop. Orlando Merced is the best of an under-rated outfield. There is nobody worth mentioning on the mound in Three-Rivers.

West Division

1. Los Angeles Dodgers— Tommy Lasorda's All- International pitching staff is second only to the firing squad in Atlanta. Hideo Nomo and Ramon Martinez are the aces of a staff that may be joined by another far-eastern sensation, Chan Ho Park. The Dodgers are loaded with power in the persons of Mike Piazza, Eric Karros, Raul Mondesi and new-comer Mike Blowers. Greg Gagne vastly improves the Dodgers' defense.

2. San Diego Padres— Having Wally Joyner at first base plugs a lot of holes for Bruce Bochy's charges. He hits for average and power, and plays great defense, as does his mate across the diamond Ken Caminiti. The outfield has good speed and could be spectacular if Rickey Henderson stays healthy. Andy Ashby, Joey Hamilton and Trevor Hoffman have come into their own, and the pitching looks decent.

3. Colorado Rockies— Lack of pitching continues to plague Don Baylor's squad. His offense at Coors Field is phenomenal. They boast one of the most powerful corner duos in the majors with Andres Galarraga (1b) and Vinny Castilla (3b). Dante Bichette is back in right and Larry Walker will try center field. If Ellis Burks can play a full season at 100 percent, the outfield is incomparable. Catcher is a question along with the starting pitching.

4. San Francisco Giants— Matt Williams is in his prime and in a full season, could attack Maris's record. Barry Bonds is Barry Bonds, but the rest of the squad is very plain. Rod Beck is a solid closer who may be traded if the season turns sour. Not much in the way of pitching. Glenallen Hill has All-Star potential.

Women's Final Four looks awfully familiar

By Chuck Schoffner
Associated Press

It's a Final Four with the same four as last year.

After thousands of regular-season games, a slew of conference tournaments and 60 NCAA tournament games, the women's basketball season will end this weekend with a familiar Final Four.

Defending national champion Connecticut plays Tennessee and Georgia meets Stanford in the national semifinals Friday night at Charlotte, N.C., the only difference from 1995 being the way they are paired up.

A year ago in Minneapolis, Connecticut beat Stanford and Tennessee defeated Southeastern Conference rival Georgia before UConn prevailed in the finals 70-64.

So, whatever happened to parity? Women's coaches have been insisting their sport is opening up because there are more good teams, yet the Final Four has nothing but repeaters. This year's group has 21 Final Four appearances among them in 15 years of NCAA women's play, led by Tennessee with nine.

But Vanderbilt coach Jim Foster at least sees parity among the four.

"This year, all four teams in the finals are capable of winning," said Foster, whose team lost to Connecticut 67-57 in the Mideast Regional finals Monday night. "That's not usually the case. Some are just happy to be there.

"Last year, I was sure Connecticut would run the table. They had one of those dream seasons and everything broke right for them. This year, you could flip a coin."

Led by national player of the year Rebecca Lobo, Connecticut finished 35-0 last year. Lobo is now with the U.S. national team and Connecticut enters the Final Four at 34-3 but with a 20-game winning streak.

The Huskies lost to Louisiana Tech in their season opener and had January losses to Syracuse and Georgia. They also own a victory over Tennessee.

"People said we weren't the same team we used to be," said Jennifer Rizzotti, Connecticut's All-American guard. "Some people were picking Vanderbilt to go to the Final Four although we were the number one seed. So it just seems like we're always the underdog.

"When you look at it that way, it's really great to come out and make believers out of people."

Connecticut is trying to become the second school to win back-to-back titles. Southern Cal did it in 1983 and 1984. Tennessee (30-4) remains in the running for a fourth national championship after overcoming a 17-point deficit to beat Virginia 52-46 in the East Regional finals. Now the Lady Vols will have to overcome their Connecticut jinx.

Connecticut has beaten Tennessee three straight times, winning regular-season games each of the last two years in addition to last year's championship game. The Huskies won 59-53 in Knoxville this season.

Freshman forward Chamique Holdsclaw, a third-team All-American, leads Tennessee. The Lady Vols also have a steady, experienced backcourt with senior guards Latina Davis and Michelle Marciniak. The Georgia-Stanford game matches two teams loaded with high school All-Americans, not to mention a couple of current ones. Guard Saudia Roundtree of Georgia (27-4) is a first-team All-American and was absolutely brilliant in the Midwest Regional finals, scoring a career-high 37 points in a 90-76 victory over No. 1-ranked Louisiana Tech.

That performance wasn't lost on Stanford (29-2), which advanced with a 71-57 victory over Auburn.

"She was really fantastic," said Stanford's Kate Starbird, a second-team All-American. "I'm not going to say we're scared, but we're definitely concerned."

Georgia, which was ranked No. 1 for three weeks this season before finishing at No. 5, has plenty of talent to support Roundtree in La'Keshia Frett, Tracy Henderson and Kedra Holland. In fact, all five starters from last year's Final Four team are back. The Lady Bulldogs are averaging 87.3 points in four NCAA games. "I thought that we had transition. Well, they have transition plus," Stanford co-coach Amy Tucker said. "They're just an excellent basketball team."

UM optimistic about upcoming season

By Fred Hurlbrink, Jr.
Collegian Staff

Two new assistant coaches, a strong, young nucleus and tons of cautious optimism are the driving forces behind this spring's edition of the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team.

In their third season since reinstatement, the Minutewomen are gearing up to break out on to the regional scene after two lowly three-win seasons. Led on the field by tri-captains Erica Bryan, Trish DiBenedetto and Diane MacNeil, coach Francesca McClellan's squad looks to utilize speed, intensity and solid team defense to sneak up on opponents and earn respect.

First-year assistants Betsy Dinger and Jill Pearsall seem optimistic that their young UMass club will be able to turn things around this season.

"Last year we had six or seven one-goal games, but we couldn't come out on top of any of them," Dinger said. "So, we're hoping to turn some of those one-goal games into wins."

The keys to the Minutewoman resurgence will center around junior defender Bryan and an attacking team defensive scheme. Sophomore Amy Leder and freshman Melissa Anderson will be looked upon to contribute solid minutes and slow down opposing offenses in front of veteran net-minder, DiBenedetto.

Behind a young, but talented defense, the third-year starter will be heavily relied on to continue performing consistently in the UMass net.

The Massachusetts offense this season is built on speed. Freshman Laura Korutz should be contributing immediately.

"[Laura]'s slippery, she's short and quick. She has equally strong left and right-handed shots," Dinger said. "It's kind of hard to keep up with her."

Junior Stephanie Walsh and sophomore Jen Bowen, the two top Massachusetts snipers, will anchor the offensive corps relieved by sophomore attacker Kim Weaver, the first Minutewoman off the bench.

UMass was supposed to host Harvard in its first action of the season on March 14, but the contest was postponed until later in the season. The Minutewomen's second match of the season, a home date against Brown on March 23 was played, but Totman Field wasn't ready for action so the game was moved to Brown Stadium on the Bears' campus in Providence, R.I.

The Minutewomen started off strong, keeping the match competitive early and stunning the host Bears. Brown coach Carolan Norris called a quick timeout. Consequently her squad dominated the rest of the match, winning going away, 14–3.

"We could not wait to play. We came out and played UMass defense. But [after the timeout], they really took it to us. We got taken out of our game," Dinger said.

The coaching staff was able to take a few positives from the Minutewomen's thrashing by the Bears. They came out playing strong defense, and in the second half, UMass established a patient, attacking offense.

These are things that Massachusetts will have to carry over to its game against Yale this afternoon, and expand on for the remainder of the season.

White Sox drop Boston in extra innings

White Sox 4, Red Sox 3, 10 innings

SARASOTA, Fla. (AP) — Norberto Martin singled in the winning run with one out in the 10th inning Tuesday as the Chicago White Sox beat the Boston Red Sox 4-3.

Olmedo Saenz and Robin Ventura opened the 10th with singles off Joe Hudson. One out later, Martin lined a single to left.

Al Levine pitched a hitless 10th for the victory.

A crowd of 7,199, the largest of the spring at Ed Smith Stadium, watched what might have been the White Sox's final game in Sarasota.

The team is interested in moving its spring training headquarters to Tucson, Ariz., a two-hour drive from the winter home of owner Jerry Reinsdorf. But a move, if it is made, probably would not take place until 1998.

With Chicago trailing 3-2 in the ninth, Lyle Mouton tied the score with a two-out, RBI single off Heath Slocumb.

John Valentin, Mo Vaughn and Jose Canseco singled in the eighth off Bill Simas. Right fielder Kerry Valrie fielded Canseco's hit and threw home in plenty of time to get Valentin. But the ball eluded catcher Scott Vollmer to make it 3-2. No error was ruled on the play.

Boston starter Aaron Sele allowed two runs and six hits in seven innings.

Wil Cordero and Vaughn had run-scoring singles to put the Red Sox ahead 2-0 in the third. Ventura tied the game with a two-run double in the bottom half.

Chicago's Alex Fernandez, in his final tuneup before Sunday night's season opener in Seattle, allowed two runs and eight hits in 6 2-3 innings, striking out five and walking one.

Marlins 4, Indians 3

MELBOURNE, Fla. (AP) — Jeff Conine hit a go-ahead double in a three-run sixth inning and Terry Pendleton saved a run with a great defensive play in the eighth as the Florida Marlins beat the Cleveland Indians 4-3 Tuesday.

With Cleveland leading 2-0 in the sixth, Florida went ahead on a two-run single by Gary Sheffield, who scored on a double by Conine, who was hitting just .163 coming in. Kurt Abbott tripled in the eighth and stole home when Jesus Tavarez missed a bunt.

Cleveland pulled within a run in the eighth and had runners on first and third when Jim Thome hit a hard shot toward third base. Pendleton back-handed the ball and made a long throw in the dirt to Greg Colbrunn, who made a quick scoop to get the final out. Chris Hammond got the win, allowing two runs and six hits in six innings. David Weathers and Robb Nen followed, and Alejandro Pena got a save with a perfect ninth. Pena hasn't allowed a hit in eight shutout innings this spring.

Charles Nagy was the loser, giving up three runs and five hits in 5 1-3 innings with four strikeouts and one walk.

Expos 4, Braves 2

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) - Moises Alou doubled in a run and Sherman Obando singled home another in the first inning Tuesday as the Montreal Expos beat the Atlanta Braves 4-2.

Rheal Cormier allowed two runs and seven hits in five innings for the Expos. Jason Schmidt gave up three runs and four hits in six innings for the Braves.

Montreal added a run in the third on an RBI groundout by Rondell White.

The Braves scored twice off Cormier in the bottom half after Eduardo Perez led off with a double and took third on a single by Marquis Grissom. Perez scored on an RBI grounder by Jeff Blauser that third baseman Shane Andrews misplayed for an error. Fred McGriff followed with an RBI single.

Cliff Floyd had an run-scoring groundout in the seventh.

Mets 5, Royals 1

HAINES CITY, Fla. (AP) - Butch Huskey tied a Mets spring training record with his eighth home run, and New York beat the Kansas City Royals 5-1 Tuesday.

Huskey, the International League's MVP last season, tied the record set by Dave Kingman in 1975 and matched by Kingman two years later.

Huskey homered in the eighth off Rusty Meacham after Rey Ordonez's RBI double. Jason Johnson, who went 4-for-4 with a pair of doubles to raise his average to .412, had singled to lead off the inning and scored on Ordonez' double.

Huskey, who also singled in the second, has hit safely in 12 of 13 games for .489 average with 13 runs scored and 13 RBIs. He has homered in five of his past nine games.

Kansas City, which has lost four straight and 12 of 18, scored its only run in the second when Johnny Damon doubled and came home on Michael Tucker's single.

Royals starter Tim Belcher pitched four scoreless innings before giving up doubles to ex-Royal Brent Mayne, Chris Jones and Lance Johnson in a two-run fifth.

Robert Person pitched four scoreless innings, striking out five, and was the winner.

Astros 4, Cardinals 2

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. (AP) — An error by catcher Pat Borders allowed Houston to score three unearned runs Tuesday as the Astros beat the St. Louis Cardinals 4-2.

Trailing 1-0 in the fourth, Houston loaded the bases with one out on consecutive singles by Rick Wilkins, Mike Simms and James Mouton.

St. Louis starter Tom Urbani, who escaped a bases-loaded situation in the third, induced Ricky Gutierrez to hit a potential double-play ball back to the mound. But Borders dropped the throw to the plate, allowing Wilkins to score.

Houston pitcher Darryl Kile followed with a sacrifice fly to score Simms with the second run. John Carneglosi singled to drive in Mouton with the game-winner.

Simms gave the Astros an insurance run with a leadoff homer against T.J. Mathews in the sixth.

St. Louis scored its first run in the second. John Mabry drew a two-out walk from Kile and reached second on an infield hit by Borders. Royce Clayton's opposite-field single allowed Mabry to score.

Mabry doubled to lead off the seventh and scored on a two-out double by Willie McGee. Mabry has seven doubles in eight games.

Dodgers 9, Orioles 8

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — Tom Prince drew a bases-loaded walk off Jesse Orosco in the 10th inning as the Los Angeles Dodgers overcame four errors to beat the Baltimore Orioles 9-8 Tuesday. The Orioles had rallied to tie the game with three runs in the ninth, courtesy of two errors. It was Baltimore's fifth loss in six games, including two to the Dodgers.

Prince, a non-roster catcher, forced in the go-ahead run by taking a high 3-2 pitch with two outs.

Los Angeles starter Tom Candiotti allowed three runs — two earned — and six hits in five innings. The right-handed knuckleballer walked three and struck out five.

B.J. Surhoff went 2-for-5 with three RBIs for Baltimore and Jeffrey Hammonds had two hits, including a two-run double. Baltimore led 3-1 before the Dodgers scored four runs in the third off Kent Mercker. Mike Blowers hit an RBI single, Billy Ashley followed with a two-run double and Todd Hollandsworth capped the uprising with a run-scoring single.

After the Orioles cut the gap to 6-5, the Dodgers scored two in the eighth. But Baltimore forced extra innings with its rally against Todd Worrell, who threw wildly to first on an attempted pickoff.

the fourth.

In the top of the seventh with the Eagles leading 5–4, Dagliere stepped up to the plate to lead off the inning. Ahead in the count 3–1, he took John Pilato's pitch over the wall in right field for a solo home-run. The shot tied the game at five apiece.

"The homerun was just an accident," Dagliere said. "The pitcher made a mistake and I was just looking to hit the ball hard."

The score remained Knotted at five until the UMass batters stepped up in the top of the ninth. Dagliere led off the frame, taking his base on a walk. Justin Kelly lined a shot into the gap in right center sending Dagliere to third. With Nate Murphy at the plate, BC pitcher Mark Wainwright threw a passed ball, which brought Dagliere home, scoring the winning run. UMass would need no other scoring, holding on for a 6–5 decision.

"I was just looking to swing the bat," Dagliere said. "They were pitching me away, so I just took the walk and got the run after the passed ball."

Defensively Dagliere was almost too much for the Eagles to handle. In the bottom of the second inning, BC rightfielder Kevin Penwell and shortstop Eric Olsen were forced out at first when they grounded the ball in Dagliere's direction.

The Eagles collected their first two outs of the third when centerfielder Brendan Levesque and second baseman Torrance McNeil each lined the ball to Dagliere.

In the sixth Levesque again ran into Dagliere, chopping the ball to him, which resulted in the force at first. In the seventh frame, BC first baseman Brian Sankey grounded the ball to Dagliere, resulting in an out. Later that same inning Dagliere was part of a 1–4–3 double play to end the inning.

"I felt very comfortable today," Dagliere said. "I seemed to loosen up a bit. I was relaxed, more relaxed out there."

Dagliere and the Minutemen will face Holy Cross today at 3 p.m. at Fitton Field.

"We have to play hard every game," Dagliere said. "We should have buried that team. We have to play our baseball."

Women's tennis to take court today vs. UConn

By Mike Corey
Collegian Staff

With over a month off to train and prepare for the bulk of the Spring season, the Massachusetts women's tennis team will take back to the courts today at 2 p.m. to take on Connecticut in Storrs.

The Minutewomen will be looking to improve on their 12–1 record which they have compiled since the fall season. Their latest series of victories was back during the weekend of Feb. 23–25 in Hamilton, N.Y. where they defeated Vermont 5–1, Bucknell 5–0 and Colgate 5–2.

This will be their first match in over a month against a Connecticut team in which they handily defeated over the Fall, 9–0.

"They will give us a better match this time," UMass coach Judy Dixon said. "They've improved but so have we. So I hope we can continue to show that we can play really good tennis and we continue to knock on the door of a national ranking."

The Minutewomen spent Spring Break in Florida training five hours a day and playing challenge matches against their teammates. They only played one match for practice against another team, a junior college in Florida which they destroyed.

"Every year we go down to Florida and every year we come back much improved," Dixon said. "I think we increased our intensity and concentration. We have better control and feel for the ball now where before we were hitting it too hard and over-adjusting."

The Huskies will come into today's match with an overall record of 2–3 this spring Sarah Rahn is Connecticut's No. 1 seeded player to look out for. She is undefeated through every match she's played this season. For the doubles matches Rahn teams up with No. 2 singles player Melanie Adinolfi, which has been a deadly combination as they have won two out of three matches — the two wins by shutouts of 8–0.

Over spring break UConn took a road trip down to South Carolina where the Huskies played a series of matches coming up with two victories against Kutztown 7–0 and Millersville 5–2, to bring their overall spring record up to 2– 3.

UMass' lineup is now injury-free as freshman Jackie Braunstein has recovered from shin splints and everyone else is set to go.

The Minutewomen have only surrendered three total points in their matches so far this spring and they stand at 3–0 from those series of matches in late February.

"Our players feel much more confident," Dixon said. "They've worked very hard and I feel we're really ready."

After today the Minutewomen's next scheduled match will be on April 2 when they will take on Amherst College.

Alomar wants another ring, not another losing season

By David Ginsburg
Associated Press

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. — Last winter, when it came time for Roberto Alomar to decide his future in baseball, he figured he could either be the best player on a bad team or one of several exceptional players on a contending team.

It wasn't too difficult a decision. Goodbye, Toronto. Hello, Baltimore Orioles.

"My main goal is to get into another World Series, and that wasn't going to happen anytime soon in Toronto," Alomar said. So why not the New York Yankees?

They were one of the teams I was looking at to see if they wanted my services, but they didn't really make an effort," Alomar said. "I think they were too interested in getting David Cone." Baltimore also was in the running for Cone, but on the same day the Yankees signed Cone, the Orioles acquired Alomar.

Baltimore added several notable free agents during the offseason and several more via trades, but manager Davey Johnson has no doubt about which newcomer will have the biggest impact.

"Roberto Alomar was the most important pickup as far as I was concerned, no question about it, and I'm not saying that because I used to play there," Johnson said.

Johnson, a former second baseman with Baltimore, would have been delighted to accomplish half the things second baseman Alomar has in eight seasons with San Diego and Toronto.

Alomar, 28, has won five Gold Gloves and has a lifetime .314 batting average. His 45 stolen bases last season were 19 more than Oriole-leader Brady Anderson and nearly half Baltimore's total of 92.

Alomar was revered in Toronto, where he helped the Blue Jays win two world championships. But the team began to deteriorate in 1994 and Alomar wasn't in the mood to stick around while the Blue Jays were stuck in a rebuilding mode.

"I had fun there. I gave them five good years and we played some good baseball," Alomar said. "I appreciate all the things they did for me and I hope they appreciate what I did for them."

Last season Alomar was the only Blue Jay to appear in the All-Star Game — his sixth consecutive appearance — and the only Toronto player to hit over .300. Along the way he played in 104 errorless games and had a career-best 19-game hitting streak. Alomar had no interest in becoming the marquee player and leader of the Blue Jays, and was particularly disdainful of the responsibility that came with the role.

Bennett who gave up two runs before Penwell returned to the plate and flew out to Murphy in centerfield, with the score at the end of five innings 5-4 Boston College.

Shortstop Muchie Dagliere stepped up to the plate to lead off the inning by smacking a homer out of the park to knot the game at five.

The game would be decided in the ninth and final inning when the Eagles pulled Pilato for senior Mark Wainwright, but the seasoned southpaw couldn't silence the Minutemen offense. He kicked off the final inning by walking Dagliere and dropping a single to the rightcenter-field gap by Kelly. When Eagles catcher Jeff Waldron dropped a pitch to Murphy, Dagliere took to home on the passed ball tallying the final and game-winning run for the Minutemen.

"We are a much better team than we showed," Massachusetts coach Mike Stone said. "I don't want to take anything away from Boston College because they came from behind but when we're up 4-0, we have to put people away."

and to give them an opportunity."

The Minutemen return to action on Saturday for their home opener at Richard F. Garber Field at 3 p.m. The Minutemen will face a tough Army squad that is ranked No. 13 nationally and hopes to ruin the UMass homecoming.

Glass said that the team needs a strong game to jump-start the season.

"We need a good game with a full 35-man effort," he said.

The Army game is the start of a three-game home stand in which the Minutemen will also face No. 9 Duke and New Hampshire.

front of Eagle netminder Jonathan Leuchs, he slipped a shot through the five-hole for UMass' 14th goal of the game and his first of the season.

Leuchs was the second Eagle netminder of the day, after Mark Mulvoy was relieved after giving up four goals on as many Minuteman shots. Their counterpart Kasselakis had a much better day. Not only did he make several point blank saves on BC attacker shots, but he also ranged out of his crease to keep Eagle opportunities from materializing.

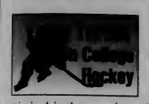
Michigan in Final 4 on Legg–endary goal

After last year's NCAA semifinals, Michigan's Mike Legg was in desperate need of redemption. Legg had been victimized in the second overtime of the Wolverines game against Maine by a prone Blair Allison in what ranks as one of the most phenomenal saves in NCAA tournament history.



Later, in the third overtime, it was Legg who allowed the Black Bears' Dan Shermerhorn to slip free in front of the net to score the game-winning goal in the longest game in NCAA tournament history.

Legg has once again carved a niche for himself in NCAA history, but a far more positive one. In Sunday night's NCAA West regional semifinal against Minnesota, Legg scored a goal that has already been replayed more times than just about any goal since Bobby Orr's dramatic 1970 Stanley Cup clincher in overtime.

The Gophers had Michigan's forwards well covered as Legg stood behind Minnesota goaltender Steve DeBus on a power play. Rather than execute a standard wrap-around, Legg dug deep into his bag of tricks, and produced an astounding move that, according to ESPN's Keith Olberman, represented "the most amazing goal in college hockey history— we're not exaggerating."

Legg, a right–handed shot, flipped the puck onto his stick blade, and lifted it up to shoulder level. Legg took a couple of strides to the left of the net, and deposited the puck over the shoulder of a stunned DeBus.

This sort of move, something generally reserved for the end of a practice, was one that would likely make any lacrosse All–American proud.

"I tried it every day in practice a couple of hundred times, but I had never seen it in a game," Legg said of his unique goal. "I just figured I'd give it a shot."

Legg credited the inspiration behind the play to Bill Armstrong, a Western Michigan alum, who now plays with the Detroit Vipers of the International Hockey League.

Although he has never played lacrosse at the post–game press conference, Legg confessed that he had never played, but teammate Bill Muckalt had lacrosse in his background.

"I have, and I have never scored a goal like that," he said.

"He did some king of clinic down there," usually reserved Gopher coach Doug Woog said. "It was kind of spectacular."

"He told me he wanted to do it once before he graduated and score a goal with it," his father Chuck Legg said.

While some were aware that Legg was fond of practicing the move, few could have ever anticipated seeing it in what at that point was a tied NCAA quarterfinal with a trip to the Final Four at stake. What the befuddled masses saw should claim next year's Hockey Play of the Year ESPY award.

• A tremendous tip of the cap goes to Providence College coach Paul Pooley, for a stellar run through the Hockey East tournament at the FleetCenter and a NCAA birth.

Two years ago Pooley inherited a 14–19–3 team from the ousted Mike McShane that had an outlook nearly as dismal as their pinstriped uniforms, some of the ugliest hockey sweaters since the Vancouver Canucks dropped their hideous golden jerseys with the "V" design in the early '80s.

Pooley learned well as an assistant for head coach Jeff Jackson on Lake Superior State's 1992 and 1994 national championship squads. This knowledge is showing up in two consecutive brilliant playoff runs by the

COURTESY PROVIDENCE MEDIA RELATIONS
Paul Pooley

Friars.

The Friars were taught the New Jersey Devils neutral–zone trap, and a defensively–focused system that requires immense levels of discipline to execute. Both the tactics and mental determination of the system require a phenomenal coach to properly execute with a college team.

Pooley has done that and more. Last year PC only lost two of its final 10 games as the sixth–seeded Friars marched to the Hockey East championship game, where they were edged by Boston University 3–2 in the final college game ever played at the Boston Garden.

Another aspect of Pooley's coaching work is his team's tendency to peak at just the right time. Last year the Friars caught fire at the end of the season, and this year they ran over No. 1 BU and a determined Maine team at the FleetCenter to take the Hockey East crown. This was the school's first title since 1985 and it's the first time anyone other than BU or Maine has won since 1990.

A fine example of Pooley's coaching talents has been the tremendous improvement of junior netminder Dan Dennis, who went from being passed over by some recruiters in Nova Scotia, to his well–deserved All–Hockey East selection earlier this month.

Compliments for Pooley's work gush from nearly all associated with Hockey East.

"His team has played very well at the end of the year," Massachusetts coach Joe Mallen said. "That's important and that's one thing you have to give him credit for. He had to take McShane's players and get them to play his way, and play hard through the playoffs."

"A lot of people underestimate coach Pooley's abilities," Shermerhorn said on the eve of Maine's match–up with PC for the Hockey East title. "He coached Lake State which has been big at tournament time for many years. They surprise a lot of guys at playoff time because he knows how to get the most from his guys at the right time. They play hard every night and teams have to work hard to beat them."

• The Friars will not be joining the Wolverines in the Final Four this weekend. Michigan will have some painful losses to avenge this weekend. The Wolverines have reached the Final Four three of the past four years, and each of the past three years have been eliminated in overtime. Michigan has won the most titles of any team, but none since 1964.

Although they have been hot down the stretch, a major stumbling block lies before the Maize and Blue as they will face defending champion BU in the second semifinal, tomorrow night at 8 p.m. on the Deuce, from Cincinnati's Riverfront Coliseum.

In a situation similar to the basketball Final Four or the NFL, the winner of this final should return from the Queen City with the coveted title. Just as the Super Bowl is an after–thought to the annual Dallas–San Francisco winner, and Monday night will be a relative cake walk for either UMass or Kentucky, Saturday afternoon's game against the Colorado College–Vermont winner will be a breeze after tomorrow's battle.

• Minnesota's Brian Bonin is the odds–on favorite to win the Hobey Baker award as college hockey's player of the year, which will be announced at a public gathering at the Hyatt Regency in Cincinnati's Ballroom on Friday. Hockey is a more community focused sport than any other, as evidenced by the overwhelming out–pouring of support for the paralyzed Travis Roy. This public awarding of the trophy has been a Final Four weekend staple for the past few years, and is yet another reason why college hockey is one of the most fan–friendly sports in existence.

• The final RPI ratings have been released for the 1995–96 season, and the guys right here in the Pioneer Valley made waves. UMass had the fifth largest improvement over last year's ranking of any team in the nation.

Each of the four teams ahead of the Minutemen, in only their second full Division 1 season, made the NCAA tournament. UMass improved 15 places from last year's rankings, exceeded only by Cornell (+22), Western Michigan (+21), PC (+17) and UMass–Lowell (+16).

Dropping 24 spots this year, the Princeton Tigers were the big losers in the computer ranking which is a primary factor in selecting the teams for the NCAA tournament.

MICHIGAN MEDIA RELATIONS
Michigan goaltender Marty Turco (35) and senior defenseman Mark Sakala (2) will look to run over the top–ranked Boston University Terriers in tomorrow night's NCAA hockey semi–final in Cincinnati.

"Team" concept could prove to be UM's advantage

By Justin C. Smith
Collegian Staff

In order to accomplish what its coach feels it needs to do before repeating its 92-82 winning performance of Nov. 28, the Massachusetts men's basketball team has some work ahead of it.

"They're saying we will move mountains before we beat Kentucky," Massachusetts coach John Calipari said. 'But we're used to being the underdog."

The fact that there is no I in team is not lost on Calipari's squad, and it may be the telling factor why the Minutemen will be participating in their first-ever Final Four.

"They are proof that the whole is greater than the sum of the parts," Kentucky coach Rick Pitino said of UMass. "Even when Marcus Camby goes out, as good of a player he is, their lead always seems to be enhanced."

In the four tournament wins for the Minutemen Camby, the Boost Naismith National Player of the Year, led his team in scoring just twice so far, with his only truly standout performance of 20 points against Stanford. And though the Hartford native played arguably his best game of the year in the earlier Kentucky match-up, he still feels that it will take an entire team effort to beat the Wildcats and move on to the National Championship game.

"I don't need to score 30 points a game in order for our team to win. I think we have proven that all year," Camby said when asked if he needed to repeat his performance of Nov. 28. "I just need to be a presence in the post and score when I get the chance to. Others guys have stepped up all year so I don't always have to score."

Helping down on the blocks lately has been the play of junior Tyrone Weeks. When Camby was held out of the starting lineup, Weeks was summoned to fill his shoes and did so, as well as Calipari could have imagined. He finished with a team-high 16 points as the Minutemen crushed Arkansas in the Regional semifinal, 79-63.

"I was happy to step up to the challenge," Weeks said of starting the game even with the continued pain in his foot. "The last five minutes [Georgetown/Texas Tech game] seemed to take forever with all the fouls, but it just gave me more time to rest my foot. It hurts like hell but I'll play Saturday [against Georgetown]."

Also in that game, the emergence of possibly the quietest Minuteman throughout his career at UMass, Dana Dingle, was shown on a larger scale. Without the presence of Camby's 20-plus points a game on the floor, the senior co- captain poured in six of his team's first eight points before the 6-foot-11-inch All-American could even get off of the bench.

"Coach told me that if we were going to win the National Championship," Dingle said of his offensive play this season, "that I was going to have to step up my scoring."

The biggest defensive stand of the Minutemen's tournament run could be the defensive job done on Georgetown's Allen Iverson in the East Regional Finals. The All-American shot just 1-for-10 in the second half after a 17-point first half. Carmelo Travieso was his responsibility in UMass' man-to-man defensive scheme, but Camby says it was the entire team that who made sure Iverson was contained.

"I think [Travieso] took it personal Iverson said no one could guard him one-on-one," Camby said. "But he's not one-on-one out here with us, he's one-on-five."

That team concept of being one unit is what UMass basketball means to the man at the helm of its well-oiled machine.

"John Wooden says the game is about speed, it's about skill level, it's about chemistry," Calipari said about choosing players for his program that has taken UMass from college basketball beat-up doll to the Final Four in eight years. "It isn't about mud-wrestling, hand-checking and knocking people down. We don't play that way even though we do play aggressive, we do it a different way.

"We do it the way I would say basketball is supposed to be played. I don't go out and look for people in Gold's Gym, I go to basketball courts and look for players."

Dingle and Weeks are just two of the cogs that have worked together in the UMass machine that quite possibly could move mountains.

Men's lacrosse not satisfied with victory

CHESTNUT HILL — Despite manhandling Boston College en route to a 15-9 win at Alumni Stadium yesterday, the No. 12 Massachusetts lacrosse team was not happy.

Massachusetts	15
Boston College	9

"I wasn't very happy with our mental effort today," University of Massachusetts coach Greg Cannella said. "We threw a lot of balls away."

The win improved UMass to 3-2 on the season and continued the Minutemen's domination of the Eagles. UMass has defeated BC in all 23 of the team's battles dating back to 1974.

Despite leading the team with four goals, Brendan Glass was not pleased with his performance.

"For me this is my worst game of the year," he said. "We just have to forget this and get ready for Army."

For Glass the four goals give him 16 on the season, and marked the fourth time in five games that he's scored three goals or more. Glass needs only 13 more goals to reach 100 in his career.

One obvious bright spot for the visitors was the play of goalie John Kasselakis. The sophomore keeper was solid between the pipes making 10 saves while giving up only five goals, before giving way to senior Kevin Ratkiewicz in the fourth quarter.

"It was good to get John back in there after Friday night," Cannella said. "He played well. He did a real good job for us.

"Kevin has been super all season. He's an unbelievable team person. It was good to get him in there."

The Minutemen jumped out to an early 5-1 lead to drive BC's starting goalie, Marc Mulvoy, out of the game early. He was replaced by Jonathan Leuchs, who played well but couldn't stop the bleeding for the overmatched Eagles.

Nine different Minutemen figured into the Massachusetts offense as Buddy Hoffman (three), Bob Lukacz (two), Jim Kennedy, Chris Grande, Jay Robbins, Mike McKeefrey and even long stick players Dennis Kelly and Greg Macdonald, all got into the scoring column in addition to Glass.

With the Minutemen comfortably ahead at 15-6, Cannella was able to give all his reserves a chance to play.

BC would score three more goals to close out the scoring.

"I thought they looked good," said co-captain Buddy Hoffman of the UMass reserves. "They all work hard in practice. They all deserve to get a chance to play."

"That really was the best thing," Glass agreed. "It was great to get those guys some goals and assists."

Cannella was also pleased by the performance of his bench.

"Jarred Hand took some face-offs for us and did a real nice job," Cannella said. "Mike McKeefrey and Bobby Lukacz played very well and Chris Robbins turned in a good effort. It's nice to play those guys

Defense, led by Kasselakis, key to win

CHESTNUT HILL — With the graduation of Jeremy Murphy and Mike Valente to the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team, offense held a lot of the questions entering the Minutemen's 1996 campaign.

The ending of two other University of Massachusetts lacrosse superstars careers, Vinny Dello-Iacono and Tom LoPresti, have been left highlighted because of the continued success the Minutemen have had keeping opponents away from the net.

In yesterday's 15-9 win over Boston College at Alumni Field, sophomore goaltender John Kasselakis gave up just five goals in just over three quarters of action. In front of him, the starting defensive unit of Greg McDonald, Harold Drumm and Adam Waxer played physical defense causing numerous Eagle turnovers. The BC offensive attack never really got on track until the game was well in hand, and coach Greg Cannella gave some of his bench players some action on the field.

In the first half, Kevin McLane scored all three Eagle goals of the first half that saw Kasselakis make eight saves. High-powered Eagle attackman Matt Prybylski scored his only goal of the contest late in the fourth quarter. That coming while McDonald, his marker all day, had been taken out of the game for a well-deserved rest.

"The defense was there all game," Kasselakis said of the protectors of his cage. "[BC] started off quick but we made adjustments putting Harold Drumm on No. 8 [McLane] and after that we stopped their whole offense."

All day long the same frustration confronted the BC attackers who were kept on the perimeter by Waxer, McDonald and Drumm, as well as Matt Tholander and Zach Hergott when they needed a spell.

McDonald's contribution to the win was not just confined to the defensive end of the field either. Early in the fourth period, as the Minutemen were looking to bury the Eagles, the junior long stick defenseman picked up a loose ball in his own half of the field and raced up the left sideline. As Eagle defenders peeled off of him, expecting him to pass the ball, McDonald continued to head for the BC cage. Ten yards in

UMass squeaks by BC Eagles

CHESTNUT HILL — With the Massachusetts baseball team still bursting tans from last week's road trip to Texas and Florida, the Minutemen left the warmth behind them as they squeaked by Boston College 6-5 on a chilly Shea Field yesterday afternoon.

Thus far in the opening stretch of the season, the Minutemen earned a 5-4 record down south. Although looking to boost their winning record in a return trip north, they struggled with the BC squad that they clobbered 12-6 last season.

Freshman Sean McGowan opened on the mound for the Eagles, facing off against Minuteman junior Chad Sullivan. UMass was first to light up the board in the top of the second.

Massachusetts	6
Boston College	5

Senior outfielder Pete Gautreau singled to right field scoring Doug Clark, who made his way to third base after singling and then stealing second base while freshman Brian Mazzaserro stood at the plate. McGowan went 1-2-3 in the top of the third while Sullivan kept the Eagles at bay. That was the bottom half of the inning.

The UMass bats came along in the fourth, abusing freshman Brian Stenger, who stepped in for McGowan by running through the order. First baseman Justin Kelly left off by singling to right field as Pre-Season Atlantic 10 Player of the Year centerfielder Nate Murphy took to the plate. BC coach Richard Maloney signaled for his outfield to back up after he blasted one down the left field foul line in the second.

The strategy didn't work as Murphy found the gap in shallow center field for a single. Clark followed Murphy and ran out a single while Murphy was tossed out at second, placing men on first and third. Mazzaserro took to the plate. Clark stole second as Mazzaserro walked to load the bases. Stenger would give away an easy run when he hit Gaugreau, walking in Kelly.

UMass would set itself up nicely to boost the lead when Andy Kish doubled to left field scoring Clark and Mazzaserro putting UMass up 5-0.

To lead off the top of the fifth, BC pulled McGowan and put in freshman John Pilato who kept UMass off the board.

In the bottom of the fifth Sullivan wasn't as lucky, as Boston College countered with a potent offensive run of its own, batting around its order and scoring five runs for the lead.

All seemed well when rightfielder Kevin Penwell grounded out to short, but for the rest of the way, things got rough. Shortstop Eric Olsen doubled to right field. Brendan Levek singled to the pitcher putting runners on first and third. Shortstop Trez McNeil belted a single scoring Olsen and putting the Eagles on board for the first time. Sullivan walked centerfielder Brian Manahan and then third baseman Craig Katz bringing Leveque home. Eagles first baseman Brian Sankey provided a key single which brought McNeil in and loaded the bases, putting BC down by a run 4-3.

Dagliere steps up, helps UMass get win

By Casey Kane

CHESTNUT HILL — When the Massachusetts baseball team traveled to Chestnut Hill for its matchup with Boston College yesterday, one thing coach Mike Stone wanted to work on was having his team play at its level — not at its opponents level. For that to happen everyone, especially his returning starters, would have to step up.

While yesterday's game, which ended in a 6-5 the University of Massachusetts victory, did not showcase the best overall team effort, several players did turn the heat up on their play. One in particular, second baseman and second- year starter Muchie Dagliere, was solid for the Minutemen both offensively and defensively.

"Muchie plays like he's capable of playing," Stone said. "He's solid defensively and he's a good hitter. I'm not surprised by what Muchie can do, he's that kind of player."

Dagliere started the day with a double in the top of the first inning on a driving hit to right field. With that hit he was the only Minuteman to reach base in the opening inning.

The sophomore would face BC freshman righty Sean McGowan once more in the top of the third. In the fourth, he came up against freshman righty Brian Stenger. However, neither at bat was productive as he hit into a double play in the third and grounded out in

Libyan hijacking crisis resolved peacefully

CAIRO, Egypt — Demanding a meeting with three world leaders, three hijackers commandeered an Egyptian jetliner to Libya on Wednesday and surrendered peacefully to the Libyan military five hours later.

The Airbus A320, en route from Jiddah, Saudi Arabia, to Cairo, was hijacked after stopping in the southern Egyptian city of Luxor, a tourist locale famous for its spectacular Pharaonic ruins.

The 152 passengers, including 17 Japanese, 59 Canadians and a number of French citizens, were freed in Libya's Mediterranean city of Martubah, 150 miles west of Egypt. Airport officials said none of the passengers was American.

"The hijackers did not ask anything of the passengers," Prime Minister Kamal el-Ganzoury told reporters in Cairo. "The passengers are OK. They were not badly treated."

The three Saudi Arabian hijackers insisted on an audience with the heads of the United States, Egypt and Libya to present "a message from God" to help the Palestinians, Libyan leader Col. Moammar Gadhafi reportedly spoke with one of the hijackers.

Waning Buchanan asked to support Dole

WASHINGTON — As Pat Buchanan prepared for a summit to consider an independent presidential run, Bob Dole's campaign and the Republican Party chairman said Wednesday they wanted Buchanan's help in the fall but were in no mood to make concessions.

Winless in 25 March primaries, Buchanan was flying home from California and planned to meet with roughly 40 top advisers and supporters Thursday to consider his options.

Aides who spoke to Buchanan early Wednesday said he was determined to press on in targeted primaries, including Pennsylvania, Indiana and New Jersey, even though Dole has a lock on the nomination.

A major question is whether he will continue to attack Dole.

Beyond that, many of Buchanan's top supporters are urging him to bolt the GOP and launch an independent presidential bid. Buchanan in recent days has told aides he views that as a risky, unlikely option, but wants to listen before making a decision.

Leading Republicans urged Buchanan to stay within the GOP ranks — and to join other defeated rivals in backing Dole.

"This contest is over," said Republican National Committee Chairman Haley Barbour.

SU Art Gallery faces possibility of damaging cutbacks

SHANE KEENAN / COLLEGIAN

Ryan McCarthy, a sophomore economics major, checks out the Beverly Floyd Exhibit at the Student Union Art Gallery Tuesday afternoon. Art gallery staff say it may close if SGA's initial appropriation is passed.

By Amy H. Paradysz
Collegian Staff

Employees of the Student Union Art Gallery, the only on- campus gallery run by undergraduates, are concerned it may be forced to close if the Student Government Association's (SGA) initial FY 1997 $2595 allocation is finalized.

For 1996, the gallery received $9,156 from Student Activities for 1996, which was a cut from the year before. The difference is almost equal to the graduate student director's salary.

SGA made the low initial allocation because it "is under fiscal restraint," according to Ways and Means Chairman Jeff Coker. The art gallery is not the only student organization facing the possibility of a large cut in funding. The Distinguished Visitor's Program (DVP), which received $34,921 for 1996, expects to be "zero funded," using Coker's words. The New World Theatre will probably lose a quarter of its Activities Office funding, while AHORA, a Latino umbrella organization, expects a 40 percent, or $4,000, cut.

Art gallery employees said SGA no longer wants to fund their $6,000 per year graduate director's position. The gallery's undergraduate employees are work study students, according to gallery guard and ceramics major Julie Graham. "The undergrads don't feel they should be paying the salary of a graduate," she said.

Graham, Gustafson and the gallery's Publicity Director Tim Fisk, all said an undergraduate wouldn't have the time or schedule flexibility necessary for the 20-a- week director's job with its odd hours. Gustafson said it would be hard to find an undergrad with the necessary experience in management, curatorial skills and grant writing, along with people skills and experience with budgets and ordering supplies.

Even if an undergraduate director were to decide which undergraduate art students may do their MFA show at the gallery, it would be a conflict of interest, according to Fisk.

"They all know each other — it's a tight community," he said.

The sign-in book for the current exhibit, "Sol y Sombre" by Beverly Floyd, demonstrates the community spirit of the gallery in both its praise and its constructive criticism.

Rabin assassin unrepentant despite life imprisonment

By Dan Perry
Associated Press

TEL AVIV, Israel — Even as guards hauled him away to a life behind bars, convicted assassin Yigal Amir showed no remorse about gunning down Israel's prime minister.

The 25-year-old former law student told the Tel Aviv court in his final statement Wednesday that Rabin had to be killed because his efforts to make peace by giving up land to the Arabs were a calamity for the Jews.

"Everything I did, I did for God, for the Torah of Israel, the people of Israel and the land of Israel," Amir said. He dismissed the three-month proceedings as a show trial and told Judge Edmond Levy: "May God help you."

It was a typical proclamation by the determined young man who shocked the world and exposed the deep rifts in Israel by walking up to Rabin, reaching between security men and shooting him twice in the back with hollow-point bullets on Nov. 4.

The three-judge panel convicted Amir and ordered the maximum sentence — life in prison for murdering Rabin, as well as six years for wounding his bodyguard.

Parole seems out of the question for the slightly built defendant, who throughout the trial exasperated his judge and many Israelis with his apparent indifference and unrepentant attitude.

Looking at his sister Hadas at his sentencing, Amir pointed upwards, as if to suggest that everything was in God's hands.

His black curly hair covered by a black skullcap, Amir yawned as Levy described him as a "wild growth" and suggested Israel must reevaluate an educational system that was failing to instill sufficient values.

Levy noted Amir is highly intelligent — his lawyers say tests placed his IQ at 144, far above average. But he also "has narcissistic and schizoid tendencies and sees the world in terms of black and white," Levy added, summarizing a court-ordered psychiatric exam.

With premeditation and amazing calm, he decided that the death of the late prime minister was the only way to stop the peace process he opposed and he took this path to its very end," Levy said.

Amir tried to yell something after the sentence was pronounced, but guards quieted him and hustled him out of the courtroom.

The conviction and sentence were hardly a surprise: Amir was caught at the scene and confessed. An amateur video shows Amir loitering by Rabin's car and shooting the premier as he was about to leave a Tel Aviv peace rally.

Still, the trial transfixed Israelis, who were deeply shaken by the first high-level assassination in their modern history.

Chancellor sets April deadline for reponse to SATF proposal

By Jonathan Liberty
Collegian Staff

On March 26, Chancellor David K. Scott promised the Free Our Fee Coalition he would have a response to their Proposal for the Augmentation and Enhancement of Programs and Activities currently funded by the Student Activities Trust Fund (SATF) between April 12 and April 21.

Scott's initial comments to the proposal, which asks the University to fund $525,000 over a four year period, were positive.

"I like the proposal," he said. "It is a strategic multi-year plan which is headed in the same direction as the progress of the campus. [The administration] will try to as responsive as possible."

The proposal, which was presented to Scott on March 15, was created by the student members of the Free Our Fee Coalition in collaboration with Vice Chancellors Tom Robinson and Paul Page.

"We have looked at non-advocacy positions that fit into the curriculum, positions which expand learning outside of the classroom," said Student Center for Education and Research Advocacy student coordinator Mike Hass. "The University should be paying for these staff positions."

The chancellor could not give a definite answer to the proposal at the meeting Scott, along with Provost Patricia Crosson, said they need to look over $8 million in proposals from many different campus departments. There is only $1 million to be allocated.

Scott said that he will try to have a definite response as soon as April 12 and the latest date of notification is April 21.

"The students have created a long-term proposal which supports the University financial system," said Robinson, who has worked with the Coalition over the past three weeks. "This proposal looks to the future."

"In the past we have reallocated money to registered student organizations (RSOs) only by making budget cuts," Hass said. "With this proposal we would be able to enhance the RSOs and vastly improve the quality of student life."

Presently the SATF totals $1.7 million, $117,000 of which is dispersed to RSOs. In the first year of the plan, the fiscal year 1997, the amount of money for RSOs would be raised to $230,000.

"If we received this amount of money I believe we will see much more enthusiasm amongst students. More student groups will be able to plan more events, creating more non- alcoholic options for students," Hass said.

"If this proposal is supported, students will start to feel better about the administration," Student Government Association (SGA) President Christene Lopes said. "Their collaborative work shows a great deal of support for the student body."

Within the second year of the proposal a Program Board would be created in order to assist in the and collaboration of the nearly 200 RSOs.

"The Board would start by creating a calendar at the beginning of each semester displaying all of the RSOs planned activities," Lopes said. "This would allow time for the collaboration of RSOs, which would increase campus unity and lessen the cost of events per group."

Hass commented that this proposal is the last piece necessary for Scott's Strategic Thinking Document, which is a plan for the overall progress of the campus.

"The quality of student life was not one of the major points within the Chancellor's document," Hass said. "Our proposal is an essential part for the completion of the document."

"The SATF will receive some sort of relief in the first year," Scott said. "[The proposal] is very important to the University — that is why we will be responsive to it."

Vietnam War scrutinized in lecture

By Anastasia Kudrez
Collegian Staff

The Vietnam War shattered the illusion of "American exceptionalism," and according to a historian who lectured last night, the United States government is trying to obliterate the memory of the war.

Professor Howard Zinn, a political activist and historian from Boston University, presented a lecture titled "The Impact of the Vietnam War on American Society" sponsored by the Five College Program in Peace and World Security Studies. Spilling over onto the cement steps and floor in Hasbrouck Hall, over 200 people came to hear the lecture.

Punctuating his talk with satirical jabs at the United States government, Zinn explained why the war had such a significant impact on American society. The Vietnam anti- war movement was the first in which a massive number of GIs protested in an organized fashion. He said that much of the discontent arose from the question: "What is this war for?"

Students, civil rights workers and GIs were part of a movement that organized public meetings, rallies, strikes and alternative newspapers to reveal the immorality of U.S. involvement in Vietnam. The anti-war movement exploded after the invasion of Cambodia in the spring of 1970 and the Kent State shooting of student protesters.

According to Zinn, Vietnam had given war and the U.S. government a bad name, resulting in widespread disillusionment with political practices. The war taught the people about the working of the political system, and made clear the "misguided patriotism" leading to U.S. involvement.

"Wars have no checks and balances, and the people found this out," he said.

According to Zinn, the memory of the war has had devastating effects on the veterans. The psychological disorders have been more lethal than the war itself.

EMILY REILY / COLLEGIAN

Howard Zinn

"More than 80,000 veterans have committed suicide since the war ended," he said.

Zinn said that since 1973, when American troops were withdrawn from Vietnam, there has been a powerful effort by the U.S. government bury the war.

"It's a memory that 'they' want to eliminate," he said. "It's the war in which a sizeable number of Americans lost their illusions about American government."

Zinn explained how different government administrations have tried to obliterate, distort or trivialize the conflict. When President Carter was asked if he planned to help rebuild Vietnam, he said "Well, the destruction was mutual." Zinn said the Grenada Invasion and the Gulf War are examples of the government's attempts to legitimize itself to the American people.

Zinn said that the government has succeeded in obliterating the memory of the war to a certain extent. Educational omission, using textbooks with slanted or incomplete explanations of U.S. involvement in the war, has been one effective method, he alleged.

"We hear about atrocities and holocausts in other countries, but not the U.S.," he said.

Despite the efforts of the powers of government, Zinn said he believes the post-war effects remain and have a significant impact on society.

"The war has caused an enormous amount of new understanding and disillusionment with the government and government practices," he said.

Zinn called the aftermath of the war "the Vietnam Syndrome," a collection of memories that the government is trying to purge.

Former Springfield man charged with murder of disabled son, wife

By Nancy Roberts Trott
Associated Press

CONCORD, N.H. — A man charged with beating his disabled son and wife to death with a hammer wanted to put his son up for adoption five years ago, but the boy's mother wouldn't allow it, relatives said.

Robert Blair told police that he killed his wife and 8-year-old son Monday because he feared the state would take away the boy, who was legally blind and had cerebral palsy.

But Blair's brother-in-law, Keith Moncrief, said Wednesday that he is baffled Blair's claim.

"It just doesn't add up," said Moncrief, a Milford state representative. "Bob wanted my sister to put him up for adoption specifically because he thought he was a burden to them. That flies in the face of what he said."

Blair, 49, was arrested Monday and charged with bludgeoning his 36-year-old wife, Sandra, and their son, Justin, to death while they slept in the road-side motel they had been living in for two weeks.

Blair told police he sat up most of the night with his wife discussing his plan to kill Justin. Moncrief said Blair likely told his wife he wanted to kill both of them.

"I think he was saying, 'This is what I'm going to do to you and Justin and she said, 'No you're not,'" he said.

The family moved to Concord after they were evicted from their apartment in Springfield, Mass., in February.

According to city records, the Blairs owed more than $2,000 in back rent.

According to Moncrief, Blair has never held a job and has lived off public assistance and handouts for as long as he has known him.

Still, he said he knew of no threat by the state to take Justin away. Massachusetts social service officials confirm they had no plans to take the boy.

"He has always lived off the system and always found a way to seek some kind of state or federal support," Moncrief said.

"Those kinds of factors did not play a part in what he did."

Those who knew the family said Sandra Blair was a warm, caring woman who spent hours every day helping their son walk without a wheelchair, while Robert Blair refused to even be alone with the boy.

"My sister was devoted to Justin and took excellent care of him. That was her life," Moncrief said. "Bob was not willing to assume that responsibility."

According to Moncrief and his wife, Maryanne, Blair was always looking for a handout. Indeed, when Blair found he could no longer pay for the motel room the family was renting in Concord, he convinced a sympathetic waitress to loan him $55 to pay for one more night.

He said he would pay her back after the first of the month when he and his son would receive Social Security checks, said Mary Ann Edelman, a waitress at Capital City Diner.

ing their last semester. The two other galleries on campus that accept undergraduate exhibits, the Wheeler Gallery and the Augusta Savage Gallery, accept only up to four undergrads per year, according to Graham. The Student Union Art Gallery has 10-15 undergraduate shows and two to five graduate shows, plus the Midway Show, per year, she said.

Some work, such as sculpture, is difficult to show anywhere other than a gallery. They can't just set up in a restaurant, Graham explained. The on-campus alternative is to set up for a day in one of the art department buildings. The advantages of a gallery exhibit include a longer showing time and a more useful career experience, according to Graham. Also, a student-run gallery is often more comfortable for students, she said.

"We would hope the art department or the Arts Council would pick up the tab," Coker said of the department's exhibit requirement. "We know that it may be difficult for one undergrad to run it, but perhaps two [could]."

He also spoke about the possibility of an intern who may receive credit.

"We can't cut the graduate position in half, because that's illegal," Coker said.

For the art gallery, the loss of Activities Office funding, means that Arts Council funding, which is usually for operating expenses, would have to be used for payroll. Expenses range from utilities to shipping costs, food for receptions, publicity posters and hanging devices.

However, Gustafson worries that the Arts Council may pull out their money if the gallery loses its graduate director.

"I think a lot of times students don't realize what they have until it's gone," Fisk, a sophomore who said he's seeking a career in arts administration.

The Student Union Art Gallery opened in 1957, according to Gustafson, who said it closed for a few years in the '70s, when "it lacked some support." It became more stable once it was run through the Student Activities Office, she said. The current Student Activities advisor to the gallery, Margaret Arsenault, was not available for comment.

SGA to oppose changes in town Charter

By Michael Elliott
Collegian Staff

The Student Government Association (SGA) Senate unanimously resolved at their meeting Wednesday night to oppose possible changes to the town of Amherst's Charter as recommended by their Charter Commission.

The town Charter, equivalent to a constitution, defines the structure of the government and the role of its various branches and agencies. The SGA, in a motion authored by Sen. Maurice Caston, took exception to proposed alterations which could result in a reduction of student participation in Amherst politics.

According to the Amherst League of Women's Voters, the modified Charter would consolidate power into seven town council members, one of which being mayor.

Under this plan, the Town Meeting, a 236 member body which acts as a elected public debate forum and maintains some control over town finances, would see it size reduced by 40 percent, according to the League.

Caston said that this reduction would dramatically impair the student voices, who can serve as members, within the Town Meeting because their numbers would be depleted.

"These changes would not allow students to enter the process readily. It would be a exclusionary process," Caston said.

Caston said that he urges students who are registered voters in Amherst to vote against these changes during town elections on April 2. SGA President Christine Lopes joined Caston in opposition to the new charter.

"I think that the most important thing is that as many students vote against this as possible," Lopes said.

Caston, a candidate for SGA President, earned support from his electoral rival, Sen. Larry Plano, who provided the Mail Services receives. Now is the time to contact magaMail Services receives. Now is the time to contact magazine companies to change addresses for the summer, June through August. September magazines are held in Mail services and will be delivered when school opens in September.

In others matters, three motions introduced by Sen. Bill Ramsey passed the Senate, all unanimously passed with the exception of one.

In response to student complaints and the long lines in the W.E.B. DuBois Library computer labs, a Ramsey motion will mandate that ten new carrels be added to provide students with the technology to access their e-mail accounts.

Further, Ramsey's motion stipulates that the Office of Information Technologies must institute a weekly maintenance check to ensure that all the computer terminals are in working order.

"Students who pay their $20 fur this system should have these services available to them," Ramsey said.

To address problems at Health Services who often, according to Ramsey, have a back-log of patients, a motion was passed to provide for one additional physician to be made available for non-emergency needs.

During the winter, when the "flu hits this school big-time," Ramsey said, students are forced to wait hours, even days for proper treatment.

Finally, the Senate passed a motion which will seek to create a "Upper Classed Student Assistance" policy within the Office of the Registrar to ensure that juniors and seniors are given preferential treatment during pre-registration for classes they need to graduate on time.

According to Ramsey, no policy currently exists on the Administration level. Many students are thus forced into enrolling in a additional semester at the University.

"It's not fair to make students pay more money," Ramsey said. "I'm just trying to help juniors and seniors out."

Under Ramsey's plan, the Registrar would automatically enroll students close to graduation into required general education classes.

Sen. Jeff Coker, Chairman and the Senate Ways and Means Committee, reminds all RSOs that budget hearings will occur the weekend of April 13 and 14 Students must sign up for a hearing by Friday, March 29, in the SGA office.

Students urge Republican votes

By Daniel Sullivan
Collegian Staff

To clear gridlock in the national government, people need to vote for new politicians in the up-coming elections, said University of Massachusetts Republican Club president Phil Milson in a rally yesterday afternoon.

The Student Union steps were the site of the event intended to inform the campus about national candidates. A mixed crowd of about 15 pro and anti-Republican voters students attended the event. Numerous students stopped long enough to find out who was rallying, but quickly went inside to escape the cold.

"[Republican candidate for president, Bob Dole] won't allow the federal government to shutdown," Milson said. "He is a man who is willing to negotiate and bargain even with the Democrats in order to hammer out vital economic and social reform bills."

Milson stressed a need for students to get involved in the election process and vote Republican. Issues including welfare, taxes, illegal immigration and a balanced budget amendment will be influential in the November elections, he said.

"On campus, misguided passions seem to encompass the hearts and minds of too many students," Milson said. "We are continually under assault from leftist radical organizations and liberal professors who are more interested in brainwashing students than educating them properly."

A Dole plan for a flat tax similar to Steve Forbes idea is crucial to simplify the system and give fair tax responsibility, said Eric Weston, the vice-president of the Republican Club.

"All income tax payers would pay the same income tax rate," Weston said. "The poor and the wealthy will save money under the flat tax. Why should some people be forced to bear a larger tax responsibility than others simply because they make more money?"

Proposition 187 in California to close borders for illegal immigrants is an important issue the United States should look into, according to Weston.

"We can hardly afford to pay welfare and medical bills of our own citizens let alone the welfare and medical bills of illegal immigrants," Weston said. "Illegal immigrants are taking jobs away from citizens of our own country and we can not allow this to continue."

The U.S. Senate race between incumbent John Kerry (D- Mass.) and Gov. William Weld is a pivotal election for Massachusetts, said Jolyon Yates.

"Without Weld as Senator, in the next few years Massachusetts could experience severe cut backs in all sorts of projects," Yates said. "Weld understands that it is America's monetary policy that keeps America's economy going and the best way to help out America's monetary policy is through a balanced budget."

Yates warned the crowd about Kerry's extreme views, saying that Weld would provide a more central viewpoint to work with various groups.

A "virtual" big brother

Erin Barnes

Last summer, as an intern with the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency in Boston, I participated in outreach programs educating Rhode Island homeowners about drinking water protection. During my usual stream of friendly phone calls, I encountered one embattled homeowner who felt the EPA's presence was not necessary in his town, and that we were the extension of an overly- regulatory government which had gone out of control. I felt his bitterness was misdirected, and drove home awfully angry that afternoon. However, after further consideration, I believe he has a point.

Newspaper articles and television broadcasts demonstrate a need to ease the imposing regulatory burden. For example, an Illinois general contractor is forced to abandon a job site because it is a potential breeding spot for Indiana cave bats. A Massachusetts nursing home is told it cannot expand because it abuts a wetland. For the past year, during their effort to scale back government regulations, congressional Republicans have pointed to stories like these as examples of how federal mandates prevent small businesses from thriving.

But twice now, Republicans have seen their regulatory- reform bills blocked, once last year by Senate Democrats and again a couple of weeks ago by their own House leadership. After pro–environmental moderates in his own party threatened to fight the bill, House Speaker Newt Gingrich pulled it from the floor. The most recent reform bill was a softened version of a sweeping overhaul passed one year ago that included a moratorium on all new regulations and a requirement that federal agencies perform risk-assessment and cost–benefit analyses before enacting new rules. Thankfully, the bill later died in the Senate.

The latest version did not contain these provisions. Instead, it included two relatively modest proposals: to allow small businesses to challenge decisions by federal agencies in court, and to allow Congress more power to review and revoke new agency rules. In addition, the bill included a regulatory "sunsetting" measure to require federal agencies to periodically review every major regulation. According to EPA administrator Carol Browner, such a mechanism would tie the agency in knots, soaking up as much as $1 billion a year of their budget and making it more difficult to enforce mandates such as the Clean Water and Clean Air Acts.

The bill's supporters, mostly small business owners, argue that regulations are often imposed with little consideration of their effects on business.

Costs and paperwork associated with many regulations drive some businesses under. Plus, in a litigious society such as ours, regulatory mandates increase legal expenditures and divert finances away from community and business–friendly projects.

Secretary of the Interior Bruce Babbit has voiced a viable alternative that seeks to reduce the legal fees associated with regulatory mandates while giving small businesses a sense of empowerment within the rule–making system. His solution: "virtual regulation."

According to Secretary Babbit, it seems a paradox exists when American voters increasingly demand less regulation while aggressively telling Congress they want more environmental protection. Indeed, to restore and protect our air and water, we need rigorous national standards as the economic market, left to its own devices, fails to ensure ecological protection. However, there is no immutable law that says such standards must be reached through reams of detailed, cookie–cutter instructions. Instead, the government should set a national goal and then invite businesses and communities to reach that goal in whatever way they choose. Through the "virtual regulation" approach, local industries would be free to choose their own path to clean water and air compliance, whether it be through source reduction, recycling, reuse, conservation or control technology. By examining their needs and incorporating cost–benefit analysis, companies may select a mechanism that works best for them.

For example, in 1993 New York City was hit with a federal mandate to build new filtration plants for water emanating from its Catskill Mountain Aqueduct. Instead of rushing into a $5 billion construction program, the city decided to tackle the problem at its source: pollution originating on rural watersheds. It then devised a plan to pay for farm–waste and waste–water treatment facilities that rural communities could not afford. As a result, the federal standard was met at one–quarter the estimated cost with benefits for both urban and rural communities, thus providing strong protection with light regulation.

Obvious benefits aside, this virtual approach to environmental protection cannot work without strong standards. As Secretary Babbit notes, if we weaken the target, the entire framework falls apart. At the same time, this approach requires that we relinquish the old command– and–control mentality and look outward to communities and landowners to create new, cost–effective solutions.

Americans could ultimately tell Big Brother what they want and demonstrate how to carry it out in shorter time and for less money than the government could have imagined.

I have since learned how to handle an irate citizen. As an EPA intern and federal representative, I should have listened to what he had to say.

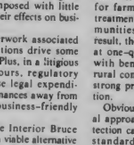
The hippies have stormed the beach



Henry J. Brier

During the first week or so after spring break it is chilly in the morning, but as the day proceeds it slowly becomes more mild and ultimately comfortable. This break in the weather, from the winter–doldrums to the spring– rejuvenation, allows throngs of people, with an orientation leaning towards the left, to gather in a particular region on campus.

This, and what they leave behind, are a sure sign of spring's arrival.

Hippie Beach, for those who do not know, is not really a waterfront or the shore, yet it is a stone's throw from the Campus Pond. It is the concrete steps outside the Student Union which face the Fine Arts Center. Observe the array of brilliantly colored clothing.

Recent strolls by this area have shown that its inhabitants (yeah, the so–called earth–loving and tree–hugging "crunchies"), in fact care nothing about the environment, otherwise they would throw their trash in the barrels, and not just leave it all near the barrels and on the steps.

Paper plates, plastic eating utensils, cups and cigarette butts are all carelessly littered around the beach, as if the sunbathers are expecting their mothers to show up after them and clean up their mess.

All of this aesthetically displeasing litter is bad for the environment that many supposedly feel so strongly about protecting and conserving. Evidently, this is only the hollow thought because no action follows.

The butts are sprinkled everywhere on campus, and not particular to the beach. The cups are mostly from the temporary Ghostbuster–like figures distributing free coffee. They will be gone as soon as the demons and spooks, running rampant and ruthlessly wreaking havoc, have been eliminated.

But the brunt of the garbage, the plates and plastic, seems to all derive from within the doors of the Student Union.

"They're good for business," a high–ranking employee of Earthfoods recently said, pointing to the people who leave the clutter. "But they make a mess."

If the title of this student business conveys any indication of their environmental ideology, then perhaps the folks who work there and reap the profits should give back by cleaning up the disarray that they will ultimately cause.

Ahh ... yes.

Another sure sign of spring is the rallies on the Student Union front steps.

Here, Registered Student Organizations (RSOs) and other motivated people take advantage of the comfortable atmosphere to expound their perspectives on whatever issue is at hand. Or an issue is pushed to the scene's forefront.

The "give and take," meaning the publicizing of under– represented or unpopular opinions, is what comes with higher education, however flagrant and disrespectful it may be.

The Conservative Alliance (umbrella for the Republican Club, the Minuteman, Students for Life and Young Americans for Freedom) has always been good for bluntly– worded and direct protests, yet until yesterday's pro– Republican forum, they were silent.

This is hardly an endorsement of their political ideas, but it is a call for them to step up and again make their voices heard. There is so much happening now locally, nationally and internationally that it is rather surprising they have been relatively silent.

Their messages, which exercise little–to–no tact, diametrically oppose the disproportional ultra–leftist "mainstream" opinion on this campus.

Listening to them is a dose of reality, as it represents what will be heard upon departure from the Massiversity of Unichusetts.

And the winner is...

Oscar night, 1996, all I can say is ridiculous. I must say for the first time in my meager existence I found myself rooting for a pig over humans — talking animals over men with painted blue faces wearing skirts. If this is what Hollywood has to offer me, I'll watch more PBS specials, thanks!

I must admit I never actually see the movies nominated for the big awards, but this year I don't think I could ever get excited about the supposed "Best Picture" nominees. How could I get encouraged about Mel Gibson's acceptance speech when he stated he learned from all of the directors he's worked for to prepare him for his directorial debut. I'm so sure "Mad Max Beyond Thunderdome" and the "Lethal Weapon" epics prepared him for the task of a serious directing career.

Before I can even express my disgust for the winners I must say all of the political fury surrounding the event adds to my nausea. If you're going to make a serious political statement, (Jesse Jackson,) please get a bigger soap box to stand on, or at least a more relevant night to state your case. It seems to me that by focusing any more undue attention to this night of "who's wearing what," you're only adding to the tedium of it all. I buy what you're saying, Mr. Jackson, but use it in different context. He needs a cause really bad!

Quickly getting back to the style of dress for the night, I must say again, who gives a rat's ass? I just cannot take anyone seriously wearing a red ribbon who has as an accompanying accessory, millions of diamonds choking their necks. I don't particularly care that Sharon Stone found her ensemble right out of her closet—it's not like she was wearing sweats or anything. Somehow what someone wears overshadows their acting performance, so how can I care?

One night a year, the "Who's who" of Hollywood comes out in full force, dressed to the nines, to get appreciated for something they get paid thousands of dollars to do. What I really want to see is the losers at a press conference. I want to see the people who lose out to their colleagues who they know don't deserve it. I know the people who win feel like the "luckiest people in the world" — no need to mention it. I want to see the special effects people who worked to exhibit the atmospheric conditions in space. They lost out to the people who made animals look like they were talking.

What the Oscars really don't need though is the musical and dance performances that have nothing to do with anything, but do provide a constant source of amusement to the television viewer. I really don't know why they have nominations for best song in a movie anymore — you just know some animated creature singing a Disney song is going to win. I must say though Disney is finally taking some risks — having a fallen pageant queen, with nude shots in her docier singing their music is a stretch. I am convinced I could write a song for Disney. Who couldn't write something for a singing crab?

I simply cannot help myself, there is so much about this event that annoys me to no end. I thought David Letterman did an outstanding job last year. He at least proved that these awards should not be taken seriously. These are movies, not life, and these are actors not real working stiffs. Say anything you want to me about the "real message" of the movies. When a talking pig sends me a message I'll be checking into the nearest sanitarium.

Ibish wrong about Zionism

To the editor:

On Wednesday, March 6, an article entitled "In defense of justice; traditions of Jewish Anti–Zionism" appeared in the Multicultural Affairs page of the Collegian. Ironically it appeared the day after several bombings occurred in Israel. However, what is so disturbing about the article is that which it purports to be true is merely someone's biased opinion. The author makes several claims, which are if anything, a misrepresentation of other people's opinions.

As students and individuals we must learn to decipher fact from opinion and assertions from informed opinions. We have a duty to become informed about issues that affect our opinions of the world around us or be subject to the manipulations of others.

The question all of us unfamiliar with Jewish history should be asking is: What is Zionism? According to Yigal Allon speaking to the UN General Assembly on September 30, 1975:

"Zionism is the modern expression of the ancient Jewish heritage.

"Zionism is the national liberation movement of a people exiled from its historic homeland and dispersed among the nations of the world.

"Zionism is the redemption of an ancient nation from a tragic lot and the redemption of a land neglected for centuries.

"Zionism is the revival of an ancient language and culture, in which the vision of universal peace has been a central theme.

"Zionism is the embodiment of a unique pioneering spirit, of the dignity of labor, and of enduring human values.

"Zionism is creating a society, however imperfect it may still be, which tries to implement the highest ideals of democracy — political social and cultural — for all the inhabitants of Israel, irrespective of religious belief, race or sex.

"Zionism is, in sum, the constant and unrelenting effort to realize the national and universal vision of the prophets of Israel."

In considering this definition of Zionism, we must remember nothing is perfect. Times change, mistakes are made, differences of opinions occur, people take things to an extreme, violence erupts; this happens all the time in any society, country, nation or movement. Just the same, in any given society, country, nation or movement, there are extremists and dissenters. Israel is not an exception; but to condemn the State of Israel for actions of those extremists and dissenters is like blaming the United States government for the Oklahoma bombing.

So I ask everyone reading this to consider the following questions:

Is Israel an exception?

Does Israel have to prove its validity as a nation?

Are Jews not worthy to have a nation of their own?

In closing, I urge all of you readers to become informed. Do not take everything you see and hear at face value. Find the knowledge yourselves, then make an informed opinion.

Zeman's concern misplaced

To the editor:

While Ben Zeman (Collegian, March 15) is busy worrying himself about the (horrors!) objectification of women posing in bikinis on spring break advertising posters (who, I might add, are presumed to be adults fully endowed with the capacity to make their own life choices), I'd like to point out to him, and others who are similarly oriented, a few real world facts to contemplate.

• On average, men die a full seven years sooner than women. If the situation were reversed, I'm sure we'd hear a cacophonous outcry over this extreme disparity.

• No woman on this campus, or anywhere in this country, for that matter, is commanded by law to register to fight wars or else face criminal prosecution, loss of financial aid, or expulsion from school. That's right, Ben. You, my friend, not the women in bikinis, are compelled by law to register to fight a war, possibly being killed in the process, simply because you are a man.

• Vastly more men are maimed or killed each year on the job than women. I wonder if the fact that most of the dangerous jobs are being performed by men has anything to do with that fact. Interesting how there is no clamor over equal rights regarding those jobs. I guess as long as it's only men being killed, we shouldn't get too worked up.

• If a man and a woman commit the same crime, the woman will virtually always get a much less severe punishment than the man. For example, every single person executed in this country in recent years, save one, has been a man. That's hundreds of men vs. one woman.

On and on I could go with similar, disturbing examples illustrating who bears the weight of oppression in this country vs. who is the most coddled, protected and afforded victim class status, with its many perks. As a man, I urge you to do some soul searching about the truly important battles needing to be waged in the ongoing gender war, Ben. Don't be so easily swayed by the unending, and often shrill, protestations of feminists who, it seems to me, will say or do just about anything to continue to be seen as victims, suffering at the hands of us great big male monsters, while simultaneously expending no great energy to demand equal responsibility for their actions. It is the unmeasured suffering of your brothers (happening mostly in silence) that should concern you, Ben, not a pretty adult woman in a bikini.

Late night talk shows battle on Web

The late night talk show circuit has become hot recently with the advent of Jay Leno surpassing Dave Letterman in the Nielsen ratings, so it is no wonder all these guys have pages on the Web.

The Tonight Show with Jay Leno at http://www.nbcthetonightshow.com

Jay Leno ascended to the throne of late night talk shows when Johnny Carson retired. Because this show is the crown jewel of NBC's late night talk show circuit, they created a Web page for it as soon as the Web became hot — it's NBC's first endeavor on the Net.

The page is rather basic. It provides information about the show such as a schedule of guests in the coming weeks. In addition to the schedule, it includes video clips from the show, and an archive of Jay's old classic head

California Dreaming... Leno Style

Getting Up Close and Personal with the Only Man Big Enough to Fill Carson's shoes

Laura Stock

He's known as the comedian with the huge forehead and the elongated chin. We all know he loves his classic cars, and his motorcycle collection. But did you know that this Andover native used to perform here, in the Campus Center at the Bluewall?

"I did the Bluewall a bunch of times," Jay Leno recalled. "I used to play that room with Natalie Cole. Boy, what a drunken melee that was."

Perhaps these local ties are what make NBC's "Tonight Show" host Jay Leno such a big favorite, especially around these parts. His Boston accent ("Well, aaah...") is hardly concealed in his speech, and he has obviously not lost touch with his New England roots.

"New England is very quirky, and New Englanders just have an odd sense of humor," Leno said of the area. "I find Massachusetts to be the strangest blend of liberal and conservative. It's so odd — you'll find people who are extremely conservative in one way, but hugely liberal in social issues or something the other way.

"When you grow up there, you have a rather suspicious sense of government, and the communities tend to be small, like 'ah, what's going on in the next town,' 'what are those people doing over there?' and 'they're a little strange, those people in Boston. They're all nuts down there.' That's what's very funny to me," Leno added.

Similarly with comedians like Conan O'Brien, Steven Wright and Larry Clarke, Leno regards the Hub as a major influence in his career.

"When you go someplace else with that New England sensibility, it just seems to work," Leno said. "Some of the funniest guys, like, you know, Steven Wright and all these guys, are from Boston, and I don't necessarily think it's a coincidence, It's just an odd influence that makes for eccentric–type people."

Over the past four years, though, Leno has proved that his fans span a far wider geographic locale than just New England. This past summer, the "Tonight Show's" ratings surpassed that of "Late Night with Dave Letterman" — a remarkable triumph of NBC over CBS, one comic icon over another.

Leno, however, shrugs off all the attention this ratings championship has earned him, acting as though it is all just a mundane part of the business.

"You know, it's rather odd, the whole number one, number two thing," Leno said. "I mean, at any given point, neither show is ever really more than half a ratings point away from the other — even in our worst of times, it wasn't much more than that. And now that we're winning, we're winning by about what we were losing by before. There's sort of an odd thing in this country that you have number one, and then a hundred thousand miles away down in a ditch somewhere is number two.

"I mean, both of these shows do pretty well. It's like Ford and Chrysler or something — they both sell millions of cars, and if one happens to sell 30,000 more than the other, I guess that makes them number one, but it's not really that big of a difference," Leno added.

While Leno may not think being number one late at night is a big difference, many others certainly do. The network is relishing in his success and the press is singing him as if he's some new rising star. All of the interviews Leno has received have turned the heads and channels of many home viewers and their respective televisions.

"I've never really used the term 'King of Late Night.' It just sounds silly. The press puts it on, and obviously NBC because they have a lot of money invested in the show will say that," Leno said of his common nickname.

"Dave [Letterman] does a good program — he's a funny guy and they work hard as hard as we do, and I'm sure it will turn around someday," Leno said.

Maybe Leno shouldn't be so modest about his east coast rival. "The Tonight Show" has been ahead of "Late Night" since July 1995, gaining a lot of ground with Leno's constant comedic coverage of the O.J. Simpson trial. This cold, hard fact may be what prompted the current set make–over of Letterman's studio.

Leno doesn't attribute any one show to making his turn– around in the ratings, but his July program with the Hugh Grant interview has often been noted as his pivotal show. Grant, under severe public scrutiny with his little Hollywood hooker escapade, appeared on several talk shows with an apologetic attitude Leno, though was the only interviewer who had the guts to pose the question "What the hell were you thinking?"

"I don't think it was any one show. I think it was getting out of the old studio and moving into the new studio," Leno claimed. "Viewers have certain patterns and [illegible] I was very nervous about going into the new studio and not knowing where the heck I was going. My son

People and Pop Culture in the News

Well, the little golden statuettes have all been handed out, or as Jim Carey called them, "the ultimate knick-knacks," and several favorites went home toting Oscars. Some of the more touching moments of the ceremony included newcomer Mira Sorvino winning Best Supporting Actress, while her actor father Paul Sorvino looked on, bawling tears of joy. I wonder what he thought about the man on her arm: Mrs. Mira Sorvino–Tarantino does have kind of a ring to it.

Another tearful moment was Kirk Douglas receiving a lifetime achievement Oscar. Douglas, who recently suffered a stroke, dedicated the award to his sons and his wife, who also sobbed, her face in her hands. Maybe she was really crying about the $10,000 in bail she sprung for her son, sometime actor Eric Douglas (The Flamingo Kid, who was arrested March 17 for verbally abusing a flight attendant and refusing to put his dog in a travel carrier at Newark airport, N.J.) At least they have Michael to make them proud.

Whoopi Goldberg successfully pulled off her role as hostess of the Academy Awards ceremony, even though nobody could really figure out what was so atrocious about David Letterman hosting last year. Sparing no one with her jokes, Goldberg even seized the opportunity to make a jab at Rev. Jesse Jackson, who protested the ceremony for its "institutional racism."

Perhaps it was the success of several arty, independent films that drove action film icon Sylvester Stallone to ink a deal with Miramax to star in the low–budget Copeland. The man who used to brag about being the highest paid actor, pulling in a fat $20 million per film, will earn from this venture a measly 1 percent of his usual salary. Uberhunk Arnold Schwarzeneggar won't be taking the indie highroad anytime soon — he'll soon be double-fisting machine guns in this summer's action flick, Eraser.

Speaking of incessantly–run trailers, how many times have you seen boyfriend terrorist trailer for Fear? And you though Marky Mark's music was scary…

And even more frightening, the Sex Pistols long–rumored reunion is finally confirmed — punk's founding fathers will hit the road this summer. If this wasn't pathetic enough, Pistol frontman John Lydon (formerly Johnny Rotten) proceeded to make an ass out of himself on MTV by threatening to punch the reporter, who kept asking him why the Pistols decided to reunite, amidst a stream of profanity. Obviously Lydon and company are desperately trying to prove that the delinquent image they once made famous still exists. Nice try boys … but no one is buying.

Music — Reggae

The Madness has engulfed us all. Camby this, Calipari that. Even the music world has engrossed this amazing team. Last year, local favorites the Mitchells wrote a song about Imus Norville and now Corner Mentos & New Horizon, a local reggae group, has featured "Basketball Love" on their self–released cassette that also features "Holding My Head Up."

Not surprisingly star center Marcus Camby is the lead subject on lines like, "Camby and the boys having things there way." Rumor has it the All American loves the song. The chorus, "We got the basketball love, UMass got the basketball love, you and I have basketball love, take it all the way," sums up the area's feeling quite well.

While "Basketball Love" may not be the team's theme song this weekend, it is a fun reggae tune that both UMass fans and music fans will enjoy. Now let's all hope that the team does indeed take it all the way.

Book — The Firebrand

There is nothing quite that matches the epic proportions of the Aeneid and the Odyssey. The two poems tell the story of the Trojan war and the eventual fall of Troy. Now Marilyn Bradley Zimmer has added her own version of the story in The Firebrand.

The Firebrand tells the story from the point of view of Kassandra, the doomed prophetess loved by Apollo. Kassandra, after shunning the God unintentionally, is cursed by Apollo to never be believed. Even as she warns her fellow Trojans about the great horse left outside the gates of Troy, her words fall on deaf ears.

Zimmer weaves together a story that is almost magical and beautiful. It is also wonderful to have a story of this magnitude told from the point of a woman. The nearly 600 page book is a must–have for any fan of Greek and Roman epics.

Art — Photographs

University of Massachusetts students will have the opportunity to view "30 Years, 30 Photographs," a retrospective exhibit by Stan Sherer, tonight, at the Hampden Gallery, with an opening reception at 5 p.m.

"The retrospective exhibition will consist of approximately 30 black and white photographs made during the last 30 years," Sherer said.

The exhibition will consist of photos that include many countries, as well as the United States, and even a few that capture performances that took place at the Fine Arts Center. An added bonus are photos that have never been shown before.

Sherer has been a staff photographer for The Campus Chronicle since 1985. His interest in historical, cultural and social topics has led him to Barbados and Russia. His work has been featured in a variety of newspapers including Time Magazine, The Boston Globe and Africa Report.

Russell takes Executive action

Hijacked planes, terrorists & bombs make for thrilling flick

By Laura Stock
Collegian Staff

EXECUTIVE DECISION
Directed by Stuart Baird with Kurt Russell, Steven Seagal, Halle Berry
Playing at Hampshire Six

Just what the March movie slump needs — a testosterone– riddled romp of an action flick, set on a plane, with some Middle Eastern terrorists and a bomb powerful enough to destroy most of the east coast of the United States.

Executive Decision is decent enough to jolt filmgoers out of their post–Oscar doldrums. In fact, it actually adds new and interesting variables to the action film–formula.

Thankfully, this movie isn't Under Siege on a plane, doesn't try to be Crimson Tide in the Sky and it doesn't want you to Die Harder. Steven Seagal, bless his Hard to Kill soul, is just a teaser on the credits — his "supporting" role is more like a cameo, as he is killed off in the first 10 minutes.

Kurt Russell, an actor whom we haven't seen in a decent movie since Tombstone, takes the helm of this movie, and it does fly. Russell plays David Grant, PhD — a consultant to Army Intelligence. He has a sour working history with Colonel Travis (Seagal) in that three years ago, Travis and his anti–terrorist troops were sent on a mission to recover bombing agent DZ–5, and failed to locate the chemical.

The same terrorists are on the rampage again, as they hijack U.S. flight 343 from Greece to Washington D.C. In a rebel attempt to free their leader from captivation, the terrorists sneak enough artillery on board to take over the 400–passenger 747 airplane.

The Pentagon is faced with an enormous quandary, one which will inevitably require an executive decision from the president. The terrorists demand that their leader be sent back home and the plane be allowed to land as scheduled in D.C., or else all passengers will be killed, and there will be a second bombing in London.

Sound confusing? There's more, as Grant and his intelligence think–tank quickly figure out. The terrorists have the DZ–5 on the plane, perhaps enough to destroy D.C. and the east coast if allowed to land. The U.S. has two choices: Destroy the plane and 400 American citizens with it, or somehow get on board, dismantle the bomb and kill the terrorists.

Though loaded with details, once the plot is outlined in the bumpy first half–hour, the scenes fall into place smoothly and swiftly.

The most ingenious concept of the film is how Grant and the anti–terrorist troops get onto the 747. The Army has a plane specially engineered (though not yet used) to attach onto other aircraft with a tube — a tube which soldiers can pass through. Grant, the troops (led by John Leguizamo after Seagal's untimely death) and the plane's engineer, Cahill, get onto the plane and plan their attack.

Halle Berry plays a delicate but bold flight attendant on the hijacked plane, who proves to be essential to Grant's mission. Though her acting talents are sparse, Berry does liven up the male–dominated film.

Executive Decision's strongest suit is not so much gratuitous action sequences, but tense, forehead–sweating moments where Grant and his crew come within inches from gruesome deaths. For the sheer suspense factor, and its ability to transcend stereotype, Executive Decision is one to enjoy. B+

Lee's latest a heavy breather

Randle stars as a phone sex operator in humorous Girl 6

By Jennifer Howell
Collegian Correspondent

GIRL 6
Directed by Spike Lee with Theresa Randle
Playing at Mountain Farms Four

The numbers 9–7–6 and all they mean to sweaty–palmed males alone on a Saturday night seem light years away from anything director Spike Lee would make a film about, but Lee humorously deals with the topic of phone sex in his unfortunately disorganized film Girl 6.

Girl 6 starts out with a casting call for Judy, the film's aspiring actress heroine, played very convincingly by Theresa Randle. It's evident Judy is not making it as an actress in New York, and after taking off her shirt for "Q.T.," a hot director, she feels humiliated and run–down. So Judy decides to take a break from casting calls and working three jobs to work one lucrative job which almost seems like acting — she decides to work as a phone sex girl.

The introduction to the world of phone sex, provided by Suzan–Lori Park's script and Lee's direction, is instructive and amusing. Intriguing characters come thick and fast, and the story zips along. Several subplots are introduced that seem like they might go somewhere — a deranged, persistent caller and another caller named Bob Regular who seems to want companionship from Randle more than sex — but both of these subplots remain unresolved.

Loose ends seem to be the name of the game in Girl 6, as Parks and Lee introduce more subplots in their heroine's personal life. She is given a kleptomaniac ex–husband who wants her back, a best friend who bemoans how they never talk anymore and an unexplained concern for the fate of a little girl who fell down an elevator shaft. In addition there is a series of vignettes in which Randle portrays black cultural icons. Though these are highly entertaining, taken in combination with all the other film's loose ends, they seem really out of place.

Had any of the subplots been developed and resolved, this movie would have been more entertaining and made more sense. Though the effect of having so many unresolved loose ends did make Girl 6 seem more like a movie about real life, even MTV's "Real World" series gives each of their half–hour programs a connecting theme. A connection among all the parts of the heroine's life is what is noticeably lacking.

Girl 6 is an entertaining movie that would have been more so had a theme been established. Too bad Lee can't just call back to get a better connection. B–

Fugees expand genre with hip-hop classic

By Adam Dlugacz
Collegian Staff

THE FUGEES
The Score
Ruff House/Columbia Records

In the history of hip-hop there have been certain albums where an artist demonstrated their ability to expand the world of hip-hop such as KRS-ONE's Criminal Minded, Public Enemy's It Takes A Nation Of Millions To Hold Us Back or any album by a Tribe Called Quest or De La Soul. All these groups blew up and changed the face of hip-hop forever. Most importantly though, they all added elements others didn't have the satchel to. You can now place the Fugees into that elite clique. On The Score, the Fugees mix reggae, soul and gospel with some of the phattest beats around topped off with three MC's who flow like butter to provide us with a classic hip-hop album.

The Fugees first album Blunted On Reality featured the hits "Mona Lisa" and "Nappy Heads," but it was still slept on by much of the hip-hop community. However The Score was hyped from day one as most magazines like The Source and Rap Pages featured The Fugees was before the album was out. The question was whether they could they live up to the hype. Group members Prakazrel, Wyclef and Lauryn Hill not only lived up to the expectations, but they released an album that you'd have to be deaf and dumb not to enjoy. Lauryn Hill is the bomb, no questions asked, so forget about comparing her to other female MCs as she slays both genders. Pras and Wyclef more then hold their own and Pras's tight production keeps the album smooth and tight.

The album starts off with "How Many Mics" and Lauryn sets things all by claiming that most rap groups just live off other people's styles — something the Fugees stay far, far away from. Just like KRS-One challenged others to get their own styles and be creative, Lauryn, Pras and Wyclef inform the hip-hop community right off the bat that they're for real. The songs "Ready Or Not" and "Fugee-La," the first single, continue that idea of challenging other MCs. On "Zealots," which features a slamming gospel beat, Wyclef calls out in a roots-reggae manner, "Another MC lose his life tonight." "Zealots" exemplifies the Fugees' ability to combine different genres to produce a jam like you've never heard before.

Not only do the Fugees challenge the hip-hop community they also take on society's problems, mostly those within the African-American community. "The Beast," which is about police brutality, is a perfect example of this. Their lyrics are as adventurous as the music, as the band take up topics not normally akin to hip-hop. "Cowboys" is about how too many young black youth are wrapped up in the gangsta image and how destructive it is. "The Mask" deals with the fronts we use to deal with people in real life and how often we lie.

Two stand out tracks are covers. "Killing Me Softly," originally performed by Roberta Flack, features the beautiful and majestic voice of Lauryn. "No Woman No Cry" stars Wyclef, who really does sound like the second coming. While they stay true to the original they throw in a beat or two that will definitely leave your head ringing.

Hill, Wyclef and Prakazrel really throw out an innovative and slamming album. They've broken the mold that most hip-hop is bogged down in and breathed fresh wind into the genre. Each song is strong enough to be released as a single and there is no filler. Many of you slept on Blunted On Reality — don't make the same mistake on The Score or face the ridicule from your friends who know what time it is. A+

Band guilty of holding back on new CD

7 Year Bitch take a more commercial route on most recent release, Gato Negro

7 YEAR BITCH
Gato Negro
Atlantic Records

With Alanis Morisette and Elastica riding the commercial crest of angst-driven female rock, it seems appropriate that 7 Year Bitch would be offered a chance to cash in. Overall the band's latest sound appears held back and reserved compared to past releases, almost the PG-13 version of their older R-rated material. Yeah, they can still rock with the best of them but the album comes across polished, over- produced and ready-made for the MTV generation that isn't quite ready for Bikini Kill or Heavens to Betsy yet.

Gato Negro, the band's third album, opens with "The History of My Future," fueled by Valerie Agnew's propelling drum beat. An upbeat number, the opening track gets the album rolling at a swift pace but never quite up to the 24,900 miles per hour which the ladies sing about on one tune.

Most of the album keeps the frantic pace led by Selene Vigil's notoriously nasal vocals. But Vigil's psychotic screams are missing, replace by a tamer, more commercial sound. Songs like "Disillusion" and "Rest My Head" hark back to the band's raw roots, when they were driven by inner rage, not dollar signs and appearances in motion pictures.

Produced by Billy Anderson (Melvins, Mr Bungle) the album sounds supreme sonically, as Agnew's drums and Elizabeth Davis' bass are brought out in the mix. 7 Year Bitch remains one of the premier all-female bands but the band is found guilty of holding themselves back on Gato Negro.

7 Year Bitch's latest release leaves a little to be desired.

THE AFGHAN WHIGS
Black Love
Elektra

The Whigs sixth LP, Black Love is a definite accomplishment for the band. The album weaves both soul and angst-inspired tunes into a melodious fabric. It is certainly a strong follow-up to their 1993 album Gentleman, which was a major label success.

The band, which has been together almost a decade, has successfully branched out from the traditional indie rock stereotypes.

"There's an indie rock comfort zone out there," frontman Greg Dulli pointed out. "It goes loud/soft/loud, and anybody who goes out there and pimps that sound is going to sound the same."

The album's first single "Honky's Ladder" has a sinister tone that hits you like a brick. With its screeching guitar and harsh lyrics it serves as a sharp contrast to the more relaxed love songs that define this album. It's questionable why the band chose this song to represent the rest of the record.

The piano tinged last song, "Faded" is probably the album's epic cut. It brings the collection full circle. "Faded is the end of the ride," Dulli said. "It's a train pulling out, when it pulls back in it pulls back into the beginning."

This album is for anyone who is sick of the "safe" indie rock that's being played on the radio. Put on some shades and a trench coat and inhale the heady vapors of Black Love. A- (Anna Feder)

EVERYTHING BUT THE GIRL
Amplified Heart
Atlantic Records

You've heard the song at least twice a day on all the Top 40 stations. In fact "Missing," the first release off Amplified Heart (surprisingly the band's 12th album), is just about the catchiest song on the entire album. The rest of the nine tracks sound absolutely nothing like the sultry "Missing," with it's discotheque beat and cool Sade-esque lyrics.

Everything from "Rollercoaster" to "Walking To You" come off like cheap Joni Mitchell rip-offs with the same nonchalant and folksy attitude. The Indigo Girls and Fleetwood Mac also have similar sounding moments, making it clear that the album lacks one crucial key — originality. The songs are almost all about love's little tragedies and have nothing really distinguishable in between them, and until you get to "Missing," it seems as if you never switched songs — they are that interchangeable.

There are a few Beatle-esque harmonies and again, Sade- sounding bunch of them, and see how much people laugh. People seem to like the stupid Iron Jay thing, the dumb workout guy," Leno said.

Leno finds it hard to pick a favorite character, because their success depends upon what kind of jokes are written for them on any given day. "The Beyondo guy and Iron Jay would probably be the two I like best," Leno admits.

Leno's prestigious list of interviews range anywhere from Mel Gibson to Bob Dole. Virtually everyone who's happening passes through Jay's show at one point or another.

"Politics is sort of a hobby of mine, so anytime we have a former president or people like that on, it amazes me," Leno said of his favorite guests. "I find Jimmy Carter to be a fascinating guest, just because he was the President of the United States! And he's coming on my show, to talk to me, about silly things, or whatever."

As far as the current campaign goes, Leno tries to stay somewhere in the middle of the road politically, both in his monologue and personal life.

"Everytime I think I'm a democrat, they do something stupid, and everytime I think I'm a republican, they do something greedy, so it's a bit hard," Leno jokes.

Leno notes that some of his trendier guests and newer musicians help attract a younger audience, but he doesn't intentionally change his style to attract, say, college-aged viewers.

"When I was a college student, I hated it when people the age I am now tried to appeal to me!" Leno said. "You know, it was like 'shut up!' Just do what you do. Either people will like it, or they won't."

Maybe after all, it is Leno's modest and mellow attitude that is the key to his success. He knows he's on top, and he's not going anywhere.

"I think the real trick to being happy is just to go a day at a time. The fun thing about doing a show like the 'Tonight Show' is you don't really have time to worry about the future, you only have to worry about today and tomorrow."

Like the show, the page leaves a lot to be desired. It is a clone of Letterman's page with a little cosmetic surgery. The graphics are all the same, but the color scheme is yellow and red rather than Letterman's blue and yellow. The page has almost nothing on it outside of upcoming guests.

NBC late Night: Late Night with Conan O'Brien at http://www.nbc.com/entertainment/shows/Conan/index.html

My final stop on my tour of late night talk show pages was NBC's own Conan O'Brien page.

Although the two pages include basic information about the shows, O'Brien's page is no clone of Leno's. The page includes basic factoids about the program, and biographies of the hosts O'Brien, Andy Richter and Max Weinberg, the band leader. There is nothing fancy about this page, but it is by far better than most of the other pages.

Parade of Dynasties comes alive at FAC

By Seema Gangatirkar
Collegian Staff

Elaborate pageantry recalling years of dynastic rule in China will be brought vividly to life in The Parade of Dynasties, a showcase of incredible acrobatics, dance and music. The event, described as "incredible" by former Tonight Show host Johnny Carson, will take place at the Fine Arts Concert Hall tonight at 8 p.m.

The show features the Cangzhou acrobats, dancers and musicians from China. Each scene showcases a historical setting representing the Qin Dynasty (c. 200 B.C.), the Tang Dynasty (618–907 A.D.) and the Song Dynasty (960–1279 A.D). Other dynasties to be featured include the brilliant Ming Dynasty (1368–1644 A.D.) and the Qing or Manchu Dynasty, which arose after the demise of the Mings and lasted until 1911.

Each scene is choreographed, costumed and set to music according to the historical context. The stories range from courageous warriors demonstrating their fierce battle skills and bravery to village festivals and weddings. Each vignette provides a valuable look at the Chinese empire.

A special feature of the music used in this production is the use of nearly 100 cast iron bells played by live performers, in addition to previously recorded music. The original soundtrack for this performance is performed by the nationally award–winning Shanghai Traditional and Minorities Instruments Symphony. Another interesting instrument that will be played is the erhu, a two–string violin played with a bow and the pipa, which is similar to the lute.

In China, acrobats occupy a special status, similar to that enjoyed by ballerinas in the United States. Over the last 2000 years, acrobatics have evolved from folk art into exercise and finally into a popular form of entertainment. Throughout that long history, the sport has also fluctuated in the courts, alternating between disdain and esteem. However, the acrobats have traditionally been adored by audiences.

Parade of Dynasties promises to be a treat of spectacular proportions for audiences of all ages and a fun learning experience.

Tickets for this performance are $15, $10 and $8. Tickets are $5 for Five College students. For more information, please call the box office at 545–2511 or 1–800– 999–UMAS

Spinanes bring minimalism to Valley

By Mike Burke
Collegian Staff

In the true spirit of minimalism, the Spinanes prove less can be more. Influenced largely by the music and soul of Beat Happening, this Portland, Or. duo has developed a compelling, intense sound with simply a guitar and drum set. That's all.

Their rise to illustrious career began with a famed debut gig as the closing act at the 1991 International Pop Underground Festival organized by K Records. Their heartfelt tune "Sad Fair Drived Women Wild" was captured on the K album commemorating the concert. Before signing to Sub Pop the Spinanes released two singles on Imp Records.

Quick on the elite Sub Pop roster, the band's ride to fame was quicker than most would imagine for a duo like the Spinanes. Their debut album, Manos, was hailed by critics and fans everywhere propelling the album to number one on the CMJ college charts, the first Sub Pop release ever to reach that plateau. Not bad for Rebecca Gates and Scott Plouf, who formed the group simply because all of their friends had bands.

Since the release of Manos the band has been forced to readjust from indie rock darlings to a recognizable face in the alternative rock music world. Even MTV picked up on the duo's music. While recording Strand the band travelled to the famed Easley Recording Studios in Memphis where Sonic Youth, Pavement and Guided By Voices have all recently recorded. Not surprisingly, the album sounds amazing.

Instead of releasing Manos Part II which surely would have done fabulous, the band choose a darker, sublime mood for the album. Many of the songs clock in at over six minutes and are full of intricate guitar work that shows a new, more evolved side of the band. The band attests that they have been listening to a lot of soul music and they wanted to create an album that reflected that.

To assist them on recreating many of the tunes on Strand live, the Spinanes will be joined by extra musicians in concert but the spirit of minimalism will still be alive. Not many bands besides Kicking Giant and God Head Silo can even pull off the two person band well, but no one can do it as beautifully and fulfilling as the Spinanes.

The Spinanes appear at the Amherst College Frontroom tonight with Elliot Smith. Tickets are $3 with an Amherst College ID and $7 for the general public. Doors open 8 p.m. Call 542–5773 for more information.

New cookbook covers the basics

By Tara MK Connelly

MERSER CHERLY
Chic Simple Cooking Tools
Alfred A. Knopf

Cooking is almost like a lost art form with people having less and less time to dedicate to culinary artistry. In fact, as gastronomic delights get pared down to minute rice and microwave wonders, some might even say that cooking — real cooking — is a thing of the past.

Chic Simple is a line of books created to turn everything from upholstering a chair to putting together a closet, a snap. They create books full of pictures and easy–to–read paragraphs so that even a child can follow them with minimal difficulty.

Author Merser Cherly adds to these line of do–it–yourself books with Chic Simple's Cooking Tools. Like a carpenter, a well–organized and professional creator of food for thought has to have the right tools. It's like trying to smooth a cement wall without a trowel, or insulating your house with cotton candy.

This book cuts to the quick, covering only the basics for those who want to create a five–star meal, but just don't have the budget for modern day gadgets. Practical, the book enables the reader to utilize what they have to its utmost potential. Divided into four simple chapters, Cherly begins with preparation work and utensils and progresses to the actually cooking of the food. The last two chapters are devoted to "first aid" tips and places to find these cooking essentials.

For the more experienced cook, this book can get a bit tedious as it is filled with a lot of common sense techniques like diagramming a garlic press and comparing the various shapes of spoons, but for the beginner this can be a Godsend especially if you want to impress someone with your kitchen prowess.

The book has a slew of colorful photographs that enhance the overall look of the book with out burdening it. Text and picture are nicely balanced throughout the book, giving the reader that extra "visual" sometimes needed when creating a culinary masterpiece.

The glossary is also a added bonus for those cooking illiterate faced with words like "julienne" and "blanch." It also offers an index of retail stores for those who want to start their own kitchen or add on. As always the language is clear and concise without being patronizing and the book is small enough to tuck away in a drawer, yet big enough that it can be read without a magnifying glass. Simply put, it's a definite kitchen staple. B+

Lee surviving 10th anniversary in film

By John Horn
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES— Spike Lee is celebrating his 10th anniversary in Hollywood with the March debut of Girl 6. Celebrating the anniversary? Surviving it might be a better word.

The insurgent and inventive filmmaker's new movie opened to poor reviews and weak sales, a planned Jackie Robinson biography just fell apart when a studio balked over its price tag and Lee's previous release, Clockers, underperformed badly at the box office.

Lee was criticized in Brazil for his participation in making a music video for Michael Jackson earlier this year. Police said a drug lord played host to Jackson and Lee when they shot the video in his Brazilian slum. Lee said they did not "knowingly" work with drug dealers.

Spike Lee and controversy is not new. The poor performance of his movies is. In its first weekend of national release, Girl 6 finished seventh on the box–office charts with sales of $2.5 million. Tellingly, its opening weekend per–screen average was worse than that of Up Close and Personal, playing in its fourth weekend.

Lee says Clockers could have done better if Universal Pictures did a better job marketing it.

"It was perceived as a 'hood' film," Lee says, meaning audiences might have thought it was an inner–city gangster film, not a character study. "I also think that in the marketing of the film the black audience — my core audience — was taken for granted.

"It was assumed that they didn't need to go after that audience: They would be there because I am black and they are black. It doesn't work that way."

Lee complains that more is expected of him than other filmmakers: because he is an outspoken squeaky wheel, his films must be superior just to be judged mediocre. Once a darling of film critics, reviewers have turned particularly nasty, and some of the Girl 6 critiques were quite personal.

"I can take any shot [any critics] want to take," Lee says. "What I will say is that a lot of times these critics don't do what their job is. And that is review the film at hand.

"A lot of times they review the persona of Spike Lee, what they feel about Spike Lee. I don't know how my being court side at Knicks games can end up in a review of my films. Look at the first movie Woody Allen made after the whole [adoption] thing. Nobody mentioned [anything]."

Part of the problem might be that Lee is overexposed and does too many TV advertisements. How can he be taken seriously as an artist, the argument goes, when Lee has gone so corporate — down to his $1,000 basketball seats?

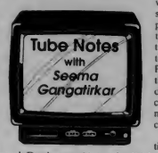
Once the sole author of his own screenplays, the 39–year–old Lee has collaborated with other writers on his last two projects. Last year's Clockers, based on the novel by Richard Price, carried a shared screenplay credit between Lee and Price.

Lee's planned collaboration with actor Denzel Washington on a Jackie Robinson film was expected to be ready in 1997, the 50th anniversary of Robinson's major league debut. It now looks like a longshot.

Ted Turner's Turner Pictures, which originally had agreed to make the Robinson film, passed on the project when Turner executives could not agree with Lee on a budget. Lee wanted $35 million and Turner wanted to spend $25 million. Lee currently is shopping the project around town but no deal has been announced. He is proceeding to make Get on the Bus, a low–budget movie based on October's Million Man March.

"If I do a film that costs $12 million, I can get it made," Lee says, adding that the budget for the Million Man March movie is just $2 million. "But if the film costs $35 million, like Jackie Robinson, I can't get it made."

Russia's last tsar subject of TV documentaries



The Oscars are among the most anticipated events on television. The awards were broadcast on ABC and Whoopi Goldberg won the not–so–coveted position of hosting the prestigious ceremonies, a vast improvement over David Letterman. Presenters included Emma Thompson, Alicia Silverstone, Jackie Chan and Pierce Brosnan.

This particular ceremony had the distinction of being the first to present a fashion show, starring supermodels from all over the world. The models, which included Fredrique and Tyra Banks, showed off the Academy–nominated designs from Sense & Sensibility, Twelve Monkeys, Braveheart and Restoration.

For decades, the fate of Nicholas II, the last Tsar of Russia, and his family has been hotly debated. Ever since the Romanovs disappeared in July of 1918, what actually happened to them has been shrouded deep in mystery, with no real answers. The mystery gave rise to several prominent impersonators, such as the famous Anna Anderson, who claimed to be Grand Duchess Anastasia.

After the fall of the communist regime in the former U.S.S.R. previously sealed files were made available and the questions were finally answered. In recent times, two films about the last Tsar and his family have been made.

The National Geographic Society produced a one hour documentary. "The Romanovs," which aired on NBC. Probably the best part of this film showed pictures and video clips of the family, some of which had never been seen before.

Unfortunately, the overall presentation was ruined by the narrator. It was almost like National Geographic went out and picked the most boring person to provide the voice– overs. Then there was the recycled footage from some epic film about the Russian Revolution. It kind of makes you wonder if the National Geographic has started to scrimp on the budget. Then there were the hollow promises to answer all those questions that have been floating around. It's too bad, but National Geographic did not do a good job with "The Romanovs."

In direct contrast, A&E's "Nicholas and Alexandra" was a marvel. Included in their version were plenty of interviews with people, "witnesses" to the events of the early part of the century and to the Romanovs themselves. The narrator for "Nicholas and Alexandra" was Prince Michael of Kent, a member of the British Royal family and a cousin of the late Tsar's, which gave him special insight into the subject, not to mention that his presence gave A&E credibility.

A&E scored big on factual information, video footage and photographs. Not only did it chronicle the love story between Nicholas and Alexandra, but it also included information that led to Nicholas's eventual downfall and later his entire family's execution.

Unlike National Geographic, A&E used its own reconstructions and later showed the investigative work that was used to eventually discover the fate of the Tsar and his family. Probably the most conclusive moment in the film was when investigators exhumed the body of Grand Duke Michael, brother of the Tsar, and, using DNA tests, conclusively proved that the remains found belonged to five members of the Tsar's family, including Anastasia.

vocals that make for pleasant background music, but nothing more. "25 December" has the same potential as "Missing," except it sounds like a cheap Simon and Garfunkel rip off.

The group may have been trotting around London since 1984, but if they ever want to make it big in the U.S. like their British counterparts, Oasis and Blur, then they should stick to the more upbeat and original, leaving the mundane to those content with one hit wonder status. D (Tara MK Connelly)

CLANNAD
Lore
Atlantic

Ephemeral voices and melodic tunes echo throughout the latest release by Irish quartet Clannad. Lore combines the groups traditional Gaelic sound with new, more contemporary songs, creating a mecca of moving and powerful pieces.

The first track, "Croi Crógа" begins with characteristic Clannad. Soft male voices chant a Gaelic rhythm, accentuating the angelic voice of Ciaran Brennan. Sung entirely in the group's native language, Brennan's voice is both warm and sophisticated.

One of the best tunes on Lore is "A Bridge (That Carries Us Over)." Written and sung in English, it is about strength and hope, and discovering dreams not far out of reach. Lyrics such as "When someone pretends to circle your friends/ You'll find its betrayal before it all ends/ A bittersweet chain not always remains/ So don't let illusions get the better of you" inspire one to believe that things will turn out for the better.

Clannad regains the sound that made them so popular with songs like "Broken Pieces" and "Trail of Tears." These two songs showcase how beautiful lyrics and enchanting music can produce a strong, yet soothing effect.

Although perhaps best known for their contribution to nationwide Volkswagen commercials a few years back, Clannad has slowly garnered fans and respect throughout the world, topping charts and winning awards. Increasingly better than their previous CDs, Lore is sure to enrapture all their listeners with its touching, sentimental songs and gain a few more fans as well. B+

COURTESY KENTUCKY MEDIA RELATIONS

the buzzer, but his shot was off the mark.

The Minutemen had come this close to knocking off one of the most prestigious college basketball programs in the country and seemed destined to one day do so. They took advantage of that chance earlier this season in the pre-season Great Eight Tournament.

Pitino's club was the preseason No. 1 and some said it would make the playoffs were it entered into the NBA. UMass was coming off an exhibition loss to the Converse All-Stars, so the Minutemen were given no chance to win this game, and in what was to become the story of this season for UMass, they won anyway.

The Minutemen jumped out to a 29-10 lead before Kentucky realized that they were actually in a game, and tied the game at the half. Unlike previous instances when the Wildcats were making their runs at them, UMass stayed composed and forced the lead back out into double digits, winning 92-82.

In four years, UMass came from not even being mentioned in the same sentence with Kentucky, to having nearly identical records since their first meeting. The Minutemen have gained the composure to contend with the national powers and have themselves considered one of the top programs in the country.

Now they have the chance to achieve their ultimate goal by beating the team that has been the measuring stick during their ride from another game on Kentucky's schedule to the game on Kentucky's schedule.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Hey batter, batter, batter...

Junior Ryan Thistle went 3 for-5 and had three RBI as the Massachusetts baseball team crushed Holy Cross, 14-3.

■ NBA

Rodman became upset with a foul called against him (what else is new?) While arguing the call Rodman was assessed a technical foul. Rodman continued his argument and actually head- butted referee Tom Barnhardt. Dennis quickly earned himself an early trip to the showers.

After reviewing a tape of the incident, NBA VP of Operations Rod Thorn suspended Dennis for six games and levied a hefty fine against him. Can't you hear the Spurs laughing now, saying to themselves, "Hey, we were actually able to get Will Perdue for him?"

Rodman's suspension angered Bulls management and teammates. Michael Jordan issued a statement that claimed he would not put up with Rodman's antics and that, "his current actions are hindering this teams agenda." Without Rodman in the lineup the Bulls have looked soft. Although they have not fallen too far off their pace, differences are evident. Will the Bulls win 70? Personally, 69 seems like their actual destination.

Spanning the "Globe"

• Although Mike Jarvis recently signed an extension at George Washington, a number of rumors have surfaced about his professional aspirations. Could Jarvis be returning to the Boston area? Could the Celtics afford not to bring back K.C. Jones?

• In realizing Eric Montross had to be placed on the injured list, Celtic GM/Coach M.L. Carr began to cruise the waiver wire. He finally settled on Todd Mundt — yes the Todd Mundt. What's up M.L., did Commissioner Stern say that you could not activate yourself?

• Has anyone seen Harold Miner?

• Orlando's Anthony Bowie should be inducted into the Hall of Shame. Bowie called a timeout with 2.7 seconds left with his team up by 20 versus the Pistons. Bowie needed one assist to record a triple-double. Detroit's Doug Collins pulled his team off the court and refused to play defense. Consequently, Collins was fined by the league for failing to have his team return to the court. Although Bowie did apologize to the entire Detroit franchise, he should have offered to pay the fine for Collins. It just goes to show how concerned "today's player" is with his own personal statistics.

• Reports out of New Jersey indicate that New Jersey Devils owner John McMullen bid $90 million for the New Jersey Nets. McMullen was subsequently admitted to the Bellevue Psychiatric Hospital in New York. Oh well...

Needless to say it will be an incredible matchup. Each team advanced after destroying their Sweet 16 and Elite Eight competition. Kentucky took care of Utah and a Wake Forest team everyone thought would give the Wildcats a run. UMass picked apart Arkansas, and then squashed any Final Four thoughts Georgetown might have had, after beating a strong Hoya team by 24.

The other national semi-final, Mississippi State-Syracuse does not provide the marquee game of UMass-UK, but the matchup is interesting.

Syracuse coach Jim Boeheim is not taking the underdog role in any game. Nor is he lacking in the confidence department.

"I think we're the best team still playing," Boeheim said.

Boeheim was not present when his team cut down the nets after its West Regional win over Kansas, which clinched the Final Four berth. Convinced he was unhappy about the game, CBS analyst Al McGuire confronted Boeheim.

"Go ahead, whine about something," McGuire said.

When Mississippi State convincingly beat Cincinnati in its regional final, the Bulldogs celebrated by putting on the t- shirts and caps the NCAA gives to the Final Four participants. Unfortunately for Richard Williams' team, the paraphernalia all said Mississippi, not Mississippi State. Whoops.

Well, if the NCAA had to mess up, it's a good thing it wasn't on something important like Final Four stuff.

• Meanwhile, the foolishness of stupid bets between the town officials of the competing sports teams has commenced.

The mayor of Starkville, Miss., Jesse Greer, and the mayor of Syracuse, N.Y., Roy Bernardi, have a bet going. If Syracuse wins, Greer will shave his head and give Bernardi a cheeseball made at Mississippi State.

If the Bulldogs win, Bernardi will give Greer a Polo shirt in Syracuse colors, a case of locally produced hot dogs, and barbecue sauces from Dinosaur Bar-B-Que Express, a favorite 'Cuse eatery.

Greer tried to get Bernardi to agree to shave his head too, but Bernardi wouldn't have anything to do with that. Why? Because Bernardi knows that Greer is bald.

The two mayors are not the only ones who have a bet going on the Orangemen–Bulldogs game. Officials at the Burnet Park Zoo in Syracuse have challenged officials at Jackson Zoo in Jackson, Miss.

If State wins, the Burnet Park Zoo will send a poster of its elephant family with a congratulatory note to Jackson. If 'Cuse wins, Jackson's 30-year-old female elephant, Marrie, will paint a picture in Syracuse colors.

• Onondaga County (NY) Executive Nicholas Pirro proclaimed this Orange Final Four Week, and urged residents to wear orange clothing, fly orange flags and decorate their homes, businesses and cars with the team colors.

• When UMass played Georgetown in the Elite Eight, filmmaker Spike Lee was on hand for the game. Wearing a Georgetown jersey with Allen Iverson's No. 3 on it, Lee was hoping for a Hoya win.

After the Minutemen won, Donta Bright was leaving the floor when he saw Lee. Immediately Bright took off his own game jersey and flipped it at Lee.

"I just wanted to let him know he was wearing the wrong jersey," Bright said.

• Cincinnati coach Bob Huggins' unique ability to annoy and complain like no other has apparently been passed on to one of his players.

After his team lost to Mississippi State in the regional finals, Cincy's Danny Fortson said that not getting to the Final Four meant he'd still have to hear about 1992's Final Four team, which starred Nick Van Exel and Corie Blount.

"It'll still gonna be Nick this and Corie that," Fortson said.

• What do Darnell Robinson, Lorenzen Wright and Stephon Marbury all have in common?

All three are goin' hardship.

Wright out of Memphis, Robinson from Arkansas and Marbury, Georgia Tech's rookie sensation, have each declared themselves eligible for June's NBA draft.

Lakers ruin Magic's home–court win streak

By Fred Goodall
Associated Press

ORLANDO, Fla. — Sitting in the losing locker room at Orlando Arena for the first time this season, Shaquille O'Neal turned philosopher.

The second longest regular-season home winning streak in NBA history was over, ruined by the Magic Johnson-led Los Angeles Lakers on a night the Orlando Magic hardly resembled themselves. Coach Brian Hill talked about the law of averages. Anfernee Hardaway suggested it may even be a blessing in disguise. O'Neal just promised that the Atlantic Division leaders will move on.

"We're not going to dwell on losing one stinking home game," the All-Star center said after the Lakers stopped Orlando's string of home-court dominance at 40 games, including 35 straight this season, with a 113-91 victory Tuesday night.

"You know, I once went five years without a flat tire. I didn't think I'd ever have a flat tire, then I got two in one week. All good things must come to an end."

But no one expected the Magic's streak, the longest in league history before Chicago won its 41st consecutive regular-season home game last week, to end the way it did.

The Lakers shot better from 3-point range (11-for-18) than Orlando did from the free-throw line (8-for-18) and beat the Magic into submission after building their lead to 14 in the third quarter.

"I haven't seen a team be that aggressive or play as well as they did all season. They kept coming at us and coming at us, especially on offense," Hardaway said. "We normally make a run on teams at some point in the game. But they have to miss or make some turnovers somewhere along the line. The Lakers never did."

Horace Grant, who had 26 points and 17 rebounds in Orlando's one-point victory over the Lakers in Los Angeles earlier this month, sat out Tuesday night because of back spasms.

The Lakers said it didn't matter.

"Even if Horace had played, we would have gotten them the way our shooters were shooting," Johnson said. "I only ended up with 14 points, but we had it all going. We were working on all cylinders."

Orlando's Dennis Scott made a game-winning 3-pointer in the earlier meeting between the teams, but was held to six points this time on 2-for-11 shooting. He missed 8 of 10 from behind the 3-point line, and the Magic were 7-for-23 overall outside the arc.

"What can I say. It's over. The law of averages says you're going to have one really bad game in your building, and we had it tonight," Hill said.

"It was an incredible streak, but losing one was bound to happen. I'm one who looks for silver linings. Maybe it's good that we lost now instead of in the playoffs. We just have to put it behind us and go out and try to start another one."

After going 39-2 at home last season, the Magic lost four times at Orlando Arena during the playoffs, including the first two games of the NBA Finals.

Now that the regular-season streak is over, O'Neal said the team can concentrate on more important things, like trying to win a championship.

The Patriots will contend for the most points surrendered in a season, and the Red Sox... well there's optimism, but a championship?

Enter the team from the Pioneer Valley.

People who previously couldn't differentiate between Northampton and The Hamptons, or would have pronounced Donta, don-TAH — now debate what position Camby will play in the NBA around the water cooler. The once proud Boston sports scene has looked west.

The feeling of a local team winning a championship can be absolutely magical, and the bragging rites last all year. EX: Oh, you go to UConn... Sorry nobody down there knew the Heimlich.

Remember last year when UCLA won it's title.

UCLA fans, your team has done it... the Sports Illustrated pitch man would say before announcing the special deal that called for $4000 off the cover price, with a free gift of a special commerative magazine and video of the UCLA Championship season.

This year, that magazine and video could be UMass. UMass fans, your team has done it...

What we don't often realize is just how lucky we are to be at this school now.

My friend Greg from Boston College and I spoke on the phone the other night.

"Well we made the tournament and won our first round game, so people around here are pretty psyched about the season," he said.

Psyched about the season?!

You got bounced in the second round. You didn't beat anyone of real consequence all year. I then realized just how high the standards of UMass fans are.

If the Minutemen had suffered a second round loss, riots would have ensued. Anything before the Elite Eight would have been devastating.

But yet at so many other schools any tournament berth is reason to celebrate.

We have become accustomed to greatness. Since that charmed Sweet Sixteen season of 1992, UMass fans have expected that a Final Four trip had to eventually be on the way.

They were right.

"Dare to dream," John Calipari told his players.

Whether or not his players are heeding his advice, the fans have been for a long time. Visions of banners are dancing in our heads.

Dreaming that when CBS plays "One Shining Moment," this year that the last image we see will be of Marcus Camby cutting a net down or Donta Bright in a National Championship jersey and cap, hugging a trophy.

It's hard to believe, but Monday night those dreams could be a reality.

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team fell to Yale, 15–4, yesterday in a game in New Haven, Conn.

Jen Bowen led the UMass scorers with her first two goals of the season. Laura Korutz and Diane MacNeil each also scored a goal for the Minutemen.

Sweeney, Wesley star for Boston teams

(AP) — Tim Sweeney's second-chance goal with 1:59 left in overtime gave the Boston Bruins a 6-5 victory Wednesday night over the skidding Hartford Whalers.

Hartford goalie Sean Burke saved Sweeney's first attempt from the left circle, then poke-checked the puck. Sweeney kicked it to his stick, and backhanded a shot by Burke's glove. Dave Reid and Rich Sutter assisted on the play for Boston, which beat Hartford for the fourth time in four games this season.

Hartford is 0-3-2 in its last five games.

The Bruins came back from deficits of 1-0, 3-1, 4-3, and 5-4. Jozef Stumpel tied the game 4-4 with a goal with 0.5 seconds left in the second period, then tied it 5-5 with 1:28 left in regulation.

Geoff Sanderson gave Hartford a 5-4 lead 2:12 into the final period on a backhander through the legs of Boston goalie Bill Ranford.

Ray Bourque had four assists and Adam Oates two for the Bruins, who are 8-1-1 in the last 10 games. Sandy Moger, Todd Elik, and Reid had goals.

The Bruins played without right winger Rick Tocchet, who missed his second straight game with back spasms. Cam Neely, Joe Mullen, Davis Payne and Dean Chynoweth were also sidelined.

Brendan Shanahan had two goals, his 38th and 39th, and an assist for the Whalers. Robert Kron and Glen Wesley also had goals.

Rangers 7, Red Sox 4

Kevin Mitchell homered twice for Boston, but Kevin Elster and Mickey Tettleton had homers among 14 Texas hits as the Rangers beat the Red Sox 7-4 Wednesday.

Elster's two-run homer in the fifth off Bryan Eversgerd broke open the game.

Mitchell's homers were his first of the spring. He played in Japan last year and didn't sign with the Red Sox until after the start of spring training, reporting March 12.

Wil Cordero also homered for Boston.

The teams open the season against each other, so both held back their opening-day starters to avoid giving away a scouting advantage. Roger Clemens worked out at Boston's minor league camp, allowing three home runs in six innings as he struck out eight and walked two.

Ken Hill pitched for the Rangers' Double-A team against their Triple-A team, going six innings and allowing two runs.

To the fans that gave him a healthy ovation after he homered twice on Tuesday, Kevin Mitchell is ready for the regular season. But the former NL MVP isn't convinced. "I'm not going to lie to you, I'm not ready," the Red Sox right fielder said after hitting his first two home runs of the spring in Boston's 7-4 exhibition loss to the Texas Rangers. "One day doesn't prove nothing," he said. "You'll know when I'm ready: I'll be hitting the ball like Mo Vaughn."

After playing in Japan last year, Mitchell signed as a free agent with the Red Sox on March 8 and didn't report until March 12. Because of the late start, he agreed to accept a minor-league assignment if manager Kevin Kennedy doesn't feel he's prepared for opening day.

Sending Mitchell down temporarily would give Kennedy some flexibility with his roster as he makes some difficult decisions among the likely reserves. But he's not about to leave a potentially devastating hitter behind unless he needs to.

"We'll let the next couple of days dictate what we're going to do," Kennedy said. "This was pretty encouraging. He really turned the corner today."

Mitchell feuded with his Japanese club after they doubted the severity of his knee injury. He also came to Boston with a reputation as a clubhouse troublemaker.

But he hasn't shown the slightest sign of a problem since joining the Red Sox.

He has been coming in early to take extra batting practice, a work ethic that elicited raves from Kennedy. Mo Vaughn, one of four Red Sox players who lobbied management to sign Mitchell, has taken him under his wing.

And even though he will be paid by the plate appearance — $3,000 each, to be exact — he said he would be willing to stay in Florida past the start of the season if that's the manager's decision. "I'm in no situation to be bitching and moaning about anything," he said. "I don't want to go out there and embarrass myself, which I have been doing. I realize now how important spring training is."

Mitchell had been 5-for-29 this spring before going 2-for-4 against Texas. He had also homered in a minor-league game, but finished 1-for-9 in that at-bat refresher course.

And even with Wednesday's explosion, Mitchell admits he needs more time.

"I'm still working on it, but I feel I made a big jump," he said. "It might be just around the corner. And I'll know when I'm there."

Celtics 121, Timberwolves 116

Dee Brown and David Wesley hit five 3-pointers in a three-minute span of the second half and Boston overcame Kevin Garnett's career-high 33 points in a 121-116 victory Wednesday night over Minnesota.

Rick Fox had 26 points to lead the Celtics, who placed seven players in double figures. Wesley added 20 and Brown 17.

Another Rookie of the Year for LA?

By Ben Walker
Associated Press

Never mind the pressure of hoping to impress Tom Lasorda or trying to fit into a lineup that won the NL West last season. No, the real pressure on Todd Hollandsworth may come from the past. After all, it'll probably be up to him to keep alive the Los Angeles Dodgers' streak of producing the NL Rookie of the Year. The Dodgers have turned out the last four, those being Eric Karros, Mike Piazza, Raul Mondesi and Hideo Nomo. No team has had more — in fact, it's called the Jackie Robinson Award in honor of the Dodgers player who won the first award in 1947.

Hollandsworth, 23 in April, made his major league debut last season and hit five home runs in 103 at-bats. He'll start in left field, having beaten out once-promising Billy Ashley, and will try to extend the Dodgers' rookie streak to five in a row.

A look at other top rookies on the rise as the season starts:

Catcher: Jason Kendall. The son of former big league catcher Fred Kendall, this Pittsburgh prospect is trying to make the jump from Double-A to the majors at age 21. He was the Southern League MVP last season.

First Base: Tony Clark. The 6-foot-7 former college basketball player is hoping Detroit will make someday make a spot for him by moving Cecil Fielder to DH. A power hitter who strikes out a lot.

Second Base: Felipe Crespo. After losing Roberto Alomar to free agency, Toronto gets another switch-hitter from the minors. Good hitter with power at Triple-A, but needs defensive improvement.

Shortstop: Derek Jeter and Rey Ordonez. The best two shortstop prospects play in New York. Jeter, at 21, hits line drives, shows a strong arm and has strong All-Star potential for the Yankees. Ordonez, at 23, will be the majors' fanciest fielder if his bat keeps him with the Mets.

Third Base: Ron Coomer. Another power product of the Dodgers' system, was traded to Minnesota in deal for Kevin Tapani. Could end up at first base for Twins.

Outfield: Butch Huskey, Dwayne Hosey, Ernie Young. Huskey, once out of favor with Mets because of weight problems, hit a ton in spring training and may have earned job in right field. Hosey has done most everything right in the minors and is finally getting a chance at 28 to play center for Boston. Young is ready at 26 after developing power in Oakland system.

Pitchers: Jason Schmidt, Paul Wilson, Alan Benes, Terry Adams. Schmidt is said to be set at 23 to become Atlanta's No. 5 starter. Wilson, a former No. 1 Mets' draft pick, led minor leagues in strikeouts last season. Benes is one of three brothers in St. Louis system. Adams being groomed as Cubs closer.

• Injuries to Tony Fernandez and Benji Gil have the Yankees and Texas Rangers doing some late shopping, and both teams have been looking toward Seattle where smooth Felix Fermin is available.

Fermin, a one-time starter and now a backup on the Mariners, can play either shortstop or second base. The Yankees want someone at second while Fernandez is sidelined and Pat Kelly is recovering, and perhaps would want to send oddman-out pitcher Scott Kamieniecki to Seattle. But the Mariners may not want to take on his $1 million-plus salary. The Rangers need a shortstop after losing Gil, although they signed infielders Jeff Frye and Spike Owen to minor league contracts this week.

The Orioles, after picking up Tony Tarasco as an extra outfielder this month, are looking for a backup catcher. Toronto's Randy Knorr is a possibility. Gold Glover Tom Pagnozzi of St. Louis might also be available, at a higher price.

• Never too early for a little gamesmanship, as Boston and Texas showed this week. Roger Clemens and Ken Hill, who will pitch against each other on opening day, were scheduled to make their final exhibition starts Wednesday in a Red Sox-Rangers game. But managers Kevin Kennedy of Boston and Johnny Oates of Texas held them out of the regular "A" game and instead had them pitch in a minor league matchup between the teams. Neither manager wanted to give the other club's top hitters a chance to see the No. 1 pitchers too often.

• Seattle already has played Ken Griffey and Ken Griffey Jr. How about Trey Griffey, the 22-month old son of the Mariners' top player?

A few months after Trey was born, Mariners general manager Woody Woodward sent Trey a blank contract dated 2012, when his dad will be 43.

"Junior's one comment was, 'We're going to have to renegotiate. It's not enough money,' " Woodward said, chuckling.

Pretty soon, Trey should be playing T-ball.

"He has plans for Trey next year," said Junior's wife, Melissa. "He's a little too young right now."

The Student Union Art Gallery Will Close May 1996

Unless we let the SGA know how important the Gallery is to undergraduates

For years, the Student Union Art Gallery has been dedicated to providing opportunities to undergraduate artists and art administrators. Today the SUAG is the only Art Gallery on campus run by students for students. The Student Government Association plans to cut allocations to the SUAG by some $6,500. These cuts will result in the closing of the only gallery that is run by students. Let the SGA know that the student Union Art Gallery is important to you.

Call them at 545-0341
The future of our gallery depends on it.

The Student Art Gallery is sponsored in part by the UMASS Arts Council.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE

ARIES (March 21 – April 19) — Work projects can be taken to a higher level of success. Avoid letting a fear of abandonment get the best of you. Act confident about a romantic relationship's future.

TAURUS (April 20 – May 20) — Talks could reveal the hidden side of a relationship. Be willing to build on what exists rather than fantasizing about the "ideal" partner.

GEMINI (May 21 – June 20) — End a relationship that has not lived up to its promise. Analyze what is behind a hastily-reached agreement.

CANCER (June 21 – July 22) — Direct action will bring the best results at work. Refuse to stay in a harmful situation. A friend's kindness boosts your morale.

LEO (July 23 – Aug. 22) — The emphasis now is on supporting your partner or mate's ambitions. Be prepared to play second banana if necessary. Go alter the things you want, rather then waiting for them to fall into your lap.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 – Sept. 22) — Adopting a positive attitude helps you appreciate what you have. A common- sense approach coupled with intuitive insights, makes you unbeatable! Stay out of disputes that arise at work or home.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 – Oct. 22) — Networking is the key to finding new clients or job leads. Corporate head-hunters can be helpful too. Update your image along with your resume.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 – Nov. 21) — Challenging social situations bring out the best in you. Avoid going overboard. Taking other people's problems onto your own shoulders will not help them learn how to cope.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 – Dec. 21) — Your timing may be off today. An alliance requires careful nurturing if it is to last. Favors performed now will bring handsome returns in the future.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 – Jan. 19) — Trust your instincts. You will know what to say at the right time. It is senseless to worry about things over which you have no control.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 – Feb. 18) — Interruptions cannot always be prevented. Work at home if doing so will help you meet an important deadline. Check the financial figures before plunging into a new business venture.

PISCES (Feb. 19 – March 20) — Work overtime to finish a major assignment. An inexperienced person is eager to learn. Offer encouragement as well as practical tips.

Donta Bright and the UMass squad is looking to dismantle the Wildcats' attack, as they did early in the season, on Saturday in the Final Four.

UMass–UK rivalry nothing new

By Justin C. Smith
Collegian Staff

How quickly things change.

Just four short years ago the basketball programs of the Universities of Kentucky and Massachusetts met for the first time, at Rupp Arena, for a high-quality non-conference contest, something John Calipari now is renowned for. When the game was first scheduled, he may not have known the significance of what he had done, though to the Wildcats it may have had none.

The first meeting was in 1991, a 90-69 win for the Wildcats as they whipped a little talented but big-hearted UMass squad. The difference between the two teams may have been as large as the score indicates, but using Kentucky as a measuring stick, its evident how far the Minutemen have come since that day in early December.

These teams met later on that season in a place that UMass had not been in 30 years, the NCAA tournament.

Though UMass was the No. 3 seed in the East, not many people gave the Minutemen a chance to advance to the Regionals and no one thought they could match up with mighty Kentucky. Those nay-sayers had everything to back up their claim with 5:23 left in the first half as an Andre Riddick dunk brought the Wildcat lead to 20, 44–24.

The Minutemen dug deep and clawed back into the game getting the lead into single digits at half-time. When Jim McCoy launched a 60-foot bomb that banked in as time expired, UMass had finished the half on a 18-6 run to trail by only eight and have momentum squarely on its side entering the second half. And the break couldn't sway the Minutemen storm that was wreaking havoc on Rick Pitino's crew.

Kentucky's 21-point first-half lead had dwindled to two at 60-58 on a Will Herndon lay-up with 12:26 remaining, and UMass stayed close until the call that may have been the difference in the season.

With 5:47 left and the Minutemen trailing 72-68, Calipari was called for a technical foul for leaving the coach's box along the UMass bench. The game unraveled from there as the Minutemen committed as many turnovers as made field goals for the next four minutes. By that time Kentucky's lead was 11 and time had run out on UMass. It had been a valiant effort by a young team and its coach who was still building for bigger and better heights.

In a mid-season non-conference tilt between No. 7 Kentucky and No. 11 UMass in Feb. of 1994 the teams showed how comparable they were. It also had many similarities to their previous meeting, as well as showing how far UMass had come since that time.

The Minutemen trailed 27-18 with 7:40 left in the first half, but held Kentucky without a field goal until the buzzer ending the first 20 minutes sounded. UMass outscored the Wildcats 18-2 in that span including a three-pointer by Edgar Padilla from the top of the key with less than a second remaining. Unfortunately the similarities didn't end there for Calipari's team.

The UMass coach received a technical in the middle of a 18-7 Wildcat run that put the Minutemen behind for the first time since late in the first half. This time UMass was not phased and led by four with 2:21 remaining but couldn't finish the job as Kentucky scored the final seven points. Donta Bright did have a chance to tie the game at

Women's gymnastics to host Atlantic 10s

By Steven Grant
Collegian Staff

The first phase is complete. The regular season is over for the Massachusetts women's gymnastics team, and the Atlantic 10 Championship is set to take place tomorrow, at Curry Hicks Cage at 2 p.m. And it's safe to say the Minutewomen will be ready for it.

Currently, the team is 6-4 overall, with a 2-0 record in the A-10. But more importantly, the team's average score is an impressive 190.559 going in to tomorrow's championship. The team has maintained a consistent high score all season long, and were even nationally ranked for a short time earlier in the season.

Coach Dave Kuzara has certainly not shied away from tough opponents. In their first seven meets, the Minutewomen faced Michigan, then ranked third in the country, Oregon State, then ranked seventh, and Alabama, currently the No. 1 team in the nation.

A quick look at the individual season-best lists show just how deep and talented UMass really is. On the vault, there is three-way tie for the best mark. Senior LJ. Tolhurst, who had been plagued with injury for much of the season, junior Lianne Laing and freshman Denise Johnson all have earned a 9.850 in the event on separate occasions.

Tara Swartz, a junior, managed a 9.950 on the uneven bars against Bridgeport for not-only the team season record, but the best score in school history. Swartz, one of the squad's most consistent performers, also has the team's best all- around total, with a score of 38.750. Swartz tallied that score against Temple on March 16 to close out the regular season.

The Minutewoman with the best score on the balance beam this season is freshman Anita Sanyal, who registered a 9.800 against Bridgeport. Despite Sanyal's and Johnson's inexperience at this level, the two have performed even better than many had predicted.

Floor exercise honors go to stand-out Laing. On February 26th, against Eastern Michigan, the junior scored a 9.9 in front of the home crowd.

As far as team season bests are concerned, three of the six scores are school records. Two season-bests were set against both New Hampshire and Rhode Island. Against the Rams, the team totalled a 48.050 on the balance beam, while its team total was a season-high of 191.775. Both were school records.

At home against the Wildcats, the team set the season-high on the uneven bars with a 48.075, and the 48.575 on the floor exercise was also the best mark of the year, not to mention the best ever for UMass.

The vault squad by no means backed down from top- ranked Alabama, as the 48.650 it scored was the best on the season to date.

The A-10 Championships will be followed by the NCAA Northeast Regional at State College, Pa. on April 13, and the NCAA Championship on April 25-27, to be held in Tuscaloosa, Alabama.

Thistle & crew win easy over Holy Cross

By Matt Vautour
Collegian Staff

Ever since Holy Cross dropped athletic scholarships, the Massachusetts football team has pounded the Crusaders regularly, and a quick look at the UMass–Holy Cross score from yesterdays afternoon looks like it happened again.

Massachusetts	14
Holy Cross	3

It was however the UMass baseball team that drubbed the Crusaders 14-3 at Fitton Field.

Holy Cross held true to its record with the loss, falling to 0-7 on the early season while the Minutemen continued their non-conference success improving to 7-4.

The win extends the Minutemen's season long winning streak to four games dating back to a March 21 win over Niagara in Fort Myers, Fla.

One player that can relate to the football conquests is freshman designated hitter Doug Clark, who doubles as a wide receiver for the Minutemen gridiron crew. Clark showed why he is a DH, knocking out his first career homerun to go along with three RBI.

While it was a long game for the home team, it was a short afternoon for starting hurler Jason Jenkins, who was shelled by the Minutemen, and got the hook before the first inning was even over. In all, the Crusader staff sent six pitchers to the mound in the rout.

Freshman righty Adam Robinson earned his first collegiate win in the victory, working six innings, giving up just one run on four hits.

Massachusetts collected seven runs in the opening frame to render the remaining eight innings irrelevant. Thirteen Minutemen batted in the inning, but Holy Cross did most of the damage to themselves, committing an error, a wild pitch and a passed ball to go along with two walks and two hit batsmen.

After a day-off Tuesday against Boston College, third baseman Ryan Thistle made the most of his start at the hot corner. The junior went 3-for-5 with three RBI and two runs scored to lead the Minutemen.

Muchie Daglliere and Nate Murphy each added two hits as well.

The Minutemen will keep their road swing rolling this afternoon, when they head down Route 91 to battle the Hawks of Hartford. The first pitch will be at 3 p.m. at Ray McKenna Field.

Odd bets surround Final Four

And then there were four.

Sixty-four teams started this Dance, and four remain, trying to waltz their way into history.

After last weekend's Sweet 16 and Elite Eight match-ups, the field was narrowed to four: Mississippi State in the Southeast, Syracuse in the West, Kentucky in the Midwest, and Massachusetts in the East. It is the first time since 1990 that no coach in the Final Four has ever won a title before.

Casey Kane on College Basketball

Kentucky-UMass is being billed as the real national championship game, as critics are dismissing the Mississippi State-Syracuse matchup as the junior varsity game.

Despite UMass' 92-82 win over UK in the Great Eight, early in the season, each team is approaching this game carefully. Wildcat coach Rick Pitino has given his team the role of the underdog, going against the odd-makers' tide.

"I think they have in Marguritaville too long," Pitino has said about the odd-makers making his team the favorite to take it all. "Maybe they should concentrate on other areas, because two of the three teams in this Final Four beat us."

Pitino, who played for UMass in his undergraduate days, credits Calipari with rebuilding the Minutemen program. According to the New York Daily News, Pitino says that Calipari is one of the great rebuilders in college basketball history, along with John Thompson at Georgetown, Jerry Tarkanian at UNLV and Dick Vitale at Detroit. Detroit?

Calipari is downplaying the early-season win over the Wildcats, saying both teams are completely different now than what they were before. The UMass coach is apparently sticking with the oddsmakers.

"They're saying we will move mountains before we beat Kentucky," Calipari said. "But we're used to being the underdog."

Calipari's players, though, know that Kentucky is beatable.

"We beat them once," guard Edgar Padilla said. "We're looking forward to beating them again.

For UMass fans, dreams could become reality this weekend

The Daily Hampshire Gazette's Milt Cole has been covering UMass sports for 800 years.

He loves the University and has been seated on press row at UMass, before the Mullins Center was ever conceived... before UMass basketball was even remotely good.

So last year as I watched the Minutemen collapse against Oklahoma State, I sympathized with Milt.

I thought that last year was UMass' best chance to go to the Final Four. I figured that with Lou Roe and Derek Kellogg graduating the 1995-96 team would be pretty good, but not nearly as good as last year's team.

I figured that with Milt getting up there in years, he may have barely missed his chance to cover a Final Four.

Shows how much I know...

Instead of being pretty good, this year's team has gone above and beyond last year's team, and when the game tips off at the Meadowlands Saturday night, Milt Cole will be there, covering the Final Four that he has deserved for so long.

Milt won't be the only one either.

This team has offered the Bay State its best chance for sports glory since the Celtics still had the only player ever to have a blond afro.

The Bruins are fighting for the last playoff spot, while the Celtics are fighting for the last lottery spot.

Ceballos leaves Lakers unannounced

Over the past week and a half the NCAA tournament has overshadowed several interesting events in the world of pro basketball. Dennis Rodman (a.k.a The Missing Link) accidentally mistook the hardwood of the Meadowlands for the squared circle of the WWF, and the Spurs took off on a 14-game winning streak and the Toronto Raptors knocked off the Chicago Bulls. However, nothing was more peculiar than Cedric Ceballos' unexcused four day excursion from the Los Angeles Lakers.

Last Friday, Ceballos deserted his team unexpectedly. While early reports simply stated Ceballos was AWOL, the Lakers had absolutely no idea where he was. Ceballos, a Laker co-captain, eventually surfaced over the weekend in Lake Havasu, Arizona and was recently reinstated by management. To say he was welcomed back with open arms would be like saying the majority of this campus wants Kentucky to win on Saturday. Teammates gave Ceballos the cold shoulder and went about their own business.

Darren Cohen on NBA

While Ceballos did apologize to his teammates, he offered no explanation for his actions saying only that he "had some very personal and family problems to deal with." Sorry to hear that Cedric, but why not say anything, anything at all to management, the coaching staff or a teammate?

In short, the biggest problem here is Ceballos' attitude. Later reports indicated Ceballos was upset over playing time (he is only 2nd or 3rd on the team in minutes) and was having trouble getting out of a mini-slump.

Grow up Cedric — this is life. In life people face their problems and deal with them the best they can each day. They do not go off to Lake "Have-no-excuse" unannounced without telling a soul. Can you imagine if Shaquille O'Neal got up and left the Magic for a few days? (Maybe he would work on his foul shooting?)

One would think Ceballos's case of ignorance was the only one over the past two weeks. Well...

Leave it up to Rodman's personality to ruin a good thing. Two weeks ago the Chicago Bulls were rolling along in their quest to win 70 games. Then, Dennis happened. In a recent game versus the New Jersey Nets

Clinton releases plan for West Bank

WASHINGTON (AP) — An emergency plan to ease Israel's restrictions on Palestinians on the West Bank and Gaza was adopted Thursday and announced by the Clinton administration.

Israel will permit construction material and Egyptian trucks to pass through checkpoints so that people in hard-pressed Gaza can get back to work. Citrus and other exports from the territories will be shipped to the outside world from Israel and Jordan. Secretary of State Warren Chnstopher announced the plan at the opening of a two-day conference of 27 nations called to provide protection for Israel against terrorism.

The plan, which also includes an emergency meeting of donor nations to be called in the next few days, responds to parallel pleas from European allies and the Palestinian Authority to consider the impact of the security measures taken by Israel after a series of deadly suicide bombings.

Christopher telephoned Israeli Prime Minister Shimon Peres and Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat to obtain their approval before making the announcement.

Default averted; House compromises

WASHINGTON (AP) — Working against a midnight Friday deadline, the House today adopted legislation averting a first-ever federal default. Lawmakers also struggled to craft a compromise on a second measure preventing another partial government shutdown.

The House voted 328-91 to extend federal borrowing authority through September 1997. Senate passage and President Clinton's signature, both expected Friday, are required.

As a prelude to passage of the debt bill, the House approved, 232-177, a companion resolution giving the president veto authority to strip individual items from spending bills.

In a deal worked out in advance with the Clinton administration, the line-item measure was packaged with the debt ceiling bill and two other unrelated measures.

One would permit Social Security recipients who continue working after age 65 to keep more of their benefits. The other would provide small businesses with new authority to challenge government regulations in court.

Flaherty fined $12,500 over ethics violations; resignation due

BOSTON (AP) — The State Ethics Commission dished out $12,500 in fines Thursday to a trade group, a lobbying firm and a businessman who gave House Speaker Charles Flaherty free vacation lodging in the early 1990s.

Meanwhile, the Statehouse was quiet the day after Flaherty admitted to tax evasion and ethics violations and announced he would step down June 30. While some fretted about the impact a presiding felon could have on the legislative agenda, the speaker's supporters predicted smooth sailing.

"It will be business as usual around here," said one lawmaker, a Flaherty supporter, who requested anonymity. "June is just fine with everyone here."

Flaherty has paid $1,000 of his State Ethics Commission fine, and set up a schedule to pay off the rest of the $26,000 penalty over a three-year period, in monthly installments.

Also, he owes $24,200 to the federal government under the plea bargain he entered. The 57-year-old Cambridge Democrat is due in federal court next Wednesday to plead guilty to a count of tax evasion stemming from a 1987 Internal Revenue Service audit. When asked for documentation of business expenses he declared in 1983, Flaherty signed a false affidavit and submitted as evidence a diary that wasn't his, and had been altered.

The state ethics charges stem from Flaherty's free use of vacation homes on 62 days between July 1990 and August 1992; the value was estimated at $13,175.

The commission said Robert Cataldo arranged for Flaherty to vacation in a Newport, R.I. condominium owned by Abraham Gosman, the controlling shareholder in Mediplex, a company with business before the Legislature. Cataldo, who sat on the board of Mediplex, was fined $7,500.

Flaherty stayed in Gosman's condo on five occasions from April 1991 to 1992.

Two firms were cited for hosting Flaherty, other legislators and lobbyists at weekend-long July Fourth parties in Kennebunkport, Maine.

Associated Industries of Massachusetts, an organization of some 3,000 businesses, was fined $2,000 for sponsoring the parties in 1990 and 1991.

The Boston Globe wrote in an editorial that it agreed with Flaherty's reasoning that he should remain for the next three months to ensure that the state budget is handled smoothly. GOP legislators plan to bring an order to vacate the speaker's post to the House floor in its next formal session — which apparently won't be for a while; the House clerk's office said none are scheduled until at least a week from Monday.

Final Four fuels tee-shirt frenzy

By Michael Clifford
Collegian Correspondent

EMILY BEAT COLLEGIAN

Fans wanting to show their support for the UMass minutemen basketball team scramble to buy Final Four memorabilia.

The University of Massachusetts men's basketball team will shoot for victory at the Final Four Saturday, but the University Store and area retailers are already victorious.

The news that UMass made it to the NCAA Final Four tournament led to the sale of nearly 3,000 tee-shirts outside the University Store as of yesterday, with countless University Store catalog orders pouring in, according to University Store Managers Mary Ellen Martin and David Curley.

"Overall sales are also up, including the non-basketball merchandise," Martin said.

Sales are obviously brisk. Prospective student tour participants such as incoming freshman Heidi Marcotte couldn't help but be tempted with the display. "I've already bought four caps, two sweat-shirts and six tee-shirts for my friends back home — in Connecticut," she said.

University Store employees were in constant motion until closing. "I've had nearly each customer buy four or five shirts," said store employee Beth Pacheco.

Team pride and confidence is so high among store management that more than 50,000 National Championship tee-shirts are due to arrive next week to satisfy the public's frenzy for UMass apparel.

Many customers like undergraduate Scott Redding, expect to do more shopping after this weekend. "I'm buying shirts for my family. we're long time fans."

Though the sales from the University Store do not directly affect students, income generated from sales will benefit the University's Auxiliary Services as well as help defray the costs of increased license fees.

Off-campus retailers should not be overlooked as UMass' recent achievements and resulting boost in popularity has put smiles on the faces store managers at retailers such as JCPenney and Champs, both of the Hampshire Mall.

"UMass merchandise sales have been steadily increasing over the past four to five years, and as a result we have been continually expanding the size of our Sports Department," said Quentin Potter, assistant store manager. "Though its rather early in the season to tell, I would say a 25-30 percent increase of UMass merchandise sales is very likely. We're very pleased."

From Mullins to Kentucky, UMass mania spreads

By Daniel Sullivan
Collegian Staff

UMass Mania has hit the University. From the Mullins Center, to residence life and Public Safety, to the accounting department.

Kentucky Bourbon or Sam Adams

The proud UMass' accounting department refuses to back down from challenges, even bets from the University of Kentucky accounting department.

Kentucky Assistant Professor Art Goldman sent an open invitation fax to the UMass accounting department challenging a friendly wager. Dennis Hanno found the letter and agreed to the bet of the winning school's professor sending a school t-shirt to the losing accounting department.

Ron Mannino has to wear the shirt because the bet makes it be in front of the largest class possible," Hanno said. "His class has 300 students in it."

If Mannino ends up wearing a Kentucky shirt, he has to send a photo to Goldman proving it. The class is video taped and will be recorded for posterity if the team loses, said Mannino.

"I'm not a bit worried," Mannino said. "I will not have to wear it."

Mannino, wearing a UMass t-shirt, prepared his class to help the UMass squad by beginning class with a quick meditation.

The bet was raised to include the losing school sending the other a drink representative of the state. With a UMass victory, the accounting department would be sent Kentucky bourbon. Kentucky would receive a case of Sam Adams.

Mannino is prepared to enjoy the trophy, he said. "I'm going to call them up and remind them that we want it," he said. "We are going to drink it in the faculty lounge."

Shipping time will prevent the schools from receiving the beverages in time for the final game, Hanno said.

The new rivalry between departments is likely to continue, said Hanno, who explained that accounting departments frequently attend conventions and the professors involved in the bet are likely to meet, Hanno said.

"It doesn't bother me," Mannino said. "It is a lot of fun and very easy to do."

Kentucky professors are equally confident in their team, said Hanno.

The class is video taped and will be recorded for posterity if the team loses, said Mannino.

"We've got a fan from them saying, 'Everyone is very excited at this end,'" said Hanno.

Mullins Center open

Fans may watch Saturday's game on two large-screen TVs at the Mullins Center at 5 p.m. The first 500 fans with a valid student identification card will get a free UMass Final Four t-shirt. There will be prizes and giveaways at the open event.

Residence life is working with the Mullins Center to encourage students to go to the stadium, said Linda Keith, acting assistant director for residence life. She said she wants students to make the team proud by acting respectfully, she said.

"The resident assistants are encouraged to take people to the Mullins Center," Keith said. "Some resident assistants are celebrating in the residents halls and are ordering Kentucky Fried Chicken," in reference to UMass' opponent.

Residence halls locked

Preparation for violence is another aspect of the game, according to Keith. Resident halls will be locked at 5 p.m. Saturday until Tuesday morning to guard against unwanted guests, said Keith.

"We are calling all hands on deck," Keith said. "There will be more presence working to watch violence. We are asking students to behave and show they are the 'Classiest fans in the Nation' as coach Calipari has said."

Senate meeting addresses issues of safety, athletes

By Jonathan Liberty
Collegian Staff

Campus safety, labor union contracts and student athletes were some of the topics discussed at yesterday's regular meeting of the Faculty Senate.

"We want the campus to be as safe as possible for everyone," said Vice Chancellor of the Office of Student Affairs Tom Robinson.

Robinson has been working on a project with Student Government Association (SGA) President Christine Lopes, Chief of Police Jack Luippold and Dean of Students Jo-Anne Vanin. "Safety On Our Campus" postcards are being mailed to students to inform them of campus safety tips. Programs on campus safety will start in the fall semester.

Secretary of the Faculty Senate John Bracey suspended the rules of the Faculty Senate to create a motion in support of the unsettled University Staff Association's (USA) and the International Brotherhood of Police Officers' (IBPO) unsettled labor union contracts.

"We need to make sure that everyone has a decent living wage in return for their labor," stated Bracey. "It is virtually immoral not to give the campus police and the staff a fair wage."

Leo Richards, president of the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP) said, "We need to reaffirm our support in the strongest way possible for the still unsettled USA and IBPO contracts."

The motion was directed to the University administration and board of trustees. The Faculty Senate passed the motion unanimously.

Bracey also spoke in support of student athletes.

"Perhaps a morning lecture might not compare to being on national television. Of course, professors must not compromise the students' education, but they must be sensitive to their situation."

Bracey and other senators are presently meeting with the athletic department and council to find methods for dealing with the dynamic of student athletes in the future.

"[Professors] need to be aware that these students that are missing classes are 19, 20 and 21 years old. They may be extremely talented, but they are still growing up," said Bracey.

Much of the discussion at the meeting dealt with the Provost Patricia Crosson's Academic Program Review (APR).

The APR consolidates and restructures all of the campus departments according to four criteria — cost, demand, quality and centrality.

After receiving a great deal of feedback from many departments, a revised report of the APR by Chancellor David K. Scott and Crosson was created and later passed.

Many senators stressed the need for systematic reviews Crosson disagreed stating that regular reviews lead to stagnation. Yet, she did agree to look at APR options for the future.

The Senate debated the language of a motion which required that graduate programs affected by the APR continue allowing students to complete their degrees without any diminution of material and financial resources. After 45 minutes of debate, the motion was passed unanimously.

President William Bulger is tentatively scheduled to meet with the Faculty Senate on May 9th.

Steve Grossman praises Zionists

By Bryan C. Schwartzman
Collegian Staff

On Wednesday night, Steve Grossman, the chairman of AIPAC (American Israeli Public Affairs Committee) gave an address in the Campus Center basement entitled "U.S. Israel relations and the Middle East Peace Process: The Inside Story." The event was sponsored by Zionists for Action and University of Massachusetts Hillel.

Kim Richman, a UMass student and AIPAC Liaison introduced the speaker. Before turning the floor over to Grossman, Richman urged the audience to attend the upcoming AIPAC conference in Washington on April 28th.

Grossman immediately expressed his excitement to be at UMass and his appreciation for the work of the Zionists for Action group. He specifically acknowledged the group's officers Adam Buxbaum, Elana Silverman and Kim Richman.

Grossman stated that AIPAC is active on over 210 college campuses and more than 1,000 students attended last year's conference, which featured a meeting between Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin and President Bill Clinton. Clinton will again be in attendance on April 28th, along with Shimon Peres and King Hussein of Jordan, the first Arab leader to be invited to the conference. Grossman said, "The most important reason to come to Washington is to lobby, to visit your members of congress, and use your right as a member of a free and democratic society."

> "The most important reason to come to Washington is to lobby, to visit your members of congress, and use your right as a member of a free and democratic society."
> – Steve Grossman

Grossman cited Israel's economic, diplomatic and militarily strength as a means by which Israel can negotiate in the peace process from a position of strength. He stated that in 1991 Israel had diplomatic relations with only 91 countries, while today it has established relations with 157 countries. He cited the 1996 gross national product (GNP) of Israel at $90 billion, and said the unemployment rate for society Jews has dropped from 33 percent.

Grossman said that the late Prime Minister Rabin did not fear defeat on the battlefield for his country, he feared acts of terrorism and weapons of mass destruction. Grossman emphasized the importance of the United States's bipartisan support for Israel and the peace process "precisely because of a sportive administration that Israel has secured the resources, both financial and administrative, which give them the courage to search for peace."

According to Grossman, Iran is a major threat to Israeli and US security describing Iran as "A country that has no notion of peace, that rejects agreements between Israeli-Palestine and is intent on securing weapons of mass destruction."

Grossman advocated the passing of the Iran Foreign Oil Sanctions act which was passed hy the Senate in December and will be up for consideration in the House. The law would attempt to give our government "tools to levy sanctions on oil field assistant or companies that invest more than $40 million in Iranian oil fields." He also mentioned the Anti Terrorism Bill, but stressed we should contact members of congress to make sure their are no provisions in the bill which are contrary to civil liberties.

Grossman assured the audience that the majority of Israelis and Palestinians still support the peace process. "The ball is in Arafat's court, he can't be expected to stop all suicide bombers, but can be expected to give 100 percent effort." He said the PLO covenant must be amended because 29 out of 33 clauses called for the destruction of Israel.

In response to a question asking what can be done to combat anti–Semitism on campus, Grossman said "Individuals can make a difference, don't underestimate the value of a phone call to congress."

He added, "Racism, bigotry and anti-Semitism have no place on a college campus and should be spoken out against wherever they appear."

One audience member adamantly disagreed with Grossman saying that members of the Israeli community praised Baruch Goldstein when he massacred dozens of Palestinians and stated that AIPAC keeps track of Muslim students on college campus. Grossman denied that AIPAC "keeps tabs on anybody" and said the political parties which supported extremist actions are illegal in Israel as well as the United States.

Daughter of UMass prof killed; India bus accident claims 5 lives

AMHERST (AP) — Sara Schewe who died in a bus crash in India, developed her interest in foreign cultures through her cosmopolitan parents, a family friend said Thursday.

Her father, Charles Schewe, is a marketing professor at the University of Massachusetts who has taken sabbaticals in Sweden. Her mother, Anne, imports rugs from around the world.

"Her family was quite internationally minded, and they are really citizens of the world in terms of their interest and knowledge," said the family friend, Thomas O'Brien.

O'Brien is dean of the School of Management, where Schewe teaches. O'Brien's son also car pooled with Schewe's daughter when both children were high school students at Deerfield Academy. Sara, 20, a junior majoring in business at Georgetown University, was one of five American students killed when their tour bus rolled into a ditch Thursday en route to the Taj Mahal, the U.S. Embassy in New Delhi said.

The trip was part of the University of Pittsburgh's Semester at Sea program. Participating students travel around the world and study.

Sara Schewe's godmother, Wendy Kohler of Amherst, said she was a talented student, artist and athlete. She played tennis, field hockey, and skied.

"She was a poised, beautiful young woman full of such promise," said Kohler.

She said the child had called home a few days ago and said she was happy with the international tour.

Women's studies alums speak at forum

By Hannah Thorne
Collegian Staff

"Different Paths and Many Choices," was the title of a panel discussion on careers, which featured four women who are graduates of the women's studies program on Wednesday evening.

Anna Bowen, '92, who is a registered nurse with the Holyoke Visiting Nurses Association, a self-employed counselor, consultant and writer was the first speaker. Bowen has worked for 20 years as a nurse. She has worked extensively with survivors of rape and sexual abuse, taught programs for nurses and Health Aids, and she is currently searching for a publisher for her book.

Bowen advised the audience to, "follow your inner voice when choosing a job, hold on to your passion or else it becomes a task."

Judy LeBold, '81 is a producer, director and filmmaker. LeBold has done work fundraising for women's shelters, organizations, and education. LeBold makes lesbian films, one of which, House Search, has been shown in Northampton, Philadelphia and in Chicago at the Women in the Director's Chair International Film Festival.

Cate Rowen, '91 is vice president of Market Street Research Inc. in Northampton. Market Street is a small lesbian run company that researches for banks, corporations, hospitals and HMOs. At UMass, Rowen worked for The Valley Women's Voice which motivated her to do the work she is doing now. Rowen talked about the importance of role models and mentors.

Ginny Rees, '93 is the Director of Alumni Relations. Rees worked many jobs before she returned to school to earn her degree, including singing in a rock band. Rees commented on the importance of the non- traditional student program in her current success. At the University she earned a degree in education with a minor in women studies.

All four of the panelists commended the women's studies program and the career planning course, "Career and Life Choices for Women" offered by the department. One theme that ran through the discussion was passion. Each of the women on the panel stressed the importance of following your goals and passions when choosing a career.

Conference examines weight loss

By Melanie B. Arruda
Collegian Staff

One speaker at yesterday's Diet and Exercise Conference in the Campus Center Basement dealt with the issue of weight loss and obesity among the overweight population.

"It is not absolutely clear that weight loss improves risks against mortality and morbidity," said Steven Heymsfield, doctor from the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Columbia University.

Our knowledge of weight loss shows that "long-term benefits are not clear at all" for two reasons, he said. "It is very hard to get a person to lose weight long-term and there are many other independent factors that affect mortality and morbidity."

Studies have shown a negative aspect of weight loss, Heymsfield said. Weight loss through a low calorie diet increases a person's cholesterol saturation in bile, causing cholesterol gallstones, according to Heymsfield.

"We still have a great deal of trouble quantifying why an individual is overweight," Heymsfield said. People don't report very accurately what they eat, he added.

"Obesity is not due to just one thing," Heymsfield said. There are several factors that contribute to obesity and controlling body weight. These factors include ethnicity, environment, nutrition, psychological and exercise.

For example, "we know that lower socioeconomic populations have a higher incidence of obesity than higher socioeconomic populations," he added.

Genes have also been shown through studies to control bodyweight, Heymsfield said. Overweight and underweight individuals deal with these genetic factors, he said.

Studies have shown that "heavier people generally eat more than thinner people," Heymsfield said.

As your body mass index (BMI) increases, there is a rise in your mortality and morbidity risk, he said. A BMI between 18–25 kilograms per meter squared is associated with the lowest mortality and morbidity rate, according to Heymsfield.

A person with a BMI greater than 27 kilograms per meter squared is considered overweight, Heymsfield said. Highly muscular people, such as athletes, are the exception to this rule, he added.

When you are at the lethal range of being overweight, the benefits of weight loss have a greater effect, Heymsfield said. "Even a small amount of weight loss, approximately 10 percent, will substantially reduce the body weight index." Once a person in massively obese, reaching a goal weight is very difficult and has many negative health consequences, according to Heymsfield.

Obesity treatment includes behavior modification, nutrition modification and exercise, according to Heymsfield.

Only 10 to 20 percent of adults adhere to a regular exercise routine, according to Doctor of Chiropractic Josef Arnould.

Decreasing energy intake, as well as increasing energy output and expenditure aids in weight loss, he said.

Weight loss is most visible during the first two to three weeks, Arnould said. Visible effects of weight loss include the ability to walk farther and a decrease in blood pressure.

A more severe form of obesity treatment includes surgery.

"People want a magic bullet without worrying about what they are eating and what they are doing," Heymsfield said.

Obesity will continue to be a ongoing problem as long as genetic and environmental factors exist, Heymsfield said.

Countdown to the '96 Presidential Primaries

ELECTION '96

Editor's Note: As part of an effort to improve our coverage of the presidential primaries, the Collegian is running this feature everyday.

WASHINGTON (AP) — And then there were two.

Breaking clear in a contest once crowded and tangled, Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole has secured the Republican presidential nomination and won the right to engage President Clinton in the fall.

Neither man at this point has a comprehensive platform. But what they do have, after Clinton's three years in the White House and Dole's 27 years in the Senate, are records. And since January they've answered questions on a variety of subjects put to them by The Associated Press.

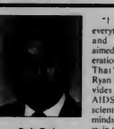
Here are their answers, plus summaries of their words and actions on a variety of issues. Positions may change, and Russ Perot may yet jump in again to mix everything up.

But as of now, this is where they stand and what they've said.

AIDS RESEARCH SPENDING:

Bill Clinton

"Preventing HIV infection and finding a cure for AIDS is a top priority. ... That is why we have increased overall AIDS funding by 40 percent, including Ryan White CARE assistance for outpatient care. These policies have already achieved remarkable success: Thanks to recent scientific advances, people with HIV and AIDS live twice as long as they did two years ago; the United States now approves AIDS drugs faster than any European nation. We must not slow the battle to fight HIV and AIDS."



Bob Dole

"I believe we must do everything possible to foster and encourage research aimed at stopping the proliferation of this deadly disease. That's why I support the Ryan White Act, which provides federal assistance for AIDS research. American scientists have the brightest minds and the best technology in the world."

Smith prof discusses gender, film theory

By Lisa Fillion
Collegian Correspondent

NORTHAMPTON — Sophia Smith Professor of Government Philip Green spoke Tuesday about "Hollywood and America" in the last of a series of eight lectures intended both to welcome Smith's new president, Ruth J. Simmons and showcase the Smith College faculty.

Green said he got involved with film criticism as a resource for understanding current ideological beliefs and political theories.

Green began by explaining the theory of "the male gaze" in filmmaking. The male gaze involves three viewpoints that influence every film — the male protagonist in the film, the male cinematographer behind the camera and the man in the audience at whom the film is directed. Green noted that even today in film and television credits, men outnumber women two-to-one.

Green then focused on the female action hero genre. The genre, which has emerged fairly recently in Hollywood filmmaking, first appeared the '70s around the same time as the Women's Liberation Movement. In one of the first of these female action flicks, I Spit On Your Grave, a woman named Jenny, is gang raped and later methodically murders her four rapists. This film represents the male castration revenge version.

A better known example of the female action hero is Ripley of the Alien series. Ripley represents the female version of the male action hero. The women manage to take on all of the aspects of the male action hero, one of which is essentially pure sadism. The fact that a woman takes on a typically male persona does not indicate that men and women have become equal — in fact, the inequalities are still present. Green said the "material reality is too complicated for Hollywood to deal with."

"Because Hollywood is unable to deal with the energy of women, the female action hero is portrayed only as castrating horrors or imitating male action heroes," said Green. Hollywood "avoids confrontation with the ideology of women's rights," a typical Hollywood response to complicated issues, he said.

"How is ugly reality going to be handled?" he asked, a question he said Hollywood poses as well. All too often it is not even dealt with, he added.

Green said the typical movie plot is simply initial hopeful expectations, sudden opposition, opposition disavowed and final recuperation of harmonious order. He mentioned the movie The River Wild as an example of this common plot. The subplot of the "Supermom" and jealous, weak father is presented, yet never addressed and is finally forgotten.

Finally Green referred to this year's Dead Man Walking as "the most serious movie in recent years." On Monday, actress Susan Sarandon won Best Actress at the Academy Awards for her role in the film, which deals with the politically and emotionally sensitive issue of the death penalty. Green indicates that the director, Tim Robbins, left the end of the movie ambiguous during the execution of the criminal by flashing scenes of his crimes. Robbins left capital punishment open for debate by not taking a clear stand either way.

"Is complexity better than simplicity if it results in ambiguity?" Green asked.

He did not give a definite answer to this question but rather encouraged listeners to ask these questions when trying to understand the "diffusion of ideological messages" found in films.

Green taught at Princeton University and Haverford College previous to joining the Smith College faculty in 1964. Green is a member of the editorial boards of The Nation and The Massachusetts Review. He is also the author or editor of seven books — his most recent is Democracy.

Notes from the Campus Center Basement

Welcome to the special Final Four edition of Notes from the Campus Center Basement. I am sculpting paragraph-space starting at $3,500.

What the UMass-Kentucky game is missing is a good old-fashioned bet. Wish bet.

You know the kind where the mayor of one team's city bets something famous from his or her city against something comparable from the opponent's city.

Since there is no mayor of Amherst, the responsibility for the bets has to go to the Chancellors. There is no time for Uncle Dave to form a task force to create one, so I'll take it upon myself to set the parameters for the wagers.

If UMass wins the game, Chancellor Scott gets to send the following to Kentucky: the Cat-Masked Guy, anyone who has ever used the Student Union steps as a forum, Whitmore, D.C. sized, the Cannabis Reform Coalition, the library's falling bricks and the Collegian's Editorial Board.

If Kentucky wins the UK Chancellors will send anyone who has ever slept with a relative, Rick Pitino's hair gel budget, bad accents, 20 pounds of hallucinogenic blue mold and all the members of the Hallucinogenic Blue Mold Reform Coalition.

If UMass wins the National Championship are there classes on Tuesday?

If not, who will be sober enough to go?

Gratuitous UConn pot shots: Have you noticed that the phrase "What I like About UConn" song hasn't been around lately.

Last Sunday on WBZ- "Sports Final" Bob Ryan said that if Syracuse won the National Title he would jump off the ledge.

Minutes the quick wit, the Boston Herald's Joe Fitzgerald responded, "Careful not to land on Jim Calhoun."

With so much money being tossed around, I have an immense amount of respect for students who won the ticket lottery and are actually using them.

It would be nice if the students who won had their names stamped on the ticket and would be forced to show ID before entering the arena. With scalpers claiming the seats, the best part of the college basketball atmosphere will be missing — the students.

Rumor has it that come tip-off Monday night, if UMass is in the National Championship game, the downtown section of North Pleasant Street will be closed off from traffic for safety issues. After many professional championships, many people have spilled onto the streets and started mini-riots, so Amherst is preparing early.

Matt Vautour

While writing this, it has come to my attention that there is indeed a silly bet going on between the two Universities, but the bet exists between the two schools' accounting departments. Here's the rules:

If the Minutemen win, Kentucky professor Art Goldman will wear a UMass t-shirt to class for a week and send UMass professor Ron Mannino a bottle of the finest Kentucky bourbon.

If the Wildcats win, Mannino will don a Kentucky shirt for the week and send Goldman a case of Sam Adams beer.

Well at least somebody's getting drunk.

If UMass does win the National Title, do you think that Sports Illustrated will close up operation rather than put UMass on its cover?

There is absolutely no truth to the rumor that this space will be adding corporate sponsorship. We opened the option up for bidding, but the only takers were the Muddy Duck Cafe, Buffalo Bill's, Katina's, Dorothy and Leroy's, and Uptown Pizza and, well, you know how that worked out.

Matt Vautour is a Collegian columnist

How about a cup of joe?

The random dickhead who started "The Cult Of Ray" Cricket off of my car on Wednesday, let me just tell you that you are a sick bird and vile human being. Such a fate worse than Mad Cow Disease upon you. I hope that comedy tours working in the name of God and mother hose you down with mace and mash your knee-caps with a sledgehammer.

There I said it.

Indeed, it has been an odd week at UMass. It has been a week filled with green, anger, trash and crime.

People returning from spring break in sunny climates are angry when envious people won't listen to their spring break adventures. People like me, who went home for spring break are not only angry that we have to listen to these stories, but that we spent the entire week watching re-runs of Miami Vice while contemplating the origin of the cheese and boogers.

People are angry if they don't have Final Four tickets. People are angry if they had Final Four Tickets and then found out they could have sold them for more money. Think about this: We had criminals, dealing in high stakes and high risks, standing in front of the Curry Hicks Cage the other day. And you're saying that there was nothing out of the ordinary about this week?

The first thing I saw when I got back on campus on Monday morning was perhaps the only nice gesture I have seen all week. There were people carrying heavy red backpacks full of coffee, and they were giving out free samples. It was as if Star Wars storm troopers had landed in Seattle.

There's one thing I'm not set for decaf."

These poor people had to spend the day with 13 gallons of coffee strapped to their backs. I'm sure they heard the line "You got any free beer?" on more than one occasion. It's a thankless task they performed, but I am indebted to them for it.

After vodka and grapefruit juice, coffee is far and away the best morning beverage. I come from a long line of coffee drinkers, starting with my great-great-uncle Charlie, who was a coffee broker in turn-of-the-century Boston.

Charlie's main function as a coffee broker was to sample different coffees. Unlike today, coffee of the late 19th century came in two varieties: good and bad. Charlie's office was equipped with a spittoon — as to actually ingest coffee all day, everyday would have resulted in a lifelong case of insomnia.

Dave Copeland

My parents, and I am sure this is the key to their being happily married for 41 years, both drink their coffee black. Naturally, when I first decided to drink coffee, I assumed that coffee was meant to be consumed as is: no cream, no sugar, no milk.

You can imagine my horror, the twisted facial expressions and the utter agony I experienced when I first took a sip of coffee as is. But now, several years later, that is the only way I can drink my coffee. To actually spend time stirring in cream and sugar would defeat the primary purpose of coffee, which is a quick energy boost.

When I came to college, I discovered a whole new trend: flavored coffees. When I first tried to order coffee at the Bluewall, I wanted regular coffee. I was told they didn't have "regular" coffee, but I could try Columbian.

For a moment I was really excited. I was expecting a cup of my favorite beverage laced with pure Columbian cocaine. Yes, the crank would keep me up all night, but would I have fun!

I was given a cup of regular coffee. The only difference between "Columbian" and the "Chock Full Of Nuts" was that I had been bred on the name.

Now, a few years later, I can adamantly say that I am not a big fan of flavored coffees. My theory is that anybody can make a healthy profit by following these simple steps and entering the flavored coffee market:

1) Go to Stop & Shop and buy several cans of "Stop & Shop Brand Coffee."

2) Flavor the "Stop & Shop Brand Coffee" with your favorite perfume or cologne.

3) Give it a real catchy name. Including the name of an oppressed country will boost sales. For example, "Honduras Happy Hippie Java Juice" would be a very good name for your designer coffee.

4) Sell it for no less than $1 a cup.

Maybe coffee isn't all that good. As some of you may recall, this was originally a column about the anger at UMass this week. Maybe the anger was caused by the massive amounts of coffee that were consumed by people sucking up the free samples. Caffeine-filled nerves are a very real and dangerous threat to one's sanity. After all, have you ever seen the brutal power struggles that take place at the Bluewall when people are looking for an empty table?

In any case, I will continue to drink coffee. And I don't need a fancy name or flavor. I call my favorite coffee "black."

Love From A Distance

At a time when most college students are enjoying the freedom of being young, single and at the University of Massachusetts (need I say more?), there is a group of students who are not familiar with this lifestyle. We are known as the (gulp) attached, taken, bound — call it what you want. Some of you may be offering pity and your uttermost condolences right about now, but really, there is no need for this. You see, there are two types of attached people — those who hate being part of a relationship, and those who couldn't imagine life without it. To relate to the main points, you should be in the latter of the two groups, but either way, it's a common topic of discussion.

So here you are, at UMass, surrounded by thousands of attractive guys and girls, and there is just one person on your mind — and he or she isn't the person hitting on you at the frat party, it's your significant other, who is not a UMass student, and who may not even live in this state. It's typical, your room is covered in pictures of him/her, you rush to the mailbox everyday, praying and you may even go so far as to save his/her messages on your voice-mail and play them over and over again. It isn't pathetic, of course it's not all that becoming either, but it's a totally natural part of life, of relationships, especially long distance ones. We've all read the pitiful articles in Teen and Seventeen magazines. Now, those are pathetic, almost too pathetic to be real; life at UMass isn't a teen magazine, and long distance relationships are not as naive as YM makes them appear to be.

Liana Melinnis

To be part of a long distance relationship takes a lot of trust in one another; it isn't as easy as it may appear. I'm sure you can remember the night before you left for UMass, packing your life away in boxes, taking your memories down off the wall, surrendering your youth to a whole new world and doing it with your boyfriend/girlfriend beside you. They smiled on the outside, but cried on the inside, as much as they wanted you to go on with your life and discover a new world, they wanted you to stay with them, the way it had been, the way it was supposed to be. This brings me to the topic of change, something many people are afraid to face. It always seems like change is a bad thing. I know I've believed that for so long myself, but if you really think about it, change isn't such a bad thing. Change is a constant and essential part of life, without it life would be dull, and lose its excitement. So you've grown and changed and grown stronger, and you may not even know it. Leaving the person you love can help you in more ways than you can imagine.

Long distance relationships create a lot of fears and insecurities among both people, but there are also a lot of positives — it's the discovering them that's the hard part. It has been said that separation makes the heart grow fonder, and as cliche as it may sound, it really does. It makes you jump at the ring of the phone, it makes you relate to others in your situation, it makes you count the days until it's that time again, time to go home. There's the excitement of pulling into the bus station and knowing the loneliness you've felt for months will be replaced by familiarity and love. It makes the phone bill worth it, it makes the fears, the tears and the months of celibacy worth it, well... Being apart from the person you love creates bonds that nothing can break, not even distance or time. It makes the time you have with that person so much more special.

Its 1:34 a.m. and I just hung up after a two-hour conversation with my boyfriend (this phone bill!). He said it didn't really hit him that I had left again until he heard a certain song on the radio that reminded him of me; he felt that familiar pain, and thought, "Oh God, not again." Sometimes the conversations are great, like tonight, but other times the talks hurt, and sometimes it seems easier to just give up, but that's not the right answer, and we both know that. There is one thing you should never do in a long-distance relationship, give up.

So as I sit here listening to my Cure CD, I'm drifting off to sleep to the lyrics of Love Song: "however far away, I will always love you/however long I stay, I will always love you..." And with these lyrics I think about all the people who get their hearts broken when they go away to school, and I understand their pain, completely. Being a part of a relationship isn't such a bad thing, it's actually a really rewarding and content feeling, knowing that there is always someone waiting just for you.

We may be young, we may be at UMass, and we may be typical horny college students, but there isn't anything that can compare to real love; not drunken hook-ups, or meaningless promises. And I'm sure some people aren't ready to deal with this emotion, it's completely understandable, love is not an easy thing to deal with and it can get really complicated at times. It takes a lot to be part of a long-distance relationship. They don't work alone, it's the people who are in them that make them work.

Liana Melinnis is a UMass student.

A message from Coach Cal

To our students and fans:

I have always said, we have the best fans in America here at UMass. We're going to the Final Four, and we couldn't have done it without you. You handled yourselves with class all year long, always cheering us, never booing the opposition. It's one of the reasons I am so proud of being the head basketball coach of this University.

We are heading into what could be one of the most terrific weekends this school has ever experienced, so let's not forget about what makes you guys so special. Don't go too crazy this weekend. Don't be like one of those other campuses that has made headlines because people were making jerks of themselves, destroying property and starting fights. Enjoy this. Celebrate and have fun. But don't lose your minds. We've got a shot at winning this thing, but win or lose, let's show the rest of the country the way UMass does things, with the kind of class you always have shown in the past.

Head Coach

Advice for Wurtzel

To the Editors:

In response to a column in Monday's Collegian titled, "Don't pick Strawberries," I'd like to point out one thing. Actually, I'd like to see something I wrote for a newspaper that doesn't begin with "Swm Seeking..." get printed. But that's another story.

In all seriousness, it appears the author of the column does not know the selling of "Promo CDs" is quite illegal. "Promo" discs are the discs you will get if you "win" one on a radio station. These discs are provided free of charge to the radio station by the record companies for that purpose. A promo compact disc will usually have a hole or a notch carved in its case. Or perhaps the bar code is scratched out to prevent scanning. Often, the disc will be stamped with "promotional use only." Sale of these discs is unlawful.

Jaywalking is also illegal. And I have never known anyone who got "busted" for selling or buying a promotional compact disc. There are plenty of record stores that will take them off your hands for a couple of bucks, and then resell them. Although it was not too long ago some record distributors tried to put the squeeze on record stores who bought and sold used CDs by refusing to service them.

I'm not looking to take sides in your columnist's dispute with the record store. I just thought I'd inform him of their legal right to refuse his promotional discs for trade in. It's a bummer, but the music business doesn't like it when someone other than themselves makes money off of their product. They're funny that way.

Hardcore fever to hit Pearl St.

By Adam Dlugacz
Collegian Staff

Sunday night will prove to be a haven for hardcore lovers as three of Boston's hottest hardcore acts take to the Pearl Street stage.

In the world of hardcore, certain bands will be forever associated with their scenes. When people think of New York Hardcore, they usually think of Sick of It All or 25 Ta'Life. In Syracuse, there is Earth Crisis and in Cleveland it's Integrity. Well, it is impossible to talk about the Boston scene without talking about Sam Black Church and Tree. If the '80s belonged to Wrecking Crew and Slapshot then Sam Black Church and Tree are the bottom kings of the '90s.

Sam Black Church possess a sound not easily described. Their music is heavy and keep the dance floor moving. While their style is by Minor Threat, it is not the middle E- chord sludge that most bands pass off as hardcore today. After one listen it is clear that these guys can play their instruments. Yet what really sets these guys apart from most hardcore bands is their frontman, Jeff, whose vocals have been compared to the legendary H.R. from Bad Brains which is an automatic plus. His energy and acrobatics are displayed in a live setting unlike few other lead singers.

Tree, on the other hand, are not nearly as technical as Sam Black Church. Not that they would want to be. Tree plays booty flattening, hammer you over the head, beat you senseless hardcore. Whether it's singing about beer, marijuana or the environment, it is clear Tree wants to make a point. When they play live, they leave stages destroyed and the crowd dazed as they wreck havoc.

In complete contrast to both bands is H2O. H2O, who are one of New York's fastest rising bands, opt for a more traditional style of hardcore. Playing music influenced by 7 Seconds, Dag Nasty and Sick of It All, H2O are loud, fast and most importantly, fun. As an added bonus, be on the look-out, because singer Toby has been known to bust some pretty fancy dance moves.

Sam Black Church, Tree and H2O will play Pearl Street this Sunday night at 7:30 p.m. The show is all ages. For ticket information call 586-8686.

Tree will join H2O and Sam Black Church this Sunday night at Pearl Street. COURTESY CHAMPIONSE RECORDS

A LITTLE NIGHT MUSIC
Bowker Auditorium
March 27-30

Set in Sweden in 1905, –A Little Night Music first premiered on Broadway in February of 1973. It was presented by the University of Massachusetts Theater Guild for its opening night at Bowker Auditorium on Wednesday evening.

Originally produced and directed by Harold Prince, and with music and lyrics by Stephen Sondheim, the musical proved to be somewhat of a sensation when it was first brought out. It broke from the Hello Dolly imitations and was, as its UMass director Benjamin Ware notes, "a throw- back to the century's early period of erotic operetta."

With a live orchestra and an enthusiastic cast, the musical is both animated and — best of all— highly comical. The principle theme is love and the problems and confusion which it necessarily generates. At its crudest, the musical is a comical sex farce as none of the characters are satisfied with their own partners, instead lusting after everyone elses. Desiree Armfeldt (Heather E. Amsler) is especially prominent in this area as she allows herself to be continuously seduced by both Mr. Egerman (Tim McKeon) and Count Carl Magnus (David Joseph).

The musical has its complexities though, posing questions concerning fidelity and the institution of marriage. As in Sondheim's earlier works (namely Company and Follies), the characters sing their inner-feelings of love and insecurity. Matrimonial problems include Egerman's child-bride Anne (Lindsey Bovaird) — who ends up eloping with her husbands besotted son, Henrik (Keith Hallworth). And then there's the Countess Charlotte Malcolm (Elise Sara Schild), who attempts to win back the love of her husband by seducing his arch-rival, –Mr. Egerman.

Other notable characters include the wizened cynic Madame Armfeldt (Susan Boyle) who warns her grand–daughter Fredrika (Patience Gilmore) against marriage.

A Little Night Music is complimented by impressive backdrops and period costumes, and of course, the live orchestra.

The musical is on tonight and tomorrow at 8pm in Bowker Auditorium. Tickets are $4 for live College students. $6 for general admission.

Toronto-based group to perform classical favorites

By Seema Gangatirkar
Collegian Staff

A group that describes their lively repertoire of music as "a collection of music, that while traveling to different destinations finds itself staying overnight at the same hotel," will bring their distinctive mix of music to Bowker Auditorium Sunday evening at 7 p.m.

Quartetto Gelato, a Toronto–based group, will perform an exciting mix of classical favorites, operatic arias, traditional melodies, tangos and gypsy fiddling.

The group is not what it seems. From all appearances, Quartetto Gelato resembles a classical oboe quartet, except that their eclectic musical repertoire makes it hard to clearly define what category in which Quartetto fits best.

Not only is their range of music unusual, but the instrumentation is not exactly what one might expect. Cythia Steljes plays the oboe and the English horn while Peter de Sotto is accomplished on the violin, mandolin and tenor voice. Claudio Vena not only arranges music but also plays the accordian and viola. George Meanwell rounds out the ensemble on cello and guitar.

The quartet got its start four years ago when four good friends began to play together. By practicing together, the group discovered each other's hidden talents and soon took the quartet public. Even their name provides a clue to their formative years. In the beginning, the quartet performed in a swanky restaurant in a suburb of Toronto and received food in lieu of cash payment. They usually began their set as dessert was being served and they took the name Quartetto Gelato, or the ice-cream quartet.

Their mix of traditional folk music, tangos, adapted opera scores, baroque chamber music and classical themes will appeal to all music lovers, young and o

Concert to benefit Food Bank

Yiddish band to showcase mix of showtunes, folk dances

By Anna Feder
Collegian Staff

The Yiddish Klezmer band Klezamir will play a benefit concert at The Iron Horse Sunday for the Food Bank Farm in celebration of the release of their new CD Klezamir Cooks For Tante Barbara. The show is sponsored by Congregation B'nai Israel, Smith/Amherst Hillel, Temple Israel, UMass Hillel House, Jewish Community of Amherst and WRSI radio 95.3.

The band members, Rhoda Bernard, Jim Aramenti, Amy Rose, Neil Zagorin and Joe Blumenthal do their own take on everything from jazzy show tunes of the Yiddish theater to Hebrew love songs and lively Israeli folk dance.

"Klezamir mixes all of these flavors with heaping helpings of humor, great musicianship and high energy danceability" said Paul Burton of Bravo.

The majority of the band have been residents of the Pioneer valley. Armenti, multi-instrumentalist and songwriter for the band received a bachelor degree in music and anthropology from the University of Massachusetts. The drummer, Neil Zagorin, grew up in Springfield and Joe Blumenthal, the acoustic and electric bass player who has played with Klezamir since its inception, owns Downtown Sounds, a musical instrument store in Northampton.

The band recently played at Hillel House on March 4 to celebrate the holiday of Purim. Everyone enjoyed the party and the band was well received. This performance however has a different purpose. The proceeds of this show will be donated to the Farm Food Bank.

The Food Bank provides food to 330 local programs reaching more than 100,000 people in need throughout Western Massachusetts. It is a community supported farm in Hadley that raised over 100,000 pounds of organic produce last year to help feed those in need and at the same time provided a bountiful harvest to hundreds of shareholders.

The show begins at 7 p.m. Tickets are $10 in advance, $12 at the door and are available through the Northampton Box Office.

Baseball grabs eighth win, fifth in row

By Casey Kane
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts baseball team improved its record to 8- 4 and kept alive a five-game winning-streak by defeating Hartford 9-4 yesterday at Ray McKenna Field in East Hartford.

The Minutemen have recorded five consecutive wins, starting with a victory over Niagara on their Florida road trip.

Sophomore right-hander Jeff Puleri was on the mound for the Minutemen. Puleri has had a tough early season, taking losses in games against Rice and Northwestern. Yesterday however, Puleri worked seven innings and allowed only four runs, earning his first win of the season. He struck out six and walked four.

Hartford starting pitcher Frank Barresi was pulled after the first inning, after allowing the Minutemen to score three runs in the opening frame. The Hawks sent five hurlers to the mound, including Barresi, in the game.

Hartford was able to cut the lead to 6-4 after six innings, but the Hawks could not catch the Minutemen as UMass scored three runs in the final two innings.

The Massachusetts squad played solid defense, crushing any chances for a Hawk comeback.

Junior centerfielder Nate Murphy, the Atlantic 10 pre- season Player of the Year, was 3-for-5 on the day with three RBI. Murphy had a double and also knocked out a two-run homerun in the top of the first to power the Minutemen.

Sophomore rightfielder Pete Gautreau also went 3-for-5, with two singles and two runs scored. Senior catcher Andy Kiah picked up three RBI with three singles in his 3-for-4 performance.

Junior shortstop Brad Gorrie and freshman designated hitter Doug Clark each contributed to the UMass offense. Gorrie hit for a double while Clark connected for a triple.

The Minutemen will try to keep their win streak alive when they travel to Philadelphia this weekend for a two- game series with Temple, before returning home for a three- game homestand.

MSU, 'Cuse: battle of unlikely finalists

By Bill Barnard
Associated Press

NEW YORK — As the lowest seeded team in the Final Four, Mississippi State is facing no crisis of confidence.

The Bulldogs had to beat Kentucky, then ranked No. 1 and the first team in 40 years to go through the regular season unbeaten in Southeastern Conference games, just to earn a No. 5 seed in the Southeast Regional.

They followed through with impressive victories over top seeds Connecticut and Cincinnati to reach the Final Four for the first time.

All of that convinced Mississippi State and coach Richard Williams that the Starkville, Miss., school belongs right where it is.

"I knew we had talented players, and I thought if they learned their roles and accepted their roles, that we could be a good team," Williams said Wednesday during a conference call for Final Four coaches. "It didn't happen all at once. It was a gradual process."

Williams said he distinguishes between the kind of confidence his team has now and the confidence some teams put on for appearance sake.

"With kids this age, confidence can sometimes be false," he said. "They see it as a sign of weakness if you don't show confidence, even if it isn't real. But as you win games, confidence increases. As you win games against quality teams, confidence becomes more real."

The run of upsets by Mississippi State (26-7) has made the Bulldogs the favorite in Saturday's semifinal against Syracuse (28-8), which is making its first Final Four appearance since 1987 when the Orangemen lost the final game to Indiana on a last-second basket by Keith Smart.

"You can't really say Mississippi State is a surprise the way they handled Kentucky and Georgia in the SEC tournament," Syracuse coach Jim Boeheim said. The Orangemen needed last-second shots in regulation and overtime to defeat Georgia in the NCAA.

Syracuse's 1991 loss as a No. 2 seed to 15th-seeded Richmond was one of the biggest upsets in recent NCAA tournament history. But this year, the Orangemen were given just a marginal chance to even make the field.

"It's quite unexpected for us to be here," Boeheim said. "I thought we had a slim chance, but things had to break right for us. At the beginning of the season, I was worried. I thought we could win 18 games, but I raised my expectations because we played well. I knew it would be a long, long shot (to make the Final Four). But the tournament usually goes that way. There always seems to be a surprise team that sneaks in."

singles matches, only needing one victory of the four however for the win.

Braunstein won 6-0, 6-1 over Jen Duntian, Caron 6-4, 4-6, and 8-6 defeating Joseph, Durant 6-2, 6-1 taking care of Nattschei, and Goredetskaya beating up on Dory Keusch 6- 1, 6-0.

"They were looking forward to a match and changing modes," said Lowry.

Preparation ahead of time for the Minutewomen is an important thing, Lowry said, in making sure that they are well ready.

"We need to look at a match more than a day ahead," said Lowry. "We need to visualize ourselves in matches when practicing, and looking two to three days down the road and mentally preparing for these matches."

The Minutewomen know how important the upcoming matches will be as they head into the bulk of the schedule against some very tough teams in the upcoming month.

"We have to win these matches to help us achieve a National ranking," Lowry said. "We know how important these matches are and we can't slip on any one of them."

The Atlantic 10 tournament is also something that approaches the minds of the Minutewomen which they are also looking forward to, and preparing for come the end of the season.

"Before we were happy at being seeded seventh," Lowry said. "This year were looking at a two or three seed behind Virginia Tech and George Washington."

That however is a ways down the road as the Minutewomen will play their next match Thursday, as they travel back down to Connecticut to play Fairfield at 2:30 p.m.

"They've enjoyed that they've worked hard all year," said Lowry. "They've enjoyed being a team and realized how much they accomplished, but they're still hungry to finish it out strong."

• The team of 1996 everyone is talking about is the Chicago Bulls. They have Michael Jordan, Scottie Pippen, Dennis Rodman and a great shot at cracking 70 wins in a season. But just as impressive is the Detroit Red Wings 56- 12-5 record, and their all-but-eminent breaking of the record for wins in a season by the Montreal Canadiens of 1976 (61).

How good are the octopi-supported team, while the Bulls were losing to the expansion Toronto Raptors 109-108, the Red Wings were beating the second best team in the NHL — the Colorado Avalanche 7-1? Included in those seven goals were three shorthanded strikes by Detroit.

• St. Joseph's head coach Phil Martelli on why he'd like tickets to the Meadowlands this weekend.

"We really appreciated UMass cheering us on during the second half," Martelli said of the Minutemen rooting for his team in the NIT semifinals, a 74-69 OT win over Alabama Tuesday. "We would do the same for them if we could get 13 tickets to the [Final Four]."

Astronauts say teary goodbyes

By Marcia Dunn
Associated Press

SPACE CENTER, Houston — With bear hugs and teary eyes, space shuttle Atlantis' astronauts said goodbye to the crew of Russia's space station Mir and then flew away Thursday, leaving Shannon Lucid behind for a five-month stay in orbit.

Atlantis' crew unlatched the shuttle from Mir after five days of docked flight about 250 miles above Earth. The shuttle is scheduled to return to Earth on Saturday.

The farewell ceremony was a sentimental moment for all eight space travelers, but especially for shuttle commander Kevin Chilton, who wiped his eyes and wrapped his arms around cosmonauts Yuri Onufrenko and Yuri Usachev.

"We know we'll see Shannon again when she comes back," Chilton said. "But there's a big ocean between Russia and America, and we're not so confident, or sure, or certain I should say, that we'll ever see our two friends Yuri and Yuri again."

He paused to regain his composure, then added: "In person."

Usachev said he wished they could remain together longer, "but Shannon is with us now... and we'll do the good work that needs to be done."

With that, the astronauts and cosmonauts clasped hands and then retreated to their respective spacecraft and sealed the hatches for the undocking.

Lucid is the second American — and the first U.S. woman to live aboard Mir. When she returns to Earth in August aboard a shuttle, the 53-year-old biochemist and mother of three grown children will have spent more time in space than any other American.

NASA cut short the shuttle's mission by one day because of bad weather in the forecast at Cape Canaveral, Fla., and a leak in one of the steering systems used for descent. Atlantis will return to Earth with five astronauts — the first time a U.S. spaceship comes back with fewer people than it left with.

Minutemen, Wildcats ready to battle in Final Four

KENTUCKY MEDIA RELATIONS

Junior guard Jeff Sheppard [15] has provided quality minutes off the bench for the Kentucky Wildcats this season.

By Candice Flemming
Collegian Staff

Much has been said about the matchup between No. 1 Massachusetts and No. 2 Kentucky tomorrow night in the Final Four.

For instance, the Wildcats depth and overall talent is supposedly too much for the Minutemen to handle; and the Minutemen, who have always thrived in the underdog role, will enter the game as one yet again.

These questions and more will be answered when the ball is tipped at approximately 8 p.m. at the Meadowlands in New Jersey tomorrow night. The winner earns the right to play for the National Championship against the Mississippi St./Syracuse winner on Monday night.

"This is the marquee game," freshman guard Charlton Clarke said. "This is the championship game for us, because if we don't beat them we don't go to the championship."

"You've got the two hottest teams in the country. It's going to be a dog fight," Donta Bright said. "It's the type of game you hate to see a team lose."

In the last matchup between the two squads on Nov. 28, 1995, UMass' lack of depth and Kentucky's overwhelming talent wasn't a factor in the outcome. While the Wildcats were shuffling players in-and-out, the Minutemen stayed with the starting five for almost the entire game. Fatigue was a concern for UMass following the 92-82 victory, along with lack of bench scoring as against the Wildcats, no UMass bench player scored a point.

This, and fatigue, was supposed to be a problem for the Minutemen if they were to go on and complete a successful season. But in reality, both factors have helped improve UMass and have helped the team race to a 35-1 record. The Minutemen never seem to tire even though most of them, mainly Edgar Padilla and Carmelo Travieso, play around 35 minutes per game.

And the bench scoring that was such a problem earlier in the year as become another strength led by the play of Tyrone Weeks. The 6-foot-7-inch junior had his best game of the tourney against Arkansas when he started in place of Marcus Camby. In that game with the Razorbacks, Weeks scored a game-high 16 points. Clarke, who broke his foot in the season opener against the Wildcats, has come on of late and should see minutes tomorrow.

Since the Minutemen are entering the game as the underdog and because they have already beaten the Wildcats, the team is confident.

"We beat them already, we can beat them again," Weeks said. "But it's not going to be easy this time. We have to go out and play confident like we did in the [other] tourney [games] and we'll be okay."

But the Wildcats are confident as well, and have regrouped since the earlier loss to the Minutemen after coach Rick Pitino called a team meeting.

"What I said to the guys was there's two ways we can go. We're never going to have 11 players of this caliber together again. It could be very difficult on you not playing and difficult on me seeing you unhappy," he said, "or look at Larry Bird and Magic Johnson philosophy and play to win. From there everyone cared about one thing— winning."

UMass knows that the Wildcats are a changed team.

"They're playing great ball right now. They're a different ball club since Nov. 28," Camby said. "They want the game for revenge and we want it for respect, so something's got to give."

However, most agree that all of the pressure is on the Wildcats, as entering the season they were ranked No. 1 and entering the tournament they were the favorites to take home the title. The underdog Minutemen on the other hand have no pressure, and usually thrive in the underdog role.

"We like being underdogs," Camby said. "People weren't picking us to get out of the brackets. There's no pressure on us. No one's expecting us to win. We just have to go out there and play UMass basketball, keep playing like we have all year long."

"There's really not any pressure for us," Clarke said. "We knew we would go this far. This is just the next step. It's just another game that we have to play and go out and win."

KENTUCKY MEDIA RELATIONS

Sophomore Antoine Walker, who the Wildcat's second leading scorer with 15.4 points per game, will do his best to try to stop Marcus Camby tomorrow night.

Men's lacrosse opens 3 game homestand tomorrow

By Justin C. Smith
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's lacrosse team looks to buck this win-one, lose-one trend as the No. 13 Minutemen (3-2) will open a three-game homestand tomorrow against No. 18 Army (3-2). Opening face-off will be at 2 p.m. at Richard F. Garber Field.

Overall this will be the 17th meeting between the two programs, each team winning eight. Last season UMass went down to West Point and beat the Cadets 16-8, and have won two in a row over Army dating back to 1994. UMass coach Greg Cannella is looking for his Minutemen to dig in and put their noses to their home turf.

"We have to get back to what we're all about," Cannella said. "And that is hard work. We need to come out with a lot of intensity against Army. That's going to be a tough game.

"We're going to have to put up a major league effort on defense and in the goal, and on offense. We have to get after the groundballs. We have to dominate. The things we do well are blue-collar. Groundballs, hustle, if we do that in games, we usually come out on top. If we don't, it's going to be tough for us."

Army is led by senior attackman Dan Brostek, who leads the Cadets in scoring so far this year with 17 goals and nine assists for 26 points. Fellow senior Rob Manning (10-5-15) and junior Ross Yastrzemsky (11-7-18) are capable scoring threats.

In the Army net for coach Jack Emmer is Travis Loving, who has a 12.4 goals-against-average and has saved 60 percent of shots he has seen this season.

UMass is coming off a lop-sided 15-9 victory over Boston College on Tuesday. Brendan Glass and Buddy Hoffman each notched their fourth hatricks of the season and lead the team with 16 and 15 goals, respectively.

The Minuteman coach and his captain are equally hopeful for good conditions to open their slate of home games for the UMass 1996 campaign.

"You hope to get good weather," Cannella said. "And you hope to get a nice crowd."

"We're real excited," added Hoffman, a senior tri-captain, on his teams' home opener. "Everybody wants to play on the Hill. We want to have a good crowd and get everybody excited. Being on the road took a toll on us. Being home is great."

Undergrads heading for NBA hardwood

In the past week Arkansas junior Darnell Robinson, Memphis sophomore Lorenzen Wright and Georgia Tech freshman Stephon Marbury have all made the decision to bypass the remainder of their college eligibility and enter the NBA draft.

Around the Horn
with Justin C. Smith

Of these three players I can only understand why Robinson decided to go to the NBA before getting his degree. Besides the fact that the talent pool is so diluted with most of the real superstars jumping ship last year, his best chance of getting drafted is this year.

But what of Wright and Marbury? They have two and three years left respectively, and should take the opportunity to learn more about themselves and mature in college before making millions in the pros. They are going to get there eventually, and an education might not be a bad throw in along the way.

The best example of this is Syracuse senior John Wallace. Last year, Wallace said he would enter the draft as a junior and give up one last chance to improve himself before moving to the next level. Just two days before the actual draft, he removed his name from the list of candidates and asked to remain an Orangeman for one last season.

Wallace's stock has risen at least 15 spots in the draft and in all likelihood is a lock to be a lottery pick. Not only that, he will compete this weekend in the ultimate college basketball showcase — the Final Four.

With the excitement of March Madness and the boredom in the NBA, why give up a good thing at such a young age? They can still decide to decline entry to the draft and maybe even get to live out any basketball player's dream.

Hey John, why not drop them a line?

• Did anyone else see the sign during the women's NCAA tourney that read, "Connecticut: where men are men and women are Champions"? Betcha' coach Calhoun loves UConn's school spirit.

• Massachusetts basketball coach John Calipari has stated that just because his team has made it to the Final Four, doesn't mean that anything about his day-to-day actions will change. He said he would go to the mall with his staff and go out to dinner every night.

His coaching counterpart, Rick Pitino of Kentucky, a UMass alum, told Calipari he could spend some extended time with him and his team.

"Hey John, why don't you and your team spend the next few days at Mount Snow?," Pitino said.

• Bill Parcells decided this week that Vincent Brown was expendable in the Patriots scheme of things. Now forgive me if my memory is a little foggy, but wasn't he part of the defense which brought the Pats to the playoffs two years ago?

He was the captain, the leader of a young defensive unit, as its only superstar. Parcells is an excellent coach and proved that with two Vince Lombardi trophies with the Giants, but unless Brown's payroll was dropped to get a high profile player who can make an immediate impact, his loss will be felt throughout 1996.

I'll give Parcells credit though for finally getting rid of Myron Guyton, who did make more mistakes in the New England secondary than the inventor of Hooked on Phonics did when spelling Worcester.

Softball heads to NY after 10 days off

By Fred Hurlbrink, Jr.
Collegian Staff

In all honesty, Long Island University is the UNC-Wilmington of the Massachusetts softball schedule. Massachusetts men's basketball coach John Calipari always puts together one of the toughest college hoop schedules in the country, but this year he snuck in a Jim Calhoun-like opponent in the Seahawks.

Elaine Sortino, Massachusetts' softball coach, is likewise not afraid to pit her team up against the nation's top softball squads. Somehow, a second tier, non-conference team like Long Island U. jumped on her season docket, but she's not taking this game lightly.

"I don't think this is going to be an easy game, I really don't," Sortino said. "This is not a team I know, which is very uncomfortable for me as a coach.

"I really can't make any pre-determined analyses about an opponent I know very little about — who we're playing away and after we've had 10 days off. I've never even seen their field."

LIU is a well-balanced team with four seniors and four freshmen, but have thus far relied on the young arm of freshmen Katie Marsheck. An imposing 5-foot-11-inches, Marsheck has a 2-1 record in the early course of the season with a minuscule 0.91 ERA giving up just 18 hits in 15 and one-third innings.

LIU sports an overall record of 2-2, splitting twin bills with Fairfield and La Salle. Its defense seems to be the most impressive of its early stats. The team's committed just four errors in 146 chances, for a .977 average early in 1996, compared to the Minutewomen's 58 miscues in their first 22 contests.

The Long Island offense doesn't look too imposing in sharp contrast, the Minutewoman attack is clicking on all cylinders — almost.

Super-soph Kim Gutridge is tearing up early competition batting .355 with a home run and nine runs batted in her first 76 at-bats this season. Fellow second-year player Kelly Buckley (.348-0-11) has also come up big at the plate, and behind it with junior slugger/catcher Chris Martens only able to play in 14 of UMass's first 22 games.

Freshmen Amanda Galas, Katie Kendarski and Ashlie Hayes have made solid offensive contributions this spring. Galas and Hayes have started all of Massachusetts' games batting .304 and .283, respectively. Galas has tremendous speed swiping 10 bases already while getting caught just once. Hayes can hit with power, knocking a home run and driving in 12 runs.

Kendarski, hardly standing above five feet, is batting an even .400 (10-for-25) on the season. The Redondo Beach, Calif. native is a reserve outfielder with speed to burn, and will get more at-bats as the campaign wears on.

The only slumping Minutewoman is Sortino's leadoff hitter, Sam Cardenas. Cardenas leads the team with two dingers and 13 RBI, but she is hitting a meager .216 in 74 trips to the plate. Sortino says her third baseman is hitting the ball hard, and she doesn't plan on making any major changes in her line up for this weekend's double header.

"These kids are ready. They need a game," associate head coach Mona Stevens said. "It's hard to come off a schedule like we have, and go 10 days, 12 days without a game."

"We have got to play. We can't take too much more time off; we just have to play," Sortino said.

The coaching staff and the team is chomping at the bit to take to the field and start playing again, and weather permitting, they'll play two this weekend in New York.

Isn't there something else going on down there?

Women's tennis pounds Lady Huskies

By Mike Corey
Collegian Staff

While the chilly weather has kept most people on delay about getting outdoors and starting up their spring activities, it certainly had no affect on the Massachusetts women's tennis team, as it braved the weather to win its match against Connecticut Wednesday in Storrs, Conn.

In their first match in over a month, and facing what seemed to be sub-zero weather, the Minutewomen rallied off a 6-1 victory over the Huskies outdoors at the UConn tennis courts.

"We needed to play this match regardless of the weather," assistant coach Tom Lowry said. "The preparation was very good going into this match, and we would have been really disappointed if we had a really bad match or even with a 5- 2 victory."

The Minutewomen, after getting back from their trip to Florida, are now starting to get back into the routine of playing matches and have begun practicing outside again.

"We showed a lot of confidence from our Florida trip," said Lowry. "We needed to get this match out of the way to get back into the practice mode and begin a routine again. Having the match now makes practices more focused."

Another thing that would most likely contribute to why practices are focused, is that they aren't at 6:30 a.m. at Hampshire College, since UMass does not have an indoor tennis facility.

"Practices are in the afternoon now, classes are over with and minds are a little clearer," said Lowry.

You can be sure that there was there nothing hindering the mind of No. 1 Singles player Liesl Sitton who disposed of Sarah Rahn of UConn quickly by the score of 6-1, 6-0.

Likewise in the No. 2 singles match Noelle Orsini, in her first match back since October, took care of Melanie Adinolfi 6-3, 6-2.

"For her to come out, win convincingly, and get her match play back was one of the high points," said Lowry.

UMass came away with two out of the three doubles matches losing only the No. 2 doubles match in their 6-1 victory and remaining undefeated at 4-0 this spring.

The No. 1 duo of Sitton and Liz Durant beat up on Rahn and Lisa Herous of UConn 8-4, and the No. 3 doubles team of Lana Gorodetskaya and Marie-Christine Caron also came away with a 8-4 victory over the team of Ounjian and Nattschai.

No. 2 doubles Jackie Braunstein and Durant had a little trouble with Nola Joseph and Adinolfi as they dropped the match 8-3.

"The girls were a little over confident," said Lowry. "They learned from that. It's just that it's been so long since we've had a match."

Braunstein, Caron, Durant, and Goredetskaya were all victorious in their respective No. 3, 4, 5, and 6

Two to the title

By Justin C. Smith
Collegian Sports

The college basketball season, which lasts four months, has come down to four teams. Kentucky, Massachusetts, Mississippi St. and Syracuse have all earned invitations to strut their stuff at the Big Dance, held this weekend at the Meadowlands. Only one will be able to come out of New Jersey smelling like roses.

The matchups surrounding the competing teams can be storylines all themselves. The Wildcats (32-2) may be able to avenge both of their losses during the season. They face the Minutemen in the national semis, whom they lost to 92- 82 in the Great Eight in their second contest of the season. If they were to exact revenge Saturday and Mississippi St. were to beat Syracuse in their match-up, it would set up a rematch of the SEC Tournament Final where the Bulldogs pulled off the 84-73 upset.

The semifinal match-up between UMass and Kentucky has been said to be the real National Championship as entering the tournament they were ranked Nos. 1 and 2.

Syracuse head coach Jim Boeheim can finally get the proverbial monkey off of his back if his Orangemen could take home the title. His critics have called him a 'whiner' on the sidelines, but with two wins this weekend he can turn that into a winner.

Boeheim's big man in the middle, John Wallace, last year thought he would be playing in the NBA as he made himself available to the draft, then rescinded to finish his senior year at Syracuse. A NCAA Championship trophy sitting next to his college diploma would look doubly impressive.

Kentucky coach Rick Pitino was instrumental in getting John Calipari the Massachusetts head job and now it may be him who keeps Pitino from college basketball's ultimate prize.

It's March Madness and it captivates the sports world like some sort of drug where names such as Reafsnyder, Dingle, Bullard and Epps become known throughout every college basketball loving household, though they may never play at the professional level. It's where the Cinderella teams dream big and sometimes the glass slipper fits like a glove.

1996 NCAA FINAL FOUR

Coaches carry mutual respect in Final Four battle

By Justin C. Smith
Collegian Sports

On game day, Rick Pitino and John Calipari look like they have a lot in common. Both are well-dressed Italians who are coaches of national powerhouses and this season have led their teams to the Final Four. Besides their success on the hardwood and their brand-new suits, the tie that binds them goes much deeper.

Pitino, then the head basketball coach of the New York Knicks was on the committee in search of the new Massachusetts head coach in 1988. As a former player in the Minuteman program, he took pride in trying to get the right man for the job. That man according to Pitino was Calipari, a former Clarion St. point guard. He was so confident in Calipari's ability that he added $5,000 of his own money for him to take the job.

It was money that, as a UMass grad, Pitino felt was an investment worth spent.

"I've seen a lot of great programs develop — John Thompson at Georgetown, Jerry Tarkanian at UNLV in the desert," Pitino said Wednesday. "But John took a program that didn't have money for a secretary, nothing, got an arena built when the state was broke and got them to No. 1 when I thought Top 20 was an impossible task. To say I'm a happy alumnus is putting it simply.

"I knew from day one that Cal would be a great coach. I was positive he'd be terrific. I wish he wasn't as terrific as he is — then maybe we would have a chance to win the National Championship."

Calipari, 38, five years Pitino's junior, always has kept in mind the circumstances in which he has the job he calls "the best college job in the country."

> I wish he wasn't as terrific as he is — then maybe we would have a chance to win the National Championship.
> –Rick Pitino on UMass' John Calipari

"My relationship with coach Pitino is based on the fact that I'm the head coach at the University of Massachusetts because he was on the selection committee and felt I would be good for the job, and he made the calls to make sure it was done," Calipari said. "I never worked for or played for Rick but he's somebody anytime I've had a problem or needed help, I've been able to pick up a phone and he's given me great advice.

"I hope he feels that way even though he doesn't need anything from me."

As Calipari suggests, the Kentucky head coach headed to his third Final Four has seen a lot in his basketball playing and coaching days. Pitino was the captain at the helm of the Providence ship that was the Cinderella story which didn't strike Midnight until facing Syracuse in the National Semifinals.

He also achieved his dream by coaching the New York Knicks in the NBA making the playoffs both years, including a 52-30 mark before taking over the famed Kentucky job. After a 14-14 first year in Lexington, he has averaged 28 victories a season since that 1989-90 campaign. Over that span, Pitino has been the focus of tremendous media attention with these programs, but had very little of that during his playing days at UMass.

"We were a New England program, a regional program," Pitino said of his years in Amherst, where the Redmen went 41-12 over those two seasons. "I get the Boston Herald and Boston Globe sent to me now. I don't remember ever seeing a Herald or Globe reporter when I was there. Now there are big inserts all over and there's the television. Winning was difficult but [Calipari] created an image and that's truly remarkable."

Both coaches have had a similar task this season and have both succeeded in finding an answer to the problem. After losing to Calipari on Nov. 28, Pitino called a team meeting and gave his players a choice on how the season could be handled.

"What I said to the guys was there's two ways we can go," he said. "We're never going to have 11 players of this caliber together again. It could be very difficult on you not playing and difficult on me seeing you unhappy, or look at Larry Bird and Magic Johnson philosophy and play to win. From there everyone cared about one thing — winning."

That same attitude has been taken on all year by Calipari's squad and has been the formula to their success.

"Everyone on this team accepts their role on this team," Calipari said. "No one gets jealous if someone gets 20 points one game. They don't say 'I'm gonna ball fake and drive because he scored 25 the last game.' The practices are wars and everyone on the team has gotten better over the course of the season. They love each other."

It may not be a stretch to say that the two head coaches who will clash Saturday night may love each other as well, as Calipari not only feels he owes much of his success to Pitino, but also that two of the most sought-after college coaches talk to each other as frequently as they have time to. When Kentucky loses, the UMass coach is available to offer a pick-me-up and when Calipari is struggling with something he hasn't experienced before, he can talk to Pitino.

But for the 40 minutes that their respective teams battle it out for a spot in the National Championship game, they are adversaries. Though no matter what happens they will always be friends who truly care about one another.

"This week he's the other coach," Calipari said. "But, win or lose, I'm going to hug him and tell him how much he means to me."

Battle of unlikely finalists

By Bill Barnard
Associated Press

NEW YORK — As the lowest seeded team in the Final Four, Mississippi State is facing no crisis of confidence.

The Bulldogs had to beat Kentucky, then ranked No. 1 and the first team in 40 years to go through the regular season unbeaten in Southeastern Conference games, just to earn a No. 5 seed in the Southeast Regional.

They followed through with impressive victories over top seeds Connecticut and Cincinnati to reach the Final Four for the first time.

All of that convinced Mississippi State and coach Richard Williams that the Starkville, Miss., school belongs right where it is.

"I knew we had talented players, and I thought if they learned their roles and accepted their roles, that we could be a good team," Williams said Wednesday during a conference call for Final Four coaches. "It didn't happen all at once. It was a gradual process."

Williams said he distinguishes between the kind of confidence his team has now and the confidence some teams put on for appearance sake.

"With kids this age, confidence can sometimes be false," he said. "They see it as a sign of weakness if you don't show confidence, even if it isn't real. But as you win games, confidence increases. As you win games against quality teams, confidence becomes more real."

The run of upsets by Mississippi State (26-7) has made the Bulldogs the favorite in Saturday's semifinal against Syracuse (28-8), which is making its first Final Four appearance since 1987 when the Orangemen lost the final game to Indiana on a last-second basket by Keith Smart.

"You can't really say Mississippi State is a surprise the way they handled Kentucky and Georgia in the SEC tournament," Syracuse coach Jim Boeheim said. The Orangemen needed last-second shots in regulation and overtime to defeat Georgia in the NCAA.

Syracuse's 1991 loss as a No. 2 seed to 15th-seeded Richmond was one of the biggest upsets in recent NCAA tournament history. But this year, the Orangemen were given just a marginal chance to even make the field.

"It's quite unexpected for us to be here," Boeheim said. "I thought we had a slim chance, but things had to break right for us. At the beginning of the season, I was worried. I thought we could win 18 games, but I raised my expectations because we played well. I knew it would be a long, long shot (to make the Final Four). But the tournament usually goes that way. There always seems to be a surprise team that sneaks in."

UM hopes to expose weak spot

By Candice Flemming
Collegian Sports

On Nov. 28, 1995, Massachusetts' Marcus Camby helped expose Kentucky's only weakness — if they even have one: lack of a true center.

Camby burned the Wildcats' defense for 32 points, nine rebounds and five blocks en route to UMass' 92-82 upset victory in the Minutemen's season opener.

The Wildcat's talent and depth was supposed to be too much for the Minutemen and their weak bench to handle. But in reality, it was Camby who was too much to handle — and that performance by Camby showed that the Wildcats could have trouble playing against a superior center.

In Kentucky's second loss to Mississippi State, it had trouble with a tough center again — this time Erick Dampier, although the 6-foot-11-inch Dampier didn't have as good of a game as Camby had against the Wildcats. But the "weakness" was still there.

Entering Kentucky's Regional Final matchup with Wake Forest and Tim Duncan, that weakness was put to the test again — and this time Kentucky passed.

The Wildcats held the Demon Deacon's junior All- American to no field goals in the first 28 minutes and just 14 points for the game, 10 of which came from the free throw line.

The Wildcats will hope to do the same to Camby, but the 6-foot-11-inch Hartford native isn't worried.

"I'm not Tim Duncan," he said. "He's mainly a back-to-the-basket player. I'm mostly out on the floor and slashing and cutting to the basket and doing other things. They're going to try to do their best to shut me down. I just have to be prepared.

"I can't wait for the ball to tip."

"He can dominate a game on either end," UMass coach John Calipari said. "What I don't want to do is have Marcus think he has to be anybody other than Marcus in this game and try to do too much. Just be Marcus Camby. If that's not good enough, we're 35-2. That's not bad."

Kentucky coach Rick Pitino is aware of how tough it will be for his team to try to stop Camby this time, as the National Player of the Year has only gotten better since Nov. 28.

"I watch a lot of film and when I watch UMass it's terrible," he said. "Every time Camby blocks a shot I keep getting sick."

Kentucky will try to stop Camby with 6-foot-10-inch seniors Walter McCarty and Mark Pope, along with 6-foot-8-inch sophomore Antoine Walker.

In the earlier matchup between the two squads, McCarty (17 points, seven boards) and Walker (12 points) were solid, while Pope, who was coming off of a 26-point outburst against Maryland in the Wildcat's season opener, was held to just five points by Camby's relentless defense.

The Wildcats are hoping that this time around, their size and depth will hurt UMass. Comparing the two frontcourts, Kentucky has the clear advantage. The Wildcats boast five players who range from 6-8 to 6-10 and average 230 pounds, while UMass has three (215 average weight) and only two (Camby and Inus Norville) see playing time.

"I don't go out to get [muscular] players from Gold's Gym," Calipari said. "I go to basketball courts and look for players. But in the warmup line, this team does not look too impressive. It's a good thing we have to wear shirts or we'd look even less impressive."

Material from the Associated Press was used in this report.

SGA dissolves UM basketball team; Minutemen to play for Hampshire

By Carl Bernstein and Bob Woodward
Special to the Collegian

Frustrated by the University of Massachusetts men's basketball team's loss to the University of Kentucky in Saturday's Final Four match-up, the Student Government Association (SGA) Senate convened in a emergency session Sunday night to dissolve the entire basketball program.

Newly elected SGA President Maurice Caston and Student Trustee Sean Carter forced the motion through the Senate.

"The negative energy emanating from the loss is unacceptable. This is a Division I University. Teams should be playing at that level. This is not Hampshire College," Caston said.

But for the Minutemen, their reality will be just that. Following the SGA meeting, representatives of the Hampshire College experimental postmodern metaphysical education department announced that the team would move to their campus, and adopt the name "Red Scare."

"We are very excited about welcoming [Head Coach] John Calipari and the rest of the team to Hampshire," said Kevin Larimore of Hampshire College.

The move, however, will not be free of complications. Because Hampshire College lacks a facility the size of the Mullins Center, the team will have no home court to play or practice in.

Proposed solutions ranged from building a multi-million dollar, 40,000 seat capacity stadium to be financed by raising tuition at Hampshire from its current rate of $327,000 to $350,000, to asking the Minutemen to devote their talents to Ultimate Frisbee, which is already a established program at the college.

Reactions from students at both schools have been varied thus far.

Hampshire students expressed dismay at the possibility of tuition hikes, while exacerbated University of Massachusetts students stumbled into incoherency in reaction to the SGA's move.

"This is simply... to think that... bah, grrr," said freshman computer science major Alexander Cook.

Perhaps the most worried students at the University were those of the UMass zoo disc Ultimate team, which groaned at the prospects of increased competition from Hampshire College.

Team member Andrew Wright, 5-foot-2, said he was not looking forward to matching up against 6-foot-11 Marcus Camby.

"This will usher in the era of Hampshire Ultimate hegemony within the Pioneer Valley," Wright said.

The basketball team could not be reached for comment as they were detained by New York City Police Sunday after illegally entering the Bronx petting zoo.

However, an anonymous source close to the team said that they were excited about the fact that Hampshire College does not rate its student with a formal grade point average system.

The Minutemen's move to Hampshire College will formally end the school's attempt to acquire the Seattle Seahawks to jump start their faltering football program.

MONTREAL, Canada (ASS) — In a surprise move today, Canada succeeded from the British Empire and severed all ties with the British government and monarchy.

The prime minister announced late last night that Canada would become a part of the United States with each of the provinces becoming a new state.

"Although Quebec has some real problems with the whole French-Canadian culture thing, we haven't had any ill-will from the provinces," he said.

Opponents of the move stated several reasons against the Canadians' decision. "I don't want to have to convert to the metric system and learn to speak 'eh'," Jo Bob Evans, of Nashville said. "Besides, it's real cold up there."

President Bill Clinton said he was happy with the move, as it would allow him several million more women to hit on. Hillary Rodham-Clinton was also pleased. "I can't wait to check out the red-hot fashions coming out of Ontario and Saskatchewan," she said.

Alanis Morrisette, Canadian and alternative-pop star, was also pleased with Canada's decision. "With the success of my latest album, hopefully, Americans will only know about that and Canadians will never remember my tragically horrific, mid-'80s, Debbie Gibson–wannabe first album. My goal is to become like my American friend, Candice Flemming."

AMHERST (ASS) — Student trustee also-ran Joseph Fountain yesterday announced that he will seek even broader ambitions.

Following in the footsteps of Ross Burns... err Perot, Fountain will run as a third-party candidate in the 1996 Presidential Election.

Already the National Campaign Finance committee is suspending Fountain's campaign for two weeks for spending his own money.

Prior to the suspension however, Fountain detailed his platform for being elected:

1. He will immediately lower the drinking age to 12-years- old. 2. Impose a 50 percent tax on anyone who makes more than he does. 3. He will immediately disband all student government organizations and place all members under arrest in federal jails.

Citing the above story about the addition of Canada to the United States, Fountain will move the U.S. capital city to Toronto so he may pursue the lovely bartendress that lives in that city.

According to a USA Today \ CNN Poll, Fountain is already ahead of Dole and Clinton, because voters believe "he will get the job done."

Greeks leave frat row for Campus Center

By Anastasia "Queen of Stress" Kudrez
Collegian Serf

The Greek Affairs Council at the University of Massachusetts approved a decision at a council meeting this morning to relocate all the fraternity and sorority houses to the Campus Center Hotel.

The decision was based on the perception that the distance between the houses is detrimental to a unified Greek community. With all the Greeks living in the same building, the rush process, Greek Council meetings, philanthropy projects and community cohesiveness will be simplified and improved.

Each fraternity and sorority will be allotted 6 rooms in the hotel. Houses which require additional space will be given the option to convert storage space in the bottom of the Campus Center garage into living quarters or meeting rooms.

The old houses will be vacated by the end of April, and the university plans to bid for their purchase. The buildings will be gutted and refurbished into university guest houses for distinguished visitors. One local realtor owns all the property. If she decides not to sell the houses to UMass, the buildings will be razed, and the land will be used for potato farming. The University is expected to fight the potato farming proposal, because the strong odor of cow dung fertilizer could be detrimental for recruiting prospective students.

At the Greek Council meeting, most members expressed approval of the move. The council is now in the process of arranging meals, parking, and common space for students moving into the hotel.

The Hatch has agreed to provide meals for the Greek community. Using a similar meal plan system to University dining services, the Hatch will allow the students to order food three times a day, Monday through Friday. On the weekends, Mike Wiseman, director of Greek Affairs, will cook lunch and dinner in a new barbecue pit on the Metawampe Lawn.

There has been a tentative proposal to add an additional level to the garage for Greek parking, but the council needs to consult an architect before further discussion. The new level could also have a common lounge for the Greek community. If this proposal is turned down, a new parking lot will be built between the pond and Old Chapel, and the Collegian office will be used as the Greek social lounge.

The next meeting to discuss the proposed move will be the Saturday, April 6 at 7 a.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium. All members of the Greek community are invited to attend.

Grass trampling fines installed

Chancellor to set up task force to solve sunbathing issue

By Daniel Sullivan
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts Police are starting a crackdown on illegal trespassing starting today. Police officers will begin to fine individuals for failure to use walkways and trampling on the grass.

"If it was up to me, I wouldn't be doing this," Police Chief Kevin Malloy said. "We have been ordered from the Chancellor to do it."

Individuals with a valid identification card will be fined $75 for walking or running on grass. People without a valid identification will be assessed a $50 fine for a similar offense, said Malloy.

"The discretion in fines is easily explained," Malloy said. "If you are parking in a purple lot and have a yellow sticker they do the same thing. Also, college students should be much smarter than the rest of the campus."

Dogs will be encouraged to use walkways, said Malloy. However, if a dog wishes to "relieve itself" owners are asked to have it done on the grass, said Paul Winters, of the agriculture department.

"The dog's excrement will provide a great fertilizer for the soil," Winters said. "It will be hard to train a dog not to run around on the grass fields, but we have made the football parking lot available for their exercise.

"We expect seniors to be the hardest group of people to coerce to stop trampling on the grass," Winters said. "Hey, they have been here for four to five years and have habits. First-year students, however, are the ones we expect to abide by the new policy.

In a few years, the University will have everyone brain- washed into not daring to tread on the grass," said Winters. "The tour guides have been instructed to warn prospective students and their parents about the rule." Malloy said. "If we can stamp out the delinquents before they even enter the University, then we have made some real progress."

> "One day it is a dandelion, the next day it is the campus that is being trampled on and destroyed. Once we lose our grass, where will we be? Communism started the same way. No, we won't let them tell us what two plus two is!"

Students are outraged with this new policy. To make such a foolish policy goes beyond the scope of sanity of the chancellor, said junior French major Kristi Morong.

"How the heck am I going to be able to sun bathe?" Morong said. "I've tried lying on the concrete paths, and it's just not as comfortable, and people on bikes kept hitting me. If they're going to do this, they should set up special mattresses for people to lie on."

The Chancellor is setting up a task force on sun bathing, said University spokesman Gabe Kotter.

"We understand that students want tans," Kotter said. "But, it's going to take a while for us to determine how their right to tint their epidermis relates to the grass' right to grow in a safe environment."

Blossom Bialik, president of the Future Flower Fans of America, said it was a great idea.

"Finally, the University is taking a step in the right direction. One day it is a dandelion, the next day it is the campus that is being trampled on and destroyed. Once we lose our grass, where will we be? Communism started the same way. No, we won't let them tell us what two plus two is!"

Dining Commons food gives Chancellor Scott 'mad cow' disease

El Torbino
Collegio Staff

The Lord preaches that gambling is a sin, and Chancellor David K. Scott has shown how those who make wagers, even seemingly harmless ones, are generally damned in the end.

Scott felt so confident in the abilities of the men's basketball team to defeat Kentucky on Saturday night that he had to receive something in exchange from University of Kentucky President Charles T. Wethington.

Rather than a liquor-related bet, similar to the two universities' accounting departments, Scott opted for a healthier one.

"I'm so sure that UMass will kick Kentucky's ass, that if, by some sort of miracle, Pitino's punks happen to upset our totally bitchin' team, I will actually eat in one of our campus DCs," Scott said, well aware of the health hazards that would entail.

In lieu of munching on Kentucky Fried Chicken, which he had heard was the "cool" thing to do this weekend. Scott dined at Worcester Dining Commons and ordered the southern fried steak, passing on the baked scrod.

Almost immediately upon taking his first bite of the world-renowned UMass delicacy, Scott convulsed horribly, leading a sophomore biology major, Vinny Manacotti from Revere, seated at the next table to wonder if the chancellor was just either "tripping on some wicked bad acid, or celebrating the latest tuition hike."

After approximately 20 minutes spent in a dazed condition, the chancellor stripped naked and painted "Kentucky Fucking Sucks" across his chest in stale blue cheese salad dressing.

EMTs from Cooley-Dickinson hospital arrived about 35 minutes later, after taking a pit-stop at "Adults Only Video Store" in Hadley, to freshen up on their anatomy.

The EMTs immediately narrowed down the chancellor's ailment to either mad cow disease or a rare strain of the ebola virus, which is secretly housed in the basement of the Whitmore Building in the event that student morale ever reached levels above "comatose."

UMass police officers took a break from their strenuous work checking for speeders and playing gin rummy to interrogate the DC kitchen staff about the meal.

"We had originally intended to serve that beef as 'London Broil,'" a DC worker said. The worker asked to remain unidentified because of fear that the CIA and would discover his previous identity as David Koresh.

"When it came off the boat from England, some hooligans had vomited on it and etched 'Glory, Glory Man. United, 1993 FA Cup Champs' in the crusted part. Since we couldn't conceal it with a brown magic marker, we had to throw the batter on it and call it southern fried steak."

One unidentified Forestry and Wildlife Conservation major said that although he wasn't affected by the southern fried steak, he has built up a tolerance to the meal, and was not surprised by the reaction of Scott, a DC virgin.

"He was a little crazy, but it's nothing I haven't seen from freshmen before; I remember one time last year when they served southern fried steak, and some poor kid had a monster leap out of his stomach like that scene in Spaceballs. Now that was nasty. I think the chancellor will be just fine. Peace."

After the quarter landed on tails, the EMTs concluded that Scott had mad cow disease and took the necessary actions. The DC's ice cream bar and milk dispensers were removed, and an hour later the building was evacuated.

Scott, with a bell draped from his neck, was packed into the back of a horse trailer and taken to the Hadley Farm for study. If he checks out, Scott will become a poster-boy for Ben & Jerry's ice cream.

"We'll take good care of the chancellor," Hadley Farm official Gomer McSomething said. "He's taking well to his new name of Bessy, and seems to be adapting well to not having to search for a toilet every time he has to poop."

Chancellor David K. Scott

Thrash Master's debut is a joyride; Ass Monkeys shy from mainstream

By Tara Mortal Kombat Connelly & Chris Connor

THRASH MASTER
Incitement to Fornicate
MYOB Records

What do you call a band that cites its influences as Pantera, Anthrax and Dr. Teeth and the Electric Keys? A band that is not only surprisingly insightful, but morally directed.

Thrash Master is not your typical hardcore, chain smoking group, in fact its members (Marl Boro, Pen Mall, Cam Elle and Newton Port) were not only members of the young Republican group in college, but also plan to launch their own benefit campaign to elect Pat Buchanan.

Their debut album is a collage of messages and swoony love songs that bring you back to the days in the old junior high gym. "I Want You But Your Curfew is at 10" is a plaintive ballad that lead singer Marl Boro thought of after his first date.

Other tracks like "Sniffing Glue," "Use Me, but Please Recycle" each carry equally haunting messages about the life the four friends were forced to lead in the small mid-western town of Notallthere, Minn. Their songs are laced with tasty guitar licks and pounding percussions. They also catch the listener with hooky chords and surprising Beatle-esque harmonies.

"We wanted people to be aware of the things around them. We are all one people under the sun and I think that our music says that," Cam Elle, the drummer, said in a recent press release.

Perhaps the most stunning track on the 12-song album is "Life Sucks and I Want to Die" which grips the listener in a torrent of emotion when Marl Boro wails in lament, "Why did she have to die?/ Life has no meaning without her? Who will I come home from school to?/ Who will I walk around the block/ Who will chew up my shoes?"

Incitements to Fornicate is a music must and definitely something you will want to rock on with indefinitely. A (TMKC)

ASS MONKEYS
Live Ass Monkeys
Indie Boy Records

Having turned down a record deal with a major label, the Ass Monkeys are back with their new 47-track EP, culled from their 1995 tour. The band, which consists of three or four members who refuse to give their names for fear of selling out, shows growing musical maturity on this release. Who knew so much sonic joy could be derived from an ensemble comprised of a two-string guitar (both strings tuned to D flat), a 32-key Casio keyboard and a flatulent hamster.

Each song clocks in at under seven seconds, longer than their any of the tunes from their past discs (1991's Extra Ass, Hold the Monkeys, Sir and 1993's Ass Monkeys Alone in the Barnyard: When The Sheep Come Home), yet still manage to retain the same sassy Beatle-esque harmonies and tasty guitar licks that mark their sound.

The political themes are back as well — the verse "Meet my fingers in the needle jar/Are there tomatoes present?" speaks for itself in the album's most poignant and self-revealing track, "Democratic Party in My Pants."

Legendary producer and label founder Matt Audette got the most out of his mom's credit cards on this one — and I ain't monkeying with your ass. A (Chris Conner)

BUCK NASTEE
Saddle and Prod Smoothin'
Redneck the Real Records

"I ain't the biggest hoss in the stable/But I ain't no pony" is the sultry line that opens the second release of music's best hybrid Country/R&B crooner, Buck Nastee. Imagine the product of Vince Gill's mother having a fling with Johnny Gill's father, and you might get a sense of the type of original sound Nastee produces. What separates the 23-year-old Nashville native (who now resides in Compton) from the rest of the crowd is his urgently sexual, yet down-home lyricism that peppers his work. When he cries out the clever double-entendre "Hay, hay, hay/ Can I get a little of your pile?" in the ballad "Hay is for Horses Like Me," you know he means it. My advice is not to just get dirty tonight with your filly or stud — it's time to get Nastee. A (C.C.)

A Midspring Eveglom's evening

'Twas brillig and the slithy toves did gyre and gible in the wabe:
all mimsy were the borogoves,
and the mome raths outgrabe."

Lewis Carroll haad quite a way with words.

If only they were in English.

Every once in awhile you wish people would just tell it to you straight in plain English. Unfortunately, that's not always as facile as it seems.

Allow me to illustrate as I relate the tale of my latest eveglom's swevening.

When I woke up this graking I was slurgy and bedgang. As I was lying there I couldn't get the prior eveglom's swevening out of my head. In one of my dreams, I was diagnosed with artolatry. I was archarme after a bugle- beareded, bubukley, clichevachey catercap wearing choppins. His slops were made of marry-muff, his jacket was middle-good. Both paggled and gumbled.

When I came close to him, I realized he was wet, bespawled. Moreover, he had skilfer! It was disgusting. I was certainly pitchkettled as to my niassy attraction to him.

His belly quaggled. He thought he was pawky, smickly, snarp, vafrous, geason. But in reality he was a franion – a bellyfriend. He chuntered and chanked, constuprated and clointered, excarnificated and flumed. He had a horrid hogo and dricksie flesh-spades which were painted red with fucus.

He tried to eyebite me and floited as I walked by. He ran over and halched and greeped me. He laughed. It was a brussling, carked, farburden laugh that batterfanged my ears.

Then he called me, "Muskin."

I yerred. My stomach was walkming.

He was extremely thrunched. He grabbed me and swingled me around. I tried to worble out of his grasp but

Then he prangled me in ravary, full of misdelight at his misdeedy. I noggled back as he tried to make loveship.

Stacey Shackford

the guy was zowerswopped, as you might imagine.

I wondered what he had eaten. He kelked in my face. It smelled horrible. Flammick and forebroad maybe? What about drink? He was definitely potvaliant, probably full of clamberscull.

Just when I thought it couldn't get any worse, he started dancing. It was a lavalt, a lusty gallant. He hotched around the room, friked and frampled. Then he prangled me in ravary, full of misdelight at his misdeedy. I noggled back as he tried to make loveship.

"No!" I freamed. "No! No! No!"

Then suddenly the garboil was over. There was a moment of frith. Of all farties, that was definitely a misdeful afterclap. I was dretched. But now it was over. I had a flurch to do. It was going to be quite the male journey. Seelihead was far away; perhaps after noonscape or even twatter-light.

So I convinced myself that no matter how wondsome I became – no matter how much wanweird life threw in my way or wowf and unsmod my day got – I could always find a way to unpucker.

This was the most important lesson I gleamed from my eveglom's swevening. Sometimes it is necessary for all of us to reflect and discover the same thing.

I hope I have not dry-ditched here. I hope you have all taken my flodder to heart, for it has not been said in double- tongue. I know that I have perhaps courred holy water a bit, but in today's day and age it is important to use proper English.

So, a brinch to you, my copesmates! Banana cream and tapioca delight. Happy April first!

Biography reveals Walter's hidden side

EMILY DICKENSON
Barbara Waa Waa: Unplugged: An Unauthorized Biography
Dummy Publishers

"I hate doing interviews," Barbara Walters confesses to a friend in 'Barbara Waa Waa: Unplugged, An Unauthorized Biography of one of the leading women journalists and co- host of the celebrated news show, "20/20." According to author Emily Dickenson, the book is conversations from actual lunches taken with Walters and at several house parties she attended where, "Barbie toked it up with the best of them."

The books explores Walter's feelings about many of her interviews and a startling portrayal of life in "20/20."

"The Patrick Swayze interview really got to me. He can't mambo worth a damn," Walters said, "and the part when he cried after talking about his father?! Please, it's been done about a thousand times."

Walters, who confined that she really wants to interview Princess Di ("that adulterous bitch") and Martha Stewart ("I think her cookie recipes suck"), reveals that interviews with celebrities are perhaps the most tortuous things she has ever done.

"Celebrities are so self-absorbed. They all want me to do interviews — as if talking to me could possibly save their failing careers. I'm a journalist for chrissakes, not a goddamn miracle worker."

Walters, a closet chronic chain smoker, is rumored to have made several passes at co-host Hugh Downs. It was also revealed that the two often played footsies during commercial breaks, but he broke it off soon after.

"Hugh and I have always been attracted to each other. It makes me so mad that he'd never acknowledge it in public. He's such a cold bastard," Walters said.

Once Walters went on a rampage when some mistakenly stole her jar of dippity do hair gel from her dressing room. She refused to tape the show until an identical jar was found. Described as "queen bitch" and "her royal pain in the can" by several crew members, some even recounted a taping where Walters said:

"If I have to do another sappy show about some dramatic life or death situation I'm walking. I don't bust my ass to do some 'Cops' like crap and I sure as hell ain't no William Shatner."

Walters even refused to do an interview with an unnamed celebrity after the person made eye contact with her before the taping started — a rule of thumb Walters picked up after her affair with L.Z.'s frontman, Bono during his Zoo Station Tour.

Dickenson — a life long friend of Walters – she wanted to reveal a side of Walters that no one has ever seen before.

"I got the idea for this book after Barbie stole my boyfriend in high school. I just wanted until she had her back turned and I went for the kill. She thinks she's sooo perfect. I just thought it was time she got some of it back."

Paramedic Fired Over Gruesome Cards of Death

FREMONT, Calif. (AP) — An ambulance company has fired a paramedic who helped create packs of trading cards showing photos of mangled corpses.

Paul Schmidt, who was suspended Feb. 14 from his job at American Medical Response-West, lost his job Friday after refusing to give up the business.

Schmidt, 29, already has filed a union grievance, and he may go to court to save his job.

"It's a dark day in America if this stands," Schmidt said. "If you don't stand up for your rights as an American, what have you got left?"

A decision has yet to made about his former business partner and fellow paramedic, Todd Quilici. Schmidt has bought out Quilici's portion of the business, known as QSA Inc.

American Medical said Schmidt was fired because he was "operating a business while on duty that is in conflict with the business interests of (AMR)," according to the termination notice.Schmidt and Quilici planned to sell 3,000 nine-card packs for $8.95 each. The men have said they intended to do good with the cards, which carry messages about how deaths — from drunken driving to suicide — can be avoided.

Hostage prison director makes emotional appeal for prisoners'

By Gary Richman
Associated Press

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — As an inmate trained a gun on him from behind, the director of a maximum-security prison climbed atop a prison wall Sunday to appeal to the government to meet the demands of his inmate captors.

"Brazil doesn't need another Carandiru!" Nicola Limongi cried out, referring to a 1992 prison uprising in metropolitan Sao Paulo in which state troopers killed 111 inmates.

Police sounded sirens to drown out the shouts of the director, who stood on a perimeter wall at his Agro-Industrial Penitentiary between a line of police sharpshooters and armed inmates. Police said they had heard enough of the demands of the inmates, who hold 23 officials and reporters seized on a prison tour four days earlier.

Hoop defeat leads to Southwest unrest

By Melanie Arruda, Laura Stock & Daniel Sullivan
Collegian Staff

Following the University of Massachusetts basketball team's defeat Saturday night, Southwest Residential Area saw fires, rampant vandalism and injuries to at least eight individuals who were taken to Cooley Dickinson Hospital, according to University spokeswoman Karin Sherbin.

Individuals sustained injuries including severe lacerations from punching out glass, minor injuries from falling down William D. Mullins Center stairs, knocked out teeth and a person with a broken nose and jaw.

Over 1,000 people congregated near the pyramids in front of Washington Residence Hall when the game ended at 10 p.m., said Sherbin. The screaming crowd gathered in a circle, tossed glass bottles, ignited fireworks and began fighting in "mosh pit" fashion.

"I was walking back from Coolidge [Residence Hall] at the end of the game when I saw a plate glass window come flying out of JA [John Adams Residence Hall] and smash all over the ground," said Jared Urban, a sophomore environmental science major. "I saw a piece of shattered glass hurt a girl's hand."

A six-foot table was thrown through the window of the 11th floor lounge of Washington Residence Hall. Glass bottles were thrown toward the crowd from several floors.

"I heard a really loud bang like a gun shot and saw a cop run towards Washington," Urban said in reference to the table hitting the ground.

University police, state police and a state tactical unit made their presence known across campus throughout the day. A state helicopter flew overhead and shone a searchlight on the crowd.

"There were definitely police everywhere," said Michele Casey, a sophomore school of management major.

"I don't think [the police] could do anything to stop it," said Elizabeth Morrison, a sophomore food science major.

Final 4 loss to Kentucky ends UM basketball's dream season

By Candice Flemming
Collegian Staff

EAST RUTHERFORD, NJ — At the beginning of the season, it seemed impossible.

This was supposed to be a rebuilding year for the Massachusetts men's basketball team. Last year was the year for the Minutemen to make it to the Final Four.

But last season UMass fell short, and this season the Minutemen defied the odds becoming one of the best teams in the country. They sprinted out to a 26-0 record before losing to George Washington 86-76 on Feb. 24 and entered the NCAA tournament with a 31-1 record. They kept on winning in the tourney, beating Central Florida, Stanford, Arkansas, and a tough Georgetown squad, to advance to the first Final Four in school history.

But the magical ride ended late Saturday night when the Minutemen were ousted by Kentucky 81-74 in the national semi-finals at the Meadowlands. Syracuse won the other semi-final with a 77-69 victory over Mississippi State.

With the loss UMass ends it season with a 35-2 record, a record that will be better than Syracuse's or Kentucky's even if either team wins the National Championship.

Massachusetts coach John Calipari said he was proud of the team and their accomplishments.

"I was proud of our guys. I told the team after this game in the locker room that I learned more about myself as a coach and a person this year, than I have in all my other years of coaching, and I thanked them." Calipari said. "Because you're talking about unbelievable human beings that I coached this year. And it may never happen for me to coach a group [like this again]."

The Minutemen will lose Dana Dingle, Donta Bright, Rigoberto Nunez, Ted Cottrell and Giddel Padilla from this year's squad.

UMass could also lose junior Marcus Camby, the winner of numerous Player of the Year honors, if The Hartford native decides to forego his final year and enter the NBA draft. When asked about his future Camby responded, "I haven't thought nothing about it, I'm just down right now."

Bulger attends reception for new Honors students

By Jonathan Liberty
Collegian Staff

President William Bulger attended an Honors reception on Friday at the William D. Mullins Memorial Center to welcome prospective Honors Program students to the University of Massachusetts at Amherst.

"I am a newcomer myself to this great University," said Bulger. "For almost three months now I have been the president of this jewel of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts."

Over 800 potential UMass students and parents gathered in the Mullins center. At the department fair they received information from Honors faculty, staff and students from over 50 departments and programs.

"[The Honors Program is] here to help the dreams of the students become a reality," said the Director of the Honors Program Linda Nolan.

Director of the Office Undergraduate Admissions, Arlene Cash, who co-sponsored the event with the Honors Program said, "I give my personal congratulations to all of the students here who have been accepted by the honors program. I also congratulate their parents for instilling excellence in them."

The prospective students and parents attended special interest sessions on financial aid services, University athletics and the marching band.

The students were also welcomed by the Honors Chorale, which sang two songs, one of which was their own version of Simon and Garfunkel's "Scarborough Fair."

Nolan then explained the benefits of the UMass Honors Program.

"The Honors Program allows the students to feel the small college atmosphere with the advantage of the diversity of a large college," Nolan said.

There are approximately 370 students in the freshman Honors class. Honors courses usually number less than 20 students per class. Individual counseling is available for Honors students while the Meet UMass Lecture creates an environment for honors students to meet each other.

Nolan introduced Bulger by stating that being the father of nine children, he is an adept counselor for concerned parents.

"This is an outstanding Honors Program in which [prospective students] will work with world renowned scholars," Bulger said.

Caston and Carter win SGA elections

By Michael Elliott
Collegian Staff

After a series of set-backs, constitutional miscalculations and 11 straight hours of ballot counting, the winning candidates for the Student Government Association (SGA) elections for academic year 1996-97 were announced early Friday morning.

Maurice Caston defeated Larry Plano for SGA President handily. His term will officially begin Wednesday at the SGA Senate meeting.

Sean Carter triumphed in a three way race for Student Trustee over Neil Collins and Joseph Fountain. While he will not assume that post until current Trustee Dan Rivera steps down in July, Carter will be present at this week's Board of Trustees meeting in Boston.

Several others races for various Area Government positions resulted in a tie and will be settled by a vote of the SGA Senate, as mandated in their constitution.

Students defeated a referendum which sought their opinion of a proposal to place surveillance cameras into Residence Halls for security purposes.

After these results, Castellano said student sentiment was so strongly opposed to the idea that the SGA will no longer consider security cameras in Residence Halls an option.

"For all intents and purposes, [the election] killed the issue," Castellano said.

Ballot counting began at approximately 8 p.m. on Thursday night and continued until 7 a.m. Friday morn-

Majors fair to answer questions

Students get opportunity for personal course selection counseling

By Daniel Sullivan
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Advising Center is holding a majors fair on Tuesday night from 6 to 8 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom.

The Advising Center has invited every University department to the event, said Karen Blumlein, a graduate student advisor. Usually over 60 various organizations attend the event and provide displays or hands-on demonstrations, said Blumlein.

"We encouraged faculty to attend the event because they know the requirements and can answer questions about the job field," Blumlein said.

The fair allows students to clear up questions from the undergraduate catalogue, said advisor and graduate student Rani Levy.

"It allows students to put a voice to the catalogue," Levy said. "Sometimes the catalogue isn't completely up to date, so students can get more information to explain requirements."

The event allows students who are not familiar with departments to get a more complete picture, Levy said.

"This is such a big University that sometimes students feel alienated and don't feel like they get a chance to talk to the professors," Levy said.

"It can really help for students who don't feel comfortable with, have time conflicts with their professors," said Blumlein. "They can come to the fair to meet with professors and talk to them on a personal level."

University Advising Center scheduled the event to take place prior to the fall pre-registration to help decide which classes to take, said Blumlein. Students who have taken courses have been asked to attend, said Blumlein.

"Students can talk to other students to find out about course load," Blumlein said. "They can find out which classes are the hardest and take the most time commitment."

Most students who are not positive about classes to take next semester should take a balance of general education classes with classes they find interesting, said Blumlein. Students can find interesting classes to fulfill requirements in different majors, said Levy.

This is the first time students in the Joint Admissions program have been invited to the event, said Blumlein. Community colleges across the state have been asked to attend the fair, said Blumlein.

The fair will include refreshments and entertainment for all visitors. A Celtic band will be performing, according to Levy.

"We chose the music because this is a stressful time, but an exciting one as well," Levy said. "The music gives a spring-time feeling, is loud and full of energy."

...making the disturbance, according to Sherbin. Three non-student individuals were charged with disorderly conduct, said Sherbin. The other person a student was also charged with disorderly conduct from 6 p.m. Saturday to 7 a.m. Sunday. University police respond...to 57 calls concerning fights and vandalism being broken, said Sherbin.

"I saw state police in riot gear standing around," Brian Ruden a former HRTA major said. "People were throwing bottles at them and the cops were near the Dining Commons."

Several small newspaper fires were burning near the pyramids, according to Ruden. Police were standing around the fires making sure they were contained, he said.

"It was a very active night," Sherbin said.

Costs of the vandalism have not been totaled, she said.

The outcome of the basketball game is somewhat related to the violence and vandalism, according to Morrison.

"I was pretty surprised that it was so bad, seeing as though we lost," Morrison said. "I can't imagine what it would have been like if we had won."

"I think the main cause was a lot of alcohol mixed with a lot of testosterone," Morrison said.

Cooley Dickinson Hospital had extra doctors and nurses on call as a preventative measure. Extra doctors and nurses were not needed to be called in, said Dr. Ted Lindsey, emergency room physician at Cooley Dickinson Hospital.

"With this program you will be a very valuable person when you leave this University."

Bulger also said that 92 percent of Honors graduates from the class of 1995 were highly satisfied with the quality of the institution and that 75 percent were accepted to their first choice graduate school.

He added that 94 percent of Honors Program graduates from the class of 1993 would recommend the school and the program to a friend.

Bulger ended his welcome saying, "I hope that you will all be part of the student body who will graduate from this wonderful University in the year 2000."

Later Bulger addressed the issue that he has not yet been to campus to speak with students who already attend the University.

"I am not sure of my schedule; it would be best to check with my office," Bulger said. "I have been to all five campuses as often as possible."

"It feels good that Bulger gives us his consideration," said prospective Honors student Eric Rekeda. "But if I were a UMass student I would not be too happy that this Honors Reception is the first time Bulger has spoken formally with students."

"Maybe he is starting with us," said prospective Honors student Mara France.

Campus tours concluded the Honors Reception.

Hillel gives farewell to Heller

THANG VO / COLLEGIAN

Delphine Quarles (left), organizational advisor for Campus Activities, extends her thanks to Yehudit Heller, assistant director of Hillel, for her dedicated work at Hillel House.

By Jacob W. Michaels
Collegian Staff

A little over 12 years ago, she came to Amherst from Jerusalem and "the writing stopped." Recently, the "writing came back," and so now she is leaving the University.

Yehudit Heller, author and assistant director of Hillel at UMass–Amherst, is leaving her job to focus on her writing career.

"It's just time for me to go, to do other things," Heller said. "I would love to make some time for me to write and to go back to school, to a Ph.D. program right now, and for whatever else is there."

Heller said her decision was made in part because her first book of poetry is being released in Israel in June and she wanted to do some "last minute work" on it.

Heller came to Amherst a little over 12 years ago, when her husband was accepted to the master's program at the University. They had originally planned to leave after he received his degree, but ended up staying so he could get his Ph.D.

"As time went by, my husband changed to a Ph.D., and I wasn't prepared to stay that long," she said. "It took me a while to [adjust], but I think that's like everybody who comes from elsewhere. The writing stopped for a few years because I had to learn to live in another language."

During that time, she took a job at Hillel, which helped her adjust to her new home. There, according to Hillel Rabbi Saul Perlmutter, her duties involved "being a resource to students, helping them plan programs, helping various committees function and grow. She helped train student leaders, helping give them the skills to be more effective."

Heller said her greatest accomplishment as assistant director was putting Hillel on the University map.

"I think it's like a mosaic. When I came there was a tiny little organization in a tiny little room in the Student Union," she said. "I think the accomplishment is looking around us today and seeing what Jewish life is all about, and it's more than one thing."

Heller, along with Delphine Quarles, the director of Campus Activities Advising Center, also helped set up the conversation between Maya Angelou and Elie Wiesel last semester.

For Perlmutter, the conversation was her "most outstanding program."

"To come up with an idea and help implement an idea that brings 6,000 people together to hear speakers is just amazing," he said. "I also think that event did a lot to help build positive relations."

Quarles, who also served for seven years as an advisor to Hillel, said the event came about from "two good friends having a conversation and thinking about people who have touched so many different people's lives in so many ways, cross–culturally. It was an idea that was embraced by the University community and the University made it happen."

Yet, Perlmutter said Heller also made a bigger contribution while working here.

"She really made a difference in people's lives. That can't be measured by any one thing," he said. "Alumni continue to call up and ask how Yehudit is... even years after they graduate."

It is those students who she said she will miss the most.

"It's missing it in a soft way, not in a feeling I'm missing something," said an emotional Heller. "[I will miss] the special heartbeat of this campus. I'm a person that likes excitement and certain energies. These things nourish, and I don't talk just about the tensions and the problems... I talk about the beauty of the culture."

Perlmutter said her leaving "means that we're lacking a skilled, seasoned, experienced professional who brought a great deal of creativity and commitment to helping, to working with students, to building a strong and vibrant Jewish community. And we will miss her involvement in that."

Quarles said, "I believe that while she is leaving the Hillel foundation, she will always be with the University community and continue to be an invaluable resource to all of us."

Men's violence subject of forum

By Daniel Sullivan
Collegian Staff

Men are the predominant perpetrators of violence on the University of Massachusetts campus, said the organizer of Friday's community action forum.

"We are here share information on what resources are available," said Philip Copeland, a junior philosophy major who co-organized the event.

The forum brought Merle Ryan from the Dean of Students office, Dr. Kent Poey, of University Mental Health Services, Grant Ingle, of the Office of Human Relations, the University Ombudsman Bob Ackerman, Nicole Labbe, of UMass T.E.A.C.H., as well as students and other University services.

A shared opinion of the group was to make more opportunities available and find ways to get people to use these services.

"Ideas focusing on preventions is a key," Labbe said. "We need to make motivation and communication available."

Individuals who are violent, need to be able to recognize they generally have a lower level of anger frustration, said Poey. Men voluntarily come to him on a one–on–one basis to discuss their violence, he said.

"They need to recognize it, take a time out — walk out of the room," Poey said. "Their partners need to know about it and they should return when they have calmed down. They need to gain control of something they previously didn't have."

Courses to train people to be counselors and to educate people about violence are proactive ways to prevent violence, according to Labbe.

"The UMass T.E.A.C.H. program was started this semester through the education program," Labbe said. "We have peer intervention workshops in the dorms. Students run the hour– and–a–half workshops."

A set area for men to meet was discussed at the forum. The Everywomen's Center has a similar service, but focuses on prevention and counseling for victims of sexual crimes, said Amanda Clapp, an educational advocate for the Everywomen's Center.

"We have a 24–hour hotline and provide counseling," Clapp said. "It is a good source for men and women alike. We have workshops for the community pro–active services like rape prevention."

The Mental Violence Program gives men tools to combat sexual violence and makes a commitment to intervention of violence, according to Ryan.

"If men would be more free to discuss issues in front of other men, they would be able to vent ideas they have," Ryan said. "We should start slowly and change ideas, and make a greater awareness on campus."

"During the '70s, it was hard because men felt embarrassed to go to groups to discuss feelings," Poey said. "We were preaching to the converted, not the actual perpetrators."

The forum discussed having programs to help with multiple problems including alcohol abuse and violence. Many of the times, a person is put in a program for alcohol, but their violence problem is ignored, said Poey.

"Eighty percent of violence happens while a person is intoxicated," Poey said. "Most men aren't violent. The bystander tendency of people hearing yelling and not doing anything needs to be stopped. Creating an ally system for stopping violence is important."

After nearly 18 years of leadership and service to the students and staff at the University of Massachusetts, William Harris, the director of the Campus Center is retiring.

Nearly 150 students, friends, fraternity members, co-workers and state politicians gathered at the Top of the Campus Restaurant for an evening reception on Friday, to honor Harris on "William Harris Day," as declared by Springfield Mayor Michael J. Albano. Albano cited Harris' dedication and achievement in the Springfield community for improving the overall quality of life in the educational system and community in general.

A graduate of Ohio State University and a retired Air Force Officer, Harris served as the Director of the Student Center at Rutgers University. Hired by UMass in 1979, Harris has served as the head administrator responsible for the daily operation of the Campus Center–Student Union Complex.

"Every team has to have a good bench, and I am fortunate to have worked with a staff so dedicated," said Harris, praising a dedicated staff of nearly 300 part–time student workers and 178 full–time employees. "I really appreciate my experience with everyone. You have to understand that this is a student center — and since it is adjunct to the formal process of education, we ran this accordingly — students are our business."

"Bill is especially unparalleled in his work with students," said Matt Auger, student chair of the Campus Center– Student Union Commission. "I have known him for three years, and have never met a person so accessible to students. So many students have been affected by him. Everyone needs a friend like Bill Harris."

Many in attendance took the opportunity to take the podium and reminisce career experiences with Harris, the majority making it clear that he epitomized a true leader: honest, understanding, hard–working, and most of all — always listening.

"He was always there for students when they needed him — even for personal problems," said Donna Motica, secretary to Harris.

Over the years, Harris' staff has been essential in providing students and the University Community with services and amenities such as the Baybank and Shawmut automated tellers, student murals located on the Campus Center Concourse, televisions, vending machines, food services in the Hatch and Bluewall, the Graduate Lounge, hotel, University Store, Copy Center, and other services located in the upper floors of the Campus Center.

"Privatization has always been a hot topic on campus," said Auger, citing Harris' strong desire keep the students involved in governing the Campus Center.

Survey to evaluate graduate services

By Raghuram Vadarevu
Collegian Correspondent

Starting this Monday, the Graduate Dean's Office will be conducting an opinion survey of graduate students, called the Graduate Student Opinion Survey (GSOS), to identify whether graduate services are meeting the needs of graduates.

The survey was designed by Gabriel Carey and Alice Juller, interns at the Graduate Dean's office and Pamela Davidson, a sociology doctoral student from the Social and Demographic Research Institute (SADRI). They collected and compiled information on surveys from other institutions in the northeast and requested input from various graduate student organizations and graduate senate representatives on the design.

"We would like to use the survey to identify what we are doing right as well as what we are doing wrong," Gabriel Carey said.

According to Carey, the survey was divided into three phases in order to increase participation among all levels of graduate students.

The survey is in the first of three phases, which involves participation from 500-600 graduates who were identified as advanced graduate students. These graduates have advanced into their coursework and degree requirements.

The second and third phases will consist of surveys of alumni who have graduated within the last five to 10 years and incoming graduate students in the fall, respectively.

Various graduate organizations have been identified in the survey such as the Graduate Student Senate (GSS) and the Graduate Employee Organization (GEO).

Hari Subramanian, vice president of the Graduate Student Senate said, "This survey is definitely important, but in light of recent reduction of graduate services, it might have come too late."

When shown a copy of the survey, Wenjun Li, staff coordinator of the Graduate Employee Organization, noticed that GAO was misidentified as "Graduate Student Organization" instead of "Graduate Employee Organization."

"I think the misidentification was a result of the lack of communication between our organization (GAO) and the Graduate Dean's Office," Li said. "We were never given a copy of the survey to review."

When asked how the error was possible in the final copy of the survey, Mardelyne of the Graduate Dean's Office responded, "It was a misprint, but we apologize for the error. It was due to the lack of communication."

Juller added, "we hope to work out the kinks by the beginning of the second or third phases."

The survey will be sent to the advanced graduate students' homes on Monday.

■ election

ing, when the results were officially released to the Collegian.

The Elections Committee, a independent body of the SGA, hand counted each ballot in what was both a apprehensive and tense SGA office.

The candidates, according to election rules, were not permitted to observe the process, though were allowed to nominate observers to represent their concerns and questions while the ballots were counted.

After a week of considerable stress and lack of sleep, the candidates, despite the outcome of their particular ticket, appeared relieved the election was over.

"It was really great to see everyone take it so positively," Castellano said.

"I'm excited and a little bit nervous," Carter said. He said that on Friday he was "daunted" at the prospects of balancing a full course load and being a member of the Board of Trustees.

"I'm looking forward to helping students," Carter said, who will use the coming months to orient himself to his new job in coordination with Rivera. "I'm excited and confident that I can get the job done."

Caston will not enjoy Carter's luxury of time, as he assumes his new post this week. He predicts the first months of his administration will be "controlled chaos."

"I'm anxious to get started," Caston said, who is working on assembling his cabinet and meeting with representatives of the Faculty Senate and Area Governments.

Perhaps the deepest sign of relief was taken by out-going SGA President Christine Lopes, who has been involved with student government since her freshman year. The junior social thought and political economy major "is looking forward to being a student again," she said, for her senior year.

'Cuse zone key in final game

By Jim O'Connell
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Rick Pitino likes to preach to his Kentucky basketball team about living in the "precious present." No looking ahead or back. Just worry about today.

Well, almost no looking back.

When Kentucky faces Syracuse in the NCAA championship game Monday night as a 14-point favorite, its toughest job will be solving the Orangemen's 2-3 zone. The zone has been a much-discussed topic among the Wildcats ever since it was used by North Carolina to beat them in last year's Southeast Regional final.

"The North Carolina loss is the only thing we look back on from the past," Kentucky point guard Anthony Epps said Sunday. "We go against that zone every day in practice."

After a season in which it didn't really seem to matter what defense was used against them, the Wildcats (33-2) will finally get to go against the zone in a game. They won by an average of 23 points this season, and Saturday night's 81-74 semifinal victory over top-ranked Massachusetts was their first NCAA tournament win by fewer than 20 points.

Still, last season's 74-61 loss to North Carolina one step from the Final Four has been a tough one to forget. The Wildcats shot just 28 percent and were 7-for-36 from 3-point range.

"After last year when we played North Carolina, we have played against a 2-3 zone for anywhere from 15 to 30 minutes every day," Pitino said. "We've been good at attacking it and we have to be, because Syracuse plays the best 2-3 zone in the country."

Syracuse (29-8), which reached the title game with a 77-69 victory over Mississippi State, has won praise — not ridicule — for the zone, especially during its improbable NCAA tournament run. The defense received the credit for the regional final win over Kansas when the Jayhawks became the fourth straight team to shot under 39 percent and were 4-for-25 from beyond the arc.

The zone was shaping up to be the wrong way to go early in Saturday night's game when Mississippi State hit three 3s in as many attempts in the opening four minutes. But the rest of the way, the Orangemen's zone forced the Bulldogs into turnovers and negated their inside game.

Kentucky doesn't want to make the same mistake.

"You have to keep attacking the zone," Pitino said. "You can't rely on fool's gold if you make three or four long jump shots and you think you've discovered a way to beat it. Patience, dribble penetration and offensive rebounding are what's needed to beat a great defense like that."

Syracuse coach Jim Boeheim, who went to the zone because of his team's lack of depth and speed, knows what his team is up against in Kentucky, the preseason No. 1 and a team that was considered the favorite to win it all all season.

"They have tremendous depth and are good at every position, and they are able to inside-outside at every position. That's why they've been they way they've been all year," said Boeheim, who hired Pitino as an assistant in his first season at Syracuse. "They present a lot of problems, and we have to come up with some solutions."

Just like Kentucky has to solve that zone.

"The way we play, we encourage people to take 3-point shots," Boeheim said. "But it's not just shooting, it's how you attack it. We have to be prepared for that and adjust to whatever they do." Whatever Kentucky does, it will be with a lot of players. Pitino uses a 10-man rotation to keep the pressure defense intense and fresh. Syracuse plays seven players, and the starters log most of the minutes. That makes point guard Lazarus Sims the key man in the Orangemen's offense.

Syracuse 'rebuilds' its way into NCAAs

By Hal Bock
Associated Press

NEW YORK — When coach Jim Boeheim assembled his Syracuse team this season, there were some significant gaps in the lineup. Gone was the school's career leading scorer, Lawrence Moten. Gone was Lucious Jackson, an important up-front player. Gone was point guard Michael Lloyd.

It looked like a rebuilding year, especially with no heavyweight recruits coming into the program.

It turned, instead, into a remarkable season that winds up Monday night in the NCAA championship game against Kentucky. Boeheim seems bemused by the whole thing.

First he rebuilt his backcourt, plugging in three-year reserve Lazarus Sims at the point and junior college transfer Jason Cipolla alongside him. Sophomore Todd Burgan inherited Jackson's job alongside NBA-bound John Wallace. Otis Hill and J.B. Reafsnyder shared the center job.

"We started poorly in the exhibition games," Boeheim said. But things began falling in place for the Orangemen when the regular season got underway. Syracuse played seven of its first eight games at home in the cavernous Carrier Dome and won its only road game in that stretch, beating Providence in the Big East opener.

That gave Syracuse a comfortable 8-0 cushion as the team set out its first lengthy road trip. But the schedule was dotted with teams like Lafayette, Colgate, Columbia and Bowling Green, teams Syracuse was expected to beat, especially at home.

"We went to Arizona on the way to Hawaii (for the Rainbow Classic)," Boweheim said. "That, I felt, would be a good test for us."

Syracuse passed with flying colors, beating Arizona, winners of the pre-season NIT, handily. The 2-3 zone defense established itself in that game and the Orangemen used the momentum to add wins against nationally ranked Illinois and Rhode Island.

That put Syracuse in the finals of the Rainbow tournament, where it lost for the first time, beaten decisively by Massachusetts. By then, Boeheim was feeling pretty comfortable with his reconstructed team.

"We played well in Hawaii and our zone defense was effective," he said.

There was trouble ahead, though.

"The trip just seemed to take a lot out of us," the coach said. On the way home Syracuse stopped in Miami and lost again, its first Big East loss.

"Bad scheduling," Boeheim said.

Now the team was struggling. There was a two-point win over Providence and a one-point victory over Rutgers, both at home, followed by three straight one-sided road losses in league games against West Virginia, Connecticut and Georgetown.

After a win against Boston College, the Orangemen lost again, this time in overtime at home against Villanova. That left Syracuse at 14-6 overall, but 3-6 following the fast start.

Suddenly, Syracuse righted itself. There was an important non-conference win at home against Alabama that served as a confidence builder, followed by a 19-point win over bitter rival Georgetown. Boeheim points to that game and the early wins over Arizona and Rhode Island as the best performances for the team this season.

"We played extremely well in those games," he said.

There was another speedbump ahead when Syracuse lost to lightly regarded Seton Hall. Going into the Big East tournament, the Orangemen were the league's No. 4 team, behind UConn, Georgetown and Villanova. After Big East wins against Notre Dame and Boston College, Syracuse ran out of gas playing a third straight day and lost to Connecticut.

The team finished the season at 24-8, and Boeheim was feeling pretty good when Syracuse was assigned a No. 4 seed in the west region of the NCAA tournament.

Pitino–Calipari, finals coaching clash

By Bill Bernard
Associated Press

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Immediately after coaching Kentucky to the NCAA title game, Rick Pitino remembered he was a Massachusetts graduate and John Calipari's friend.

Pitino's Wildcats defeated UMass 81-74 Saturday night in a rematch of the nation's top two teams and two of the best young coaches in America. At the final buzzer, Pitino said he told Calipari, "As an alumnus, I can't tell you how proud I was of how your team played. It was like an Ali fight."

"They showed so much heart, it was unbelievable. We wanted to win so much, but you wish it wasn't a team like UMass."

During the game, Pitino and Calipari looked and acted enough alike to be brothers and just different enough so it's obvious they aren't twins.

Calipari said the two even indulged in some posturing, as real brothers might have done.

"We screamed at each other a couple of times about coaching our teams instead of the officials, but it was really nothing," Calipari said. "It was me letting him know he doesn't affect me and him letting me know I don't affect him."

The black hair, conservative dark suits and designer ties make Pitino and Calipari look like bookends at first glance, and at least seven times during the game they knelt on the sidelines at the corresponding spot, about 15 feet from the midcourt line. Neither uses a prop like great coaches of past vintage — no rolled-up programs or towels help Pitino or Calipari cope with the stress of the game.

Both favor the arms-outstretched method of pleading with officials, and both tax their voices with constant instructions and cajoling.

Pitino is clearly more demonstrative, however, and more often conducts 1-on-1 mini-lectures to players when they come out of the game.

The two coaches, however, are linked by much more than their similar coaching styles and success. Both lost two games all season and hogged virtually all of the week-ly No. 1 rankings.

Calipari, 37, literally owes his job to Pitino, a UMass graduate who championed Calipari's cause on the 1988 search committee that hired him. But the debt doesn't appear to hinder their friendship. Pitino said they talk three to five times a week, and undoubtedly, both are secure in the certainty that Calipari would have become a coach, and a successful one, elsewhere if he had been passed up by UMass.

"I would rather not play Rick Pitino unless it was the very last game for both of us," Calipari said. "The reason is I owe him a lot. I'm very grateful for the opportunity he's given me and my family. You don't want to play great friends unless it's the last game for both teams."

Pitino, 43, regards Calipari more as a younger brother than as a good friend, telling the UMass coach this week that he would be making a mistake if he considered the vacant St. John's coaching job.

Despite no national titles between them, Pitino and Calipari are considered the heirs apparent to the fraternity of coaching greats in the class of Dean Smith and Bob Knight.

Pitino certainly belongs to the Make Yourself an Underdog at All Costs school of coaches. Calipari is that way, too, but he's not in the same class as Pitino, who tried to convince everyone this week that Kentucky's 10-man rotation is a weakness and UMass' lack of depth a strength.

Calipari jokingly responded to Pitino's claim by saying, "I believe the reverse of anything Rick Pitino says."

After the game, Calipari added: "Rick Pitino is a good man and a great basketball coach."

Bulldogs ousted by Syracuse

By Stephen Hawkins
Associated Press

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — When the season began, Mississippi State coach Richard Williams was wary of the seemingly unrealistic expectations on his team.

The Bulldogs, who had never been to consecutive NCAA tournaments, were a preseason top 10 team. With several key returning players and some promising newcomers, fans were expecting no less than a repeat of last year's appearance in the NCAA round of 16.

"We will be a good basketball team, but I don't know how good," Williams said during the preseason. "Whether we are as good as the fans think we are going to be, I don't know." Now, even Williams has to admit that State exceeded all expectations. The Bulldogs overcame a January slump with a late season run to their first Southeastern Conference tournament championship, then into their first Final Four.

"Our players had a great run, and it's been something that all of the people in Mississippi will remember," Williams said after State's national championship hopes were dashed with a 77-69 loss to Syracuse in the NCAA semifinal Saturday.

The Bulldogs (26-8), who had 11 players with Mississippi connections and two others from Alabama towns bordering the state, were the first team ever from Mississippi to play in the Final Four. They set a school record for wins.

"We've come a long way," said Russell Walters, one of four State seniors who played in two NCAAs and an NIT. "It meant a lot to me being from Mississippi, and seeing the reaction from the people in Mississippi made me have a lot of pride. It's the best accomplishment of my life."

The only other senior with significant playing time was Darryl Wilson, who averaged 18.0 points to lead the team in scoring for the third straight year. Bubba Wilson and Jay Walton played only sparingly off the bench.

In late January, Williams was wondering if the Bulldogs would win another game. After starting 10-1, they had a stretch in which they lost four of five games, and struggled in close wins against Tennessee and Ole Miss.

It was when some were starting to count them out that the Bulldogs changed directions. Williams knew his team had a chance to make something happen.

"After the Kentucky loss (74-56 on Jan. 9), it started turning around a bit. I later, we kind of squeaked by Tennessee and regained a little confidence," the coach said. "From that point on, we started playing better, and it just became a graduate process that the players improved, the players accepted their roles for the team."

State later avenged the loss to then top-ranked Kentucky, winning 84-73 for its first Southeastern Conference tournament championship. In the tournament, State won all three of its games by double digits, including a semifinal round win over Georgia. The Bulldogs extended their postseason winning streak to seven games by sweeping through the Southeast Regional. They never trailed in wins over Top 10 teams Connecticut and Cincinnati in the Southeast Regional tournament.

Before the loss to Syracuse, Mississippi State had won 15 of its last 17 games. The main reasons for the turnaround were that sophomore Marcus Bullard became a better point guard, highlight-grabbing Duntae' Jones became a better team and defensive player, and Erick Dampier provided strong inside play.

As far as Mississippi State's prospects for next season, those are as uncertain as the pending decisions by juniors Jones (14.7 points, 6.9 rebounds) and Dampier (14.5 points, 9.2 rebounds). Both are considering the NBA draft.

Jones, the MVP in both the SEC and Southeast Regional tournaments, has said he will seriously consider leaving State after just one year if he is projected to be a high draft pick this summer.

"I'll take everything into consideration. I hope to soon find out what is best for me. If I'm not going to go high, there is no use in declaring for the draft," Jones said.

"If I do decide to come back, I think we have a great shot as a team getting back to where we went this year... anytime you have the nucleus of your team coming back after a roll like that," he said.

The 6-foot-11 Dampier, a two-time All-SEC center, insists he hasn't thought much about the decision.

At that point, UMass' continued to pressure caused even more Kentucky mistakes but a Travieso air ball on an attempted three-pointer combined with a Pope block on a Giddel Padilla jumper wouldn't cut the mustard. They just could not get back on top of the Wildcats.

"I think UMass is a great team and they could do a lot of different things," Pope said. "And the last few minutes they had to put a lot of pressure on us and they did and they caused some turnovers. Obviously, we would wish to have not turnovers in this game. But they're a great team and you're not going to escape."

Pitino, who was instrumental in securing Calipari's job at UMass to compose a team that would give his Wildcats a huge hurdle to bound over on the way to the Championship game.

"I'm proud of our ball club, but as an alumnus of that school, why, I can't say enough of that team," Pitino said. "Ninety-nine percent go under with the pressure we were applying and they're a remarkable group.

"We did a great job in the first half of executing the half- court offense. What we were trying to do was turn the thing around and get them in foul trouble in the half court game, and powering it into the interior.

mates are ties that may last forever. Donta Bright and Dana Dingle co-captains on the first ever Final Four team of UMass. They grew up, and through the process achieved dreams along the way.

"Dana and I were roommates when we got here," Bright said. "We're like brothers and learned everything together. He's like my brother and I'll do anything for him."

Winning and losing is being able to lean on your teammates and knowing they will come through in the clutch. Bright on several occasions was counted on to keep his team from losing games and came through.

The character of his team, Calipari felt, was instrumental in the Minutemen's success.

"It's about the kind of people and character they are," Calipari said."

You don't come back. You don't win close games like we do without kids with strong character and smart kids like we have."

When reflecting back on the '95-'96 campaign they won't think of the heartache they felt the few days after the loss. More importantly, the overall 35-2 record and the enjoyment of being a part of this "March Madness" will make them smile. Basketball, to them, isn't the end of their lives.

"Well, honestly, I learned that it isn't life or death," Calipari said. "winning basketball games. And I learned that when you're coaching you understand that when you have good people, it's very fun to coach. And when you have guys that you're struggling with, it's not very fun to coach."

assists, but it wasn't enough to propel the Minutemen into the championship game.

As the final buzzer sounded and a tearful Camby left the court, he took off his jersey for perhaps the final time. After completing a season in which he established himself as the best player in the country, and taking home practically every Player of the Year award imaginable, there is little else he has to prove. Declaring himself for the NBA draft seems to be the next logical step.

When asked about his future at the end of Saturday's loss, Camby said, "I haven't thought nothing about it. I'm just down right now."

Marcus Camby led the Minutemen in scoring with 25 points in addition to six blocks on the evening.

Player of the Game

MARCUS CAMBY – 25 points, 6 blocks

Highlights...

UMass trailed eight points at the half as they were down 36-28... The Minutemen were down by as much as 15 points in the second half... Massachusetts runs of 13–4 and 6–0 put the Minutemen within 3, 63–60 with 4:57 to go... With 1:02 to go, Edgar Padilla drained the oft-balance trey to put UMass within three once more 73–70 and it looked as though they were about to pull out of another nail-biter, when Pope hit two free throws putting UMass in a five point hole... With :52 on the clock, Edgar Padilla put up an in- and-out three-pointer that would have put Massachusetts down by only two points, but the Wildcats rolled on to the 81–74 win... Senior walk-on Giddel Padilla provided some spark to the UMass offense and four points off the bench with inspiring play.

Tennessee wins NCAA women's title

By Chuck Schoffner
Associated Press

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Tennessee was bigger and stronger, Georgia was quicker. In this case, bigger was better.

Tennessee dominated inside and got some inspired defense from Latina Davis in beating Southeastern Conference rival Georgia 83-65 Sunday night to win its fourth NCAA Championship.

Tennessee now has twice as many national titles as any other school in 15 years of NCAA play. The Lady Vols won their previous championships in 1987, 1989 and 1991 — all under current coach Pat Summitt.

Tennessee's players donned the traditional championship caps and pranced around the court in celebration. Summitt, wearing a burnt orange pantsuit, watched calmly from the sidelines and chatted with a television reporter.

Tennessee's Michelle Marciniak, who had 10 points, five assists and two steals, was named the outstanding player in the Final Four. She scored 21 in a semifinal victory over defending champion Connecticut on Friday night.

Abby Conklin helped with some timely 3-point shooting for the Lady Vols, who had lost at Georgia 77-71 during the season. Tennessee outrebounded Georgia 63-30 in that game and enjoyed another big edge on the boards Sunday night, this time 54-39. That total included 21 offensive rebounds, which led to 17 second-chance points.

Davis, Tennessee's leading scorer in the tournament, stood out with her defense by shutting down Georgia's All-America guard, Saudia Roundtree. Roundtree had promised coach Andy Landers a national championship when she signed with Georgia out of junior college two years ago, but she couldn't make it happen.

The 5-foot-7 senior, who had 63 points in her two previous tournament games, rarely was able to get Georgia into its deadly transition game and scored only eight points on 3-for-14 shooting. She went scoreless in the second half.

Freshman Chamique Holdsclaw led Tennessee (32-4) with 16 points and 14 rebounds. Tiffani Johnson also scored 16 for the Lady Vols and Conklin added 14, including four 3-pointers. Pashen Thompson had 12 points and 11 rebounds.

La'Keshia Frett led Georgia (28-5) with 25 points but had only seven in the second half. Tracy Henderson scored 16.

Ahead 42-37 at halftime despite shooting only 43 percent, Tennessee opened the second half with a 15-5 run to increase its lead to 57-41. Conklin hit two 3-pointers during that stretch and four other Tennessee players scored as the Lady Vols took control. They also were doing it on the defensive end. Roundtree got nothing against Davis and Frett, who missed only two shots in the first half, didn't get a second-half basket until scoring on a put-back with just 1:59 remaining. By then, it was over.

It was such a frustrating half for Frett that at one point, she missed a point-blank shot, got the rebound and then missed again from the same spot. Roundtree was equally frustrated. She had six assists but also six turnovers.

A 7-0 run that included a 3-pointer by Kedra Holland drew Georgia to 57-48, and the Lady Bulldogs trailed 61-52 after Henderson's basket with 11:52 to play.

Track teams win weekend sweep

By Jay Warner
Collegian Staff

Taking advantage of the refreshing spring weather, the Massachusetts men's and women's track teams claimed their respective 1996 outdoor season openers in convincing style at the Llewelyn Derby Track on Saturday.

The men posted a 46-point advantage in a quad-meet win over the second place finisher, the Maine Bears, while the women competed in a five-way meet outdistancing the competition by 17 points.

The Minutemen scored a total of 95 points, easily beating the Maine Black Bears (49), Vermont Catamounts (34), and Hartford Hawks (4).

On a day in which no single member of the team stepped up to lead the way for the Minutemen, the team depended on an effort from the whole squad. In the process of totaling more points than the other three competing teams combined, nine different Minutemen won individual events, in addition to a team win in the 4x100 meter relay, showing how effective teamwork can be. Tom Toye, Christian Abbott, Carlos Peralta, and Scott Price comprised the 4x100 meter relay team which cruised to victory.

In addition to a strong team effort, there were also key individual performances from several members of the team. In the 100 meters, freshman Tom Toye showed that he could be a force to be reckoned with in the future as he claimed the fourth best time in school history, finishing in 10.7 seconds. Andover native, senior Robert Dalton also placed fourth on an all-time UMass list with a 163-foot-6- inch hammer throw.

On the women's side, the UMass Minutewomen finished first in the five-way meet with 105 points, ahead of Vermont (88), Springfield College Braves (39), Maine (35), and Hartford (2).

In contrast to the men, the Minutewomen were lead by an outstanding performance from freshman Melanie Bell. In her freshman campaign, Bell has shown tremendous leadership skill in leading the team, as was shown by her effort in Saturday's meet.

Bell posted a total of three individual victories, her first win coming in to the 100 meters with a time of 12.5 seconds. In addition to her win in the 100 meters, Bell also placed first in the 200 meters and long jump. Bell finished the 200 meter event with a time of 26.3 seconds, while posting a mark of 17-foot-11-1/4-inch in the long jump, the fourth longest jump in school history.

Helping Bell and the Minutewomen claim the season opener, sophomore Rebecca Donaghue continued the dominance she displayed during the indoor track season. The Stow native, and fall cross country squad standout, won a pair of middle-distance events, finishing first in the 800 meters and 1500 meters with times of 2:17 9 and 4:36.0, respectively.

Both the men and women hope to continue their early spring season success as they return to action on April 6 at Llewelyn Derby track. Each will be competing in dual meets with the Eagles of Boston College at noon.

Temple downs Minutewomen lacrosse

By Jason Rubin
Collegian Staff

The Temple Owls are a top level women's lacrosse team, while the Massachusetts Minutewomen are a young, third- year athletic program. The experience that Temple possesses and UMass hopes to gain, was evident Saturday, during a 15-5 Temple victory.

Although the game was mostly played on one end of the field, and the score indicated a blowout, there were many encouraging signs for the Minutewomen.

UMass coach Francesca McClellan, back for her first game since giving birth, was "real pleased," with her team's performance.

"Defensively we were prepared, offensively we showed a great deal of aggressiveness," she said. "I think that we looked better than ever."

Senior tri-captain Trish Dillenedetto had a rough day in net, for Massachusetts. She faced barrage, after barrage, and looked tired. Fifteen minutes into the game, she had already faced 16 shots. McClellan decided to make a change.

She sent in freshman Melissa Borodinsky, to gain some experience against a top team. She responded, playing brilliantly in the net, making 16 saves over the rest of the game. This included an outstanding denial of Temple's Carolyn Albright midway through the second half.

The ease that Temple had in UMass' defensive zone, was not entirely the fault of the defense. Many of the opportunities came in the form of uneven breaks, caused by insufficient help given by the midfielders. Also, many rushes were the result of clears by the Temple defense.

Junior defensemen Erica Bryan, and Kristen Hocker were tough, steering away many potential attacks. Sophomore Amy Leder, was another key performer on defense, starting quick counter-attacks by the Minutewomen. Freshman Paige Skiba offered the defensemen a needed rest, logging some playing time.

One potential strength for the team lies in the mid field. The middies are a solid group, with surprising overall speed, and swift stick handling. Sophomore Jenn Herker, was outstanding. Although she did not record any goals, or assists, she seemed to always make the pass that set up the assist for the goal. She outlegged the Temple midfield, on numerous occasions, leading an attack.

Senior Elaine Burke, was another middie who had an impressive day. Burke played brilliantly in the defensive zone, often finding herself to be the last obstacle before the defense, for attacking players.

Four of the five goals came from the attack. Sophomore Jen Bowen continued her goal scoring streak, netting two. She has four goals in the last two games, and is becoming a serious offensive threat. Laura Korutz and Stephanie Walsh each scored individual goals as well.

"What's important is that we did not have many subs. That meant that every girl had to play a good amount, and contribute," McClellan said. "I think that we handled it real well, it was definitely a nice team game."

The next contest for the Minutewomen is Tuesday against Holy Cross at 4 p.m. at Totman Field.

National Championship hopes dashed by Kentucky

UMass puts the heat on Kentucky, Wildcats prove they can win close ones

By Candice Flemming
Collegian Staff

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Entering Saturday night's national semi-final game between Kentucky and Massachusetts, most figured if the game got close towards the end, it would favor the Minutemen.

The Wildcats entered the matchup having never been tested in a close game, after blowing out opponents all year. On the other hand the Minutemen had proved they could win the close games, winning four overtime games during the regular season along with many other games decided in the last minute.

UMass knew how to win when the chips were down, but having never been in the situation, no one knew how the Wildcats would react. As the Minutemen and the rest of the college basketball world soon find out, the Wildcats could win a close one as they outlasted the Minutemen 81-74 to advance to the Championship game tonight at 9:22 at the Meadowlands.

"I always felt we were going to play very well in close games," Kentucky coach Rick Pitino said. "Tonight when they made their run, the thing I feel best about is these was no panic in the eyes of our players."

After falling behind 36-28 at the half and by as many as 15 points in the second half, UMass started to come back. The Minutemen had runs of 13-4 and 6-0 that got them to within three (63-60) with 4:57 to go, but they still couldn't get any closer. Kentucky stormed back to take a 10-point lead (71-61) on the combination of the Wildcats' free throws and UMass making some poor decisions, including an air ball three-point attempt by Carmelo Travieso from well beyond the arc.

"We got to within three with four minutes to go and had two possessions and got away from how we play," Massachusetts coach John Calipari said. "[We] took a bad fader, and took a three, threw it at the rim and got an airball."

But UMass went on another run 6-0 run to pull within five helped by the unlikeliest Minuteman — Giddell Padilla. The senior walk-on first saw action with 15:38 to go in the second half and immediately made an impact with his inspired play. Then with 2:06 left he nearly dunked one home, but instead tipped in, on a pass from his brother Edgar, making it 71-65.

At this point the UMass press put the heat on Kentucky. Edgar Padilla came up with a steal that turned into two Camby free throws at the other end, and then the UMass press caused Derek Anderson to cough up the ball on the next possession. KU however was able to increase its lead to 75-67 on two Anderson free throws.

But with 1:02 remaining, the younger Padilla nailed an off-balance trey to pull UMass to within three 75-70. At this point, it looked as if the Minutemen were going to be able to pull out yet another close one, even though two Mark Pope free throws put UMass down by five again (75-70) the Minutemen still had 52 seconds to make it happen.

But as an Edgar three-point attempt that would have pulled them to within two, went in-and-out, so did the UMass hopes of pulling out yet another nail-biter.

"We didn't make the plays down the stretch. We didn't get to about four or five loose balls or rebounds that if we get, we're right there in a buzzer kind of game. We never got those balls," Calipari said. "A couple of breaks that could have gone either way or another, seemed to go another. That happens in a basketball game of this magnitude. We had our chances — and that's all. That game unfolded the way we wanted it to unfold. We just didn't make plays down the stretch and they did."

They just played harder than us and that's why we lost," said Edgar Padilla, who ended up with six points, 12 assists, a block and a steal.

The Minutemen finished the best season in school history at 35-2, reaching the Final Four for the first time in school history.

Miracles cease for Minutemen, UMass' comeback not enough

By Justin C. Smith
Collegian Staff

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Comebacks, refusing to lose, and never giving up is a trademark of the Massachusetts Minutemen. Last Saturday, for only the second time all season, they weren't able to make the miracles happen.

Losing 43-28, the heavily favored Kentucky Wildcats looked like they were going to do it to UMass, blow them out. But like John Calipari's team has done all year such as games against Xavier, St. Joseph's twice and Pittsburgh, the Minutemen were not going to roll over and play dead.

"I think everybody has written about it and talked about it," said Kentucky's Mark Pope, "about the character of these guys on UMass and how though they are. I don't think you can expect to blow out a team that's this tough and with as many good players as they have. You can't blow them out. They're too big and strong and poised and tough. We knew it was going to be a 40 minute game and we are fortunate to get on with the victory."

This time the comeback was headed by a less than usual factor, Giddel Padilla. Coming off the bench after Carmelo Travieso picked up his fourth personal foul, the older brother of starting UMass point guard Edgar Padilla was the sparkplug the Minutemen needed.

"He works harder than anyone else in practice," Edgar said of his brother, "I'm so happy for him that he was out there playing with me and contributing to the team the way he did tonight."

Giddel finished with four points and an assist as well as contributing an exuberance which carried over to the team as a whole. UMass rolled back to within three points at the score 63-60 and it looked like a classic Minuteman comeback.

"When you think about UMass, you get up," said Kentucky coach Rick Pitino. "They're going to bite your arm off, take your elbow out, and foul you and you've got to be strong with the ball. And if you're not, you'll turn it over. And we did that a couple of times on rebounds and it hurt us."

Men's lacrosse falls to Army 9-8

By Matt Vautour
Collegian Staff

Overtime woes continued for the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team as Army prevailed 9-8 in the extra session ringing the Minutemen's home opener.

The home team made an impressive comeback to tie the game and force sudden death. Army's Chad Hadlock stole a UMass clearing pass and fed it ahead to Dan Brostek who fired a leaping shot past UMass goalie John Kaiselakis to give the Cadets the victory.

Brostek led the Cadets with four goals in the game, while Hadlock added three to pace the victory.

The loss spoiled an otherwise stellar performance by the sophomore goaltender, who made 18 saves in the loss. Coach Greg Cannella was pleased by his keeper's effort.

"I thought he played great," said Massachusetts coach Greg Cannella. "He was solid. He kept us in the game. It was 7-2 and it could've been 12-2."

Kaiselakis' counterpart, Army's Travis Loving was equally as brilliant. He made 24 saves, including an astounding 15 in the first half. His play set the tone for Army's entire game.

"I'm extremely proud of Travis," Army coach Jack Emmer said. "He stepped up big today."

"He set the tone today," said junior attackman Brendan Glass. "In the first quarter he was unbelievable."

Loving, along with rest of the Cadet defense, was successful in keeping Glass without a point for the first game this season.

"We tried to make it very difficult for him to get the ball," Emmer said. "We felt we could really frustrate him. We wanted to make other people have to beat us."

Outside of the goal, perhaps the brightest spot for the Minutemen was the play of Jim Kennedy. The Ohio native had three goals and an assist on the game, and netted the last two goals, including the game tying strike during UMass' comeback run in the fourth quarter.

"He was gutsy," Cannella said. "We asked him to step up and he did. We're really happy about that."

After Army had opened an 8-4 lead in the final period, the UMass offense came to life. Buddy Hoffman circled around the net and slung a shot past Loving to start the comeback.

With under three minutes to go, Kennedy fed a cutting Eric Bailey, who beat Loving to cut the deficit to 8-6.

With under a minute to go, Kennedy worked his magic. He caught Loving out of position with a low grounder with 54 seconds left and then tied the with a low scoop shot as he was being hit with just 21 seconds left.

"Our guys fought back," Cannella said. "We became an urgent team in the last quarter. You can't play

Success remains after Final Four loss

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — The final score 81-74 and the winner is...

Well, Saturday night it was the Kentucky Wildcats and it was the real National Championship game in which, for only the second time this season, the Minutemen came up on the short end of the scorecard.

After Saturday night's season ending loss, long faces and exhausted expressions ran rampant throughout the players wearing maroon and white. Not completing the run to their ultimate goal — a National Championship, may make for a long night's sleep, but the camaraderie of the team will never fade.

"I'm proud of them," said Massachusetts coach John Calipari. "I told the team after this game in the locker room that I learned more about myself as a coach and a person this year than I have in all my other year of coaching and I thanked them, because you're talking about unbelievable human beings that I coached this year."

The only controversy that has ever surfaced throughout the entire 1995-96 season surrounded the collapse of super-star Marcus Camby. Jan. 14, the National Player of the Year fas pronicon the runway in Olean, NY. Tests of all kinds were run until the fact that his fall would not have a valid explanation. It was just one of the instances that brought this team closer together and taught a greater lesson than learning the pick and roll.

"I also learned when there's some adversity thrown at me how I'll respond," Calipari said. "And when its thrown right quickly in your face. Until that stuff is done, you don't know how you're going to react. I learned a lot about myself."

The relationship formed between players and coaches as well as team-

Camby leads again, UMass falls short

By Candice Flemming
Collegian Staff

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — He had carried them on his back all year long ... from the season opening win against Kentucky to the Elite Eight victory over Georgetown, along the way picking up trophys after trophy for Player of the Year honors.

And after falling behind 36-28 at the hall to Kentucky in the national semi-final at the Meadowlands on Saturday, Massachusetts needed Marcus Camby again — and for a while, he did carry them.

"This was our last game of the season and it was do or die," Camby said.

The first half saw him score just nine points, as the Wildcats did a great job of double-teaming him, making it extremely hard for him to get an easy shot or dish it off to his usual targets underneath — Donta Bright or Dana Dingle. It was clear the Wildcats weren't going to allow Camby to go off like he did in the first matchup when he scored 32 points, but he still got his points in the second half.

"They played good, aggressive defense. In the beginning, they forced me to take some bad shots, which I did. They played great," Camby said. "I probably needed to be a little more aggressive when the double team came. Then were knocking balls out of my hand and forcing me to take shots I didn't feel comfortable taking. So, I probably should have played a little bit more aggressively."

"I think we did a great job against him early," Kentucky sophomore Antoine Walker said. "He's a great player. He's a tough player to stop. He's the guy that can handle the ball. So we knew he was going to get his points. Our job was to try to stop the other guys. We don't worry if Camby gets 30, 40 points."

After the quiet first half, Camby turned it on in the second stanza. When UMass fell behind by 15 early in the second half, Camby helped UMass come back starting a 7-0 run with a dunk off a Charlton Clarke missed jumper, and then ending it with a three point play after sinking a layup and free throw after getting fouled by Jeff Sheppard. With the 7-0 run, UMass had gotten to within six, 47-41.

Then with a little over seven minutes to play and UMass down 59-49, the 6-foot-11-inch Hartford native dropped in back-to-back jumpers, as Mark Pope fouled him on the second jumper allowing him a chance for a three-point play, which he nailed with 6:18 remaining to pull UMass to within five.

Down 10 again, this time with 2:35 to go, Camby took a pass from Carmelo Travieso and drove the lane for two. Then moments later, he sank two free throws getting UMass to within four.

But at that point, Camby lost his magic. The weight of carrying the team on his back had become too heavy, as the Wildcat team was just too much too handle.

A seven-foot turnaround jumper by Camby with 1:16 left came up short and by the time the junior had alley-oped home a pass from Edgar Padilla with 22 seconds left, it was too late.

Camby finished with 25 points, eight boards, six blocks and three

Your Horoscope

ARIES (March 21 – April 19) — Give it up! Get back into bed, and don't get out until tomorrow. There's really no reason for you to waste your time doing anything today. Nothing exciting or important is going to happen.

TAURUS (April 20 – May 20) — A good day to call up all your enemies and tell them how you really feel. And who really liked all those brussel sprouts and sloppy kisses? You might as well get your relatives in on the act as well.

GEMINI (May 21 – June 20) — The comet has shifted the alignment of all your lucky stars. They no longer shine down on you favorably. You may not have broken any ladders or walked under any mirrors, but fate has already begun to mess up your life.

CANCER (June 21 – July 22) — Commit to memory all those 900 numbers on late night television. The way your love life is going, you're going to need them pretty soon. Take out a personal ad. The person who responds may not be the one you had in mind, but at this point, beggars can't be choosers.

LEO (July 23 – Aug. 22) — A squatting dog tells no lies.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 – Sept. 22) — An unexpected development could put you on edge. Don't jump until you know what lies below or have a parachute handy. You might regret it otherwise.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 – Oct. 22) — Transportation delays are possible today. In fact, they are practically inevitable. So don't bother going anywhere. Make sure you have enough milk and bread to last the afternoon and cuddle up with a book or two (the only company you would get anyway).

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 – Nov. 21) — Things are about to crack today. There is an overwhelming need to walk on eggshells and act hard-boiled. Your yolk is about to fry. Don't get too close to the fire.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 – Dec. 21) — Give some thought to a new car. Very little thought. There's no way you'll be able to pull that one off, what were you thinking?

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 – Jan. 19) — You could receive something of a shock at work. Employees must wash hands before returning to work. Be sure that you don't touch any electrical appliances when leaving the sink.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 – Feb. 18) — Slippery when wet does not just refer to Bon Jovi and tiled surfaces any longer. Watch where you place your feet, for a close friend is planning to pull a rug out from under you very soon.

PISCES (Feb. 19 – March 20) — Throw out your nets and see what you can reap in. Chances are, it won't be too great a catch, but you never know what you'll find out there in that sea that all your friends have been telling you about unless you try. Beware. Crabs abound.

Ross Burns headed to NBA

Greenfld. native to forgo final three years of eligibility to go pro

By Grizzly Adams
Collegian Beard

With much anticipation surrounding Marcus Camby's decision over whether or not to forgo his final year of eligibility to enter the NBA draft, another Minuteman beat him to the punch.

Freshman walk-on guard Ross Burns announced at a press conference at Hamden Dining Commons yesterday that he would skip his final three seasons and enter the NBA draft.

"After that hoop I made against Georgetown, I knew," Burns said. "Think of all the former Hoyas in the NBA, and I schooled 'em."

Burns added that another player's decision to enter the draft inspired him.

"Well, Darnell Robinson didn't do shit in college and he's going early, well I haven't done shit yet either so I must be ready."

NBA scouting director Marty Blake had this to say about Burns' draft potential in an exclusive interview with the Collegian.

"Ross who? Is this some kind of joke?" Blake said. "I hate all of you damn college reporters. Leave me alone. I've never even heard of Ross Burns."

The call was then accidentally disconnected.

Two NBA owners had different opinions.

"Well Ross fits right into the kind of players who we drafted in the past," said Harold Katz, owner of the Philadelphia 76ers, who usually suck.

"I think Ross would be a great addition to our squad," said LA Clippers owner Donald Sterling. "Nobody has ever heard of any of the players we have now and nobody has ever heard of Ross Burns. It's a perfect fit."

Burns had a somewhat imprecise formula for where he thinks he'll be drafted.

"Somewhere right before Marcus," he said. "He's just big. I got all the skills to pay the bills."

What will Burns do with his potential earnings?

"Well most people talk about buying stuff for their parents," he began. "The hell with that, I'm gonna buy myself some cool stuff."

Burns averaged .5 points per game and .2 rebounds. He was however the team leader in foot stomping, and was second only to Rigo Nuñez in towel waving.

MEDIA RELATIONS
Ross Burns

Who are Burns' NBA idols?

"I like that Michael Smith guy that the Celtics drafted a few years ago and Matt Wenstrom," Burns said. "And, oh yeah, my all-time favorite Scotty Thurman."

Burns also added that after dominating the NBA for several years, he plans to retire to spend more time with his family and then decide to play right field for the White Sox, before making up some lame-ass excuse about coming back to basketball.

"That's what all the great one's do," said Burns gleefully.

Cal's face highlights new court

By Boubacar Aw
Collegian Correspondent

In a press conference Friday afternoon, men's basketball coach John Calipari announced that sweeping changes will be made to the court at the William D. Mullins Center.

No longer will there be just a wash of maroon at the center-court jump circle. Next year fans everywhere will be able to celebrate UMass' rise to success every time the Minutemen take the court.

It's no secret that Massachusetts' fame and success have come in leaps and bounds ever since Calipari took the reins as coach eight years ago. Fans everywhere love the energetic young coach who is now synonymous with the UMass program.

And next year everyone will know exactly who Coach Cal is when the new court design is unveiled. A gigantic headshot of Calipari will be the focal point of the new jump circle.

The court redesigning trend that has already swept the NBA is now hitting the college circuit. The Houston Rockets, Charlotte Hornets, and Toronto Raptors all sport new court designs that are all the rage in the NBA. Calipari, along with University President William Bulger, Chancellor David K. Scott, and Athletic Director Bob Marcum, hopes people will feel the same about UMass' new design.

"How about that new design?" Calipari said. "I think it looks great. It really symbolizes what UMass basketball is all about.

"The maroon was just too plain, and the designers got together and came up with the headshot idea."

Along with the new Calipari jump circle, the athletic department task force and chief design engineer Giorgio Armani, decided to jazz up the court even more, with the saying, "The House that Cal Built," running along the sidelines, opposite the already present UMass logo.

"I think it really lends support to the whole Cal idea," Bulger said. "It livens up the court."

In a surprising announcement, Calipari said he was able to work the NCAA into allowing corporate sponsorship for his program. And after being granted that ruling, it didn't take long for the coach to renegotiate his contract with Degree Deodorant.

Opponents visiting the Mullins Center next year better have that extra degree of protection when they try to drive the lane, as a container of Degree will now be the new look in the paint.

"I think it'll be great, players lining up for free throws on either side of a larger than life Degree container, with the shooter standing right on the deodorant itself," a Degree executive said. "It's pure marketing brilliance."

"How about that deodorant?" Caliapri said. "Is that great, or what?"

And how do other college coaches think the new court will look?

"Are you kidding?" Utah coach Rick Majerus said. "It'll scare the living bejeezus out of any team that tries to play there.

"Think about it, you'll have a larger-than-life picture of Calipari on the middle of the floor and two huge friggin' deodorants. I'd hate to be a player and have to look down at that thing [Cal] while moving up the court. I wouldn't be able to eat."

"It'll be the perfect place for us to play anyone, anytime," Calipari said. "We're real warriors, and this court will be the perfect place for us to show our intensity and drive, to put in quality minutes, to play UMass basketball.

"The House that Cal Built' will be a perfect place for us to refuse to lose."

Lots more money leads to wicked fabulous new sports for Massachusetts

As money floods into the athletic department hand-over-fist from the sale of track and field t-shirts autographed by the Collegian's own Chris Conner, athletic director Bob Marcum announced that the University will be adding 10 new sports for the upcoming 1996-'97 academic year.

In a press conference at Rafters, Marcum laid out his plans for the upcoming year, and won $400 playing Keno.

Campus Pond Diving — Individuals from the competing schools would be dropped into campus pond, the winner being the competitor who lasts the longest before being mutilated and disintegrated by the toxic waste. This revolutionary new sport was inspired by Cleveland State students who acted similarly in the Cuyahoga River, before it got so polluted that it actually caught fire in the late '70s, tragically killing 2,641 student-athletes.

Library Climbing — The gaps in the walls from where bricks have fallen out make for a perfect climb. Competitors receive bonus points for mooning students as they pass their cubicles, and for each spectator below hit by a loogie.

Street Luge — A course is already under construction running down from Orchard Hill, through Central, and winding down to a finish at University Health Services, where each competitor will receive complimentary treatment for his mental instability that could only explain his partaking in this "made for the Deuce" sport.

Psycho Mounting Biker Dodging — Competitors will be asked to walk from Tobin Hall to Totman Gym while avoiding the hordes of helmeted Cannondale riders, who zoom through campus, attempting to get to a class faster than Mario Andretti.

"Those guys are nuts, they'll kick your ass," veteran defensive pedestrian Chris Stamm, a Southwest resident, said. "One minute you're going to psychology, the next you're road kill."

Protesting — With much practicing already on campus, competition for this roster will be fierce.

"I have been impressed by the Pike ralliers and those annoying little pains in the ass from MASSPIRG," said newly appointed coach, the messed up dude in the cat mask. "Every time I'm trying to make a point they're sticking those damn fliers in my face. I fucking hate that, but I think they definitely have All-American potential."

Keg Stands — Frat row residents will finally get a chance to take on the best in the business. The season opener for Team ZooMass, already in the top 10 of some preseason polls, is scheduled for orientation night against two-time defending National Champion Arizona State.

The Name Game — Teams of six will compete to see who can identify the most DC foods in under an hour. World record... four.

Washing Machine Boxing — Students will tussle for the last open washer, in a reenactment of what happens every day in every dorm. Champions from each dorm will compete in a round-robin tourney to select the UMass representative to the NCAA championship at Caesar's Palace.

PVTA Relay — PVTA bus drivers will drive a relay to Northampton. As soon as each bus reaches second gear, the next one starts up, so the buses will be placed about a mile apart. To handicap men's and women's drivers to ensure equal competition between the sexes, some busses will be weighted down with students crammed into the buses tight enough so that the density prohibits breathing.

Training for the passenger positions have already begun aboard rush-hour North and South Amherst lines.

Couch Throwing — Teams will compete to see who can nail the most people with a couch thrown from a Tower lounge, elevating a popular UMass pastime to its long- awaited varsity status.

Calipari & Company to jazz up FAC

The Fine Arts Center is proud to present a magical filled evening of music and motion when the John Calipari Dance Company takes the stage.

Calipari, the University of Massachusetts men's basketball coach, has been working with a talented group of inner-city children as a side project, "just in case this basketball thing doesn't work out."

The coach was encouraged by his wife to start the group after seeing her husband's interest in the movie Fame.

"He'd rent it every time he had that chance, that and Dirty Dancing, but mostly Fame," Ellen Calipari said. "When he asked for leg warmers for his birthday I knew sometime was up and then he showed me some moves he had been working on."

The evenings program entitled, "Let's Get Motivated" is set to a variety of music style including the ESPN's popular sports theme song albums.

Calipari's moves are inspired by not only renowned choreographers like Debbie Allen and Paula Abdul, but by his own players.

"I remember watching the game against St. Joe's where Carmello [Travieso] and Edgar [Padilla] were running in perfect sync. They were like two gazelle on the savannah. I wanted to capture that type of form in my dance. I wanted my dancers to be those gazelle," Calipari said.

The dancers in his company are all inner-city children who were picked by Calipari for their ability to complete a lay-up, three-point shot and a foul shot in one minute.

"The auditions were tough, but I told them that life is sometimes tough — you just have to refuse to lose," said Calipari.

"Let's Get Motivated" will play at the Fine Arts Center Auditorium tonight at 8 p.m. Tickets are $5 for senior citizens and students with UMass ID. General Admission is $10. For tickets and information call the Fine Arts Center Box Office at 555-UASS.

Croat General Turns Himself in to Stand Trial for War Crimes

THE HAGUE, Netherlands (AP) — A Bosnian Croat general charged with ordering massacres of hundreds of Muslims surrendered to U.N. war crimes prosecutors yesterday evening.

Tihomir Blaskic flew from Zagreb, Croatia, to Amsterdam's Schiphol airport and turned himself in to Dutch authorities, said Christian Chartier, spokesman for the international war crimes tribunal in The Hague.

Blaskic was indicted in November for allegedly ordering massacres in central Bosnia's Lasva Valley in 1992-1993. Most notorious of the alleged atrocities was the destruction of the village of Ahmici, where Bosnian Croat forces massacred 120 Muslims in April 1993.

His lawyer, Zvonimir Hodak, said the former Bosnian Croat army chief of staff had turned himself in so he could prove his innocence.

"Blaskic was always a professional soldier who insisted on respecting all the international human rights conventions and was ordering his troops to behave according to all the principles of humanity," Hodak told The Associated Press.

Researchers test gene therapy in treatment of HIV patients

WASHINGTON (AP) — An experiment in three HIV patients has shown for the first time that gene manipulation can protect immune system cells from infection by the virus that causes AIDS, researchers say.

The experimental therapy at the University of Michigan involved inserting altered genes into white blood cells from HIV patients, expanding the number of the altered cells in the laboratory and then injecting the cells back into the patients.

A report on the research is to be published Tuesday in the Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences.

Dr. Gary J. Nabel, professor at the University of Michigan Medical Center and a Howard Hughes Medical Institute researcher, said the work showed for the first time in clinical studies that gene therapy can be used to prolong the survival of CD4 T-cells, the white blood cells that are the primary target of the HIV, the virus that causes AIDS.

A loss of CD4 T-cells is a primary marker for the progress of the HIV infection and it is believed that guarding against the loss of these cells may prolong life for HIV patients.

In the study, Nabel and his colleagues targeted an HIV gene called REV which is essential for the reproduction of the virus in infected cells.

No April Fools joke; UM phone system gets free call waiting

By Melanie B. Arruda
Collegian Staff

The call waiting feature was made available on April 1 to all area residential hall phones free of charge by Telecommunication Services.

A number of student requests for the call waiting feature to be available in residential halls was received by the Housing Telecommunications Office, Director of Telecommunication Services at the Office of Information Technology (OIT) Randy Sailer said.

"It seems like a lot of people like the convenience of it [call waiting]," Northeast/Sylvan Area Director Jeff Ederer said.

"As technology is enhanced and we are able to do more things, we attempt to add more features for student service," Interim Director of Housing Services Michael Gilbert said. It is a service that many students already have in their homes, he added.

With the Ericsson Inc. phone system used by the University, the call waiting signal is not quite as distracting as the Nynex style call waiting ring, Sailer said. "It will ring quietly twice then go to voice mail if it is unanswered."

"I like the fact that instead of a beep it [call waiting] is a ring" accompanied by a flashing Access2/Program light on the phone panel, sophomore communications major Renee Bouchard said.

By "just pushing the buttons to flop back and forth" between calls, it [residential hall call waiting] is more obvious to use than the Nynex style call waiting, Sailer said.

"I think that it [call waiting] is an advantage. At least this way it's not going to be a hassle for people to get a hold of us," Bouchard said.

"Also on the Ericsson Inc. phones, you can combine both calls to make a conference call" with no additional fee, Sailer said.

The residential call waiting remains a pilot program for the time being, Gilbert said. For the rest of the spring semester "we will be monitoring it [call waiting feature]," Gilbert said.

If students respond favorably to the service, it will most likely become a permanent feature for all area residential hall phones, he added. Quick surveys will be done by the Telecommunications Office towards the end of the semester, according to Gilbert.

So far the feature has been implemented in residential halls, but academic departments can request the feature, said Sailer.

Plans for the residential call waiting feature by the Telecommunications Office began a few months ago, according to Gilbert.

Court ruling could make more employers prone to lawsuits

By Richard Carelli
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court made the nation's employers more vulnerable to being sued for age bias, ruling yesterday that some lower courts have been reading a major anti-discrimination law too narrowly.

The unanimous decision said employers who fire workers over 40 and replace them with significantly younger people may be breaking the law even if the new employees also are over 40.

The court reinstated an age-bias claim by a North Carolina man who was fired at age 56 after his supervisor allegedly told him he was "too damn old for this kind of work."

The federal Age Discrimination in Employment Act protects workers age 40 and over. Federal appeals courts had split over whether any illegal bias can occur if an employee is fired and replaced by someone over 40.

But Justice Antonin Scalia wrote for the nation's highest court that the replacement employee's age is irrelevant.

"The fact that one person in the protected class has lost out to another person in the protected class is irrelevant, so long as he has lost out because of his age," Scalia said.

David Gregory, a St. John's University law professor who had studied the case, called the decision "potentially very significant in this era of corporate downsizing."

"This will force employers to be more meticulous," he said. "It won't open any floodgates of new litigation but it will open things up, especially for those who are replaced by their proteges after training them."

In other action, the court:

• Ruled in a Georgia case that a death row inmate's first federal appeal generally cannot be dismissed as an abuse of the legal system even if it is filed just before a planned execution.

• Agreed to use a Mississippi case to decide whether people whose parental rights have been terminated must be allowed to appeal even if they cannot afford to pay the court fees.

• Said it will review a voting-rights dispute over how municipal court judges are elected in Monterey County, Calif. A decision could provide important new guidelines for other local elections nationwide.

• Rejected an appeal in which Tennessee officials argued that parents do not have a right to sue their state government for not doing enough to help them collect child-support payments.

In the age-bias case, lower courts had thrown out James O'Connor's lawsuit because after being fired he was replaced by someone aged 40 - not 39 or younger.

But Scalia said, "The fact that a replacement is substantially younger than (O'Connor) is a far more reliable indicator of age discrimination than is the fact that (he) was replaced by someone outside the protected class."

Scalia noted that the age difference must be significant, but did not offer a specific definition of "substantially younger." He did say that replacing a 68-year-old employee with one who's 65 might be "very thin" evidence of age discrimination.

Robin Conrad of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce pointed to that language in the ruling to claim "a substantial victory for the business community."

"We may find more cases being filed but fewer going to trial," she said. "The scarier prospect was letting anyone over 40 sue," Sally Dunaway, a lawyer with the American Association of Retired Persons, called the decision "a strong message" that puts employers on notice. She said a ruling that went the other way would have been "an outrageous result."

Although the decision focused on firings, it could apply as well to people who contend they were discriminated against in some other way - such as not being hired, or getting demoted or transferred. O'Connor, of Cary, N.C., was fired in 1990. He had worked since 1978 as a sales manager for Consolidated Coin Caterers Corp., a Charlotte-based company that operates cafeterias and vending machines in industrial plants.

Kevorkian faces his third trial for assisted suicide

By Brian S. Akre
Associated Press

PONTIAC, Mich. — Dr. Jack Kevorkian mockingly wore a colonial-style costume to court Monday for his third trial on assisted-suicide charges - a case that may be prosecutors' best chance yet of winning a conviction.

"If Thomas Jefferson justifies and endorses and advocates suicide for cancer, why am I in this courtroom?" Kevorkian shouted in a white wig, knee britches, a vest and buckle shoes.

For this trial, held under Michigan common law, Judge David Breck ruled that prosecutors must prove only that Kevorkian knew two women sought to commit suicide and that he gave them the means. Kevorkian has twice escaped conviction under Michigan's now-expired assisted suicide law, enacted by the Legislature specifically to stop him. The law exempted anyone whose intent was to relieve pain rather than kill.

Kevorkian was acquitted three weeks ago on charges stemming from two 1993 deaths. And in 1994, he was found innocent in another death.

Kevorkian, 67, is charged in the deaths of Sherry Miller, 43, and Marjorie Wantz, 58, in 1991. Miller died after inhaling carbon monoxide, and Wantz died of an injection. Theirs were the second and third of the 27 suicides Kevorkian has helped with since 1990. Neither of the women was terminally ill - and that could also work to the advantage of the prosecution. Miller had multiple sclerosis; Wantz had pelvic pain.

Thatcher Hall features programs geared towards students of different tongues

Northeast's Thatcher residence hall, will be the the site of tomorrow's Forgien Language Open House.

By Julia Stoyanovich
Collegian Correspondent

Thatcher Foreign Language Programs and Thatcher International Program are hosting an open house tomorrow, on April 3, between 6:30 and 7:30 p.m., in Thatcher Hall, Northeast Residential Area.

The Open House will give the visitors an opportunity to learn about the programs, sign up for one or more of them for the next year, or just get refreshments.

There are four language programs currently available in Thatcher: German, Japanese, French and Spanish, as well as an International Program. The programs are supported by the Residential Academic Programs and the corresponding language departments.

The foreign language programs, formerly in Brown, have been moved to Thatcher in the Fall of 1995, after the hall was completely renovated.

Participants of the programs, both native and non-native speakers of the languages, are enrolled in a two-credit conversational and culture course each semester. The courses are taught on the floor by teaching assistants who are native speakers of the languages.

Residents also agree by the contract to take a three-credit departmental course concurrently. French, German, Japanese and Spanish are supposed to be spoken on the floors as much as possible. Activities outside of the classroom

Carbon molecules made for less

By Melanie B. Arruda
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts chemist has found a way to cheaply process large quantities of "buckyballs" or buckminsterfullerene molecules.

The third form of carbon or C60 consists of 60 pure carbon atoms structured in a geodesic dome resembling a soccer ball, University Chemist Assistant Professor Vincent Rotello said.

"The making of them [buckyballs] is only one percent of the cost, the other 99 percent is the purification," Rotello said. "Commercial applications such as this are not going to happen on a mass scale until the cost of producing fullerenes is brought down. We think our process may point the way to dramatically reducing the cost and availability of this amazing substance."

The high cost of making the super–carbon molecule can reach as high as $150 per gram, according to Rotello. This has prevented the buckyballs from being utilized outside a laboratory setting, he said.

Buckyballs allow for the creation of a range of objects from super–strength, ultra–fine wires to lubricants for orbiting spacecraft and even non–stick cookware, Rotello said.

The process of developing large quantities of buckyballs involves being able to selectively pull the buckyballs out of a solution and a solid material pulls them out of solution, Rotello said. Once the super–carbon molecules are pulled from solution, it is heated gently until the solid material releases the buckyballs back, he said.

The solid material used is a specially treated silica gel, which is basically ground up glass, Rotello said. The silicate material consists of a diene molecule that specifically reacts with buckyballs as they are filtrated through the material, he said. The diene releases the super–carbon molecule when gently heated to 212 degrees Fahrenheit, he added.

Our method potentially cuts the cost of producing buckyballs by 90 percent, Rotello said.

"Buckyballs are hard to hold for one of the same reasons that scientists find them so potentially useful," he said. "Without any edges or corners, these molecules are almost like microscopic ball bearings."

This third form of carbon has unique chemical, magnetic, and electric properties, according to Rotello. One chemical property includes inhibiting the HIV virus by "plugging up" the enzyme that the virus uses to reproduce itself, he said. Magnetic and electric characteristics includes the using of a modified buckyball molecule you can use to create superconductors and semi–conductors, Rotello said. Superconductors allow you to transmit electricity, and makes the "levitation effect" possible when a train is suspended above a magnetic track, he added.

Buckyballs are named after Buckminister Fuller, inventor of the geodesic dome. Prior to its discovery, carbon was thought of as existing in only two naturally occurring forms such as graphite and diamond, Rotello said.

Rotello has been an assistant professor of Chemistry and the Program in Molecular and Cell Biology at UMass since 1993. He arrived at the University after his participation in a

Classes plan to honor Robinson

By Daniel E. Levenson
Collegian Staff

Spring is here, and with it comes baseball.

And baseball is going to be the focus of an exciting new experimental class being offered by the University next year.

While the American pastime is the focus of this academic endeavor "it really mirrors changes in the larger society" said Professor Jerry Mileur, one of four professors who are engineering the class. Mileur said the course will focus on the achievements and life of Jackie Robinson, and the effects he had on American society and the rest of the world.

Next year marks the 50th anniversary of Robinson breaking the color barrier in Major League baseball.

"Robinson, we think, represents the early stages of the civil rights movement," Mileur said. He said Robinson's entry into the Major League preceded several important events in the civil rights movement including the landmark court decision in Brown vs. the Board of Education. The steering committee for the class has been working with many people from various areas to develop the class.

The purpose of the class is to commemorate Robinson's achievement, and to use his times and legacy to look at American life and black and white relations.

The class will be experimental in several ways, using a variety of mediums to communicate information to students. Technology, including videos on various topics including slavery, Jim Crow and baseball, will play a big role in the course. Reading materials will include autobiographies by Jackie Robinson and Satchel Paige. A variety of speakers are slated to appear. Budget permitting, Mileur said that he would like to see a wide variety of people coming to speak including current and former Major league players, teammates of Robinson, sportscasters and scholars. So far Joe Morgan (Cincinnati Reds Hall of Fame member) and Don Nukum are two among many who will definitely be coming to lecture.

The course, which draws together resources and concepts from four separate departments, can enroll up to 240 students for the fall semester. There will be another class, which will focus on Robinson's legacy, taught in the spring. In order to take the spring class it is not necessary to take the fall class. Both classes will have no prerequisites.

According to Mileur the group would also like to sponsor cultural events for the rest of the University, as well as a conference on Robinson to be held in the spring.

The steering committee for the course includes political science professors Jerry Mileur, history professor Ron Story, Afro–American studies professor Bill Strickland and sport management professor Bill Sutton.

The class will give undergraduates four General Education credits, but the group has applied to make History and Diversity credits available for the class.

The first class will start off exploring the 19th century origins of baseball, including important black players of the time. The class will then move on to examine AMERICORPS: Is AmeriCorps, the national service program, worth saving?

Bill Clinton

"Definitely. Our challenge is to give Americans the educational opportunities they need for the 21st century and to strengthen our sense of responsibility and community. Through AmeriCorps ... we are widening the doors to college and at the same time building a sense of service to our neighborhoods. Last year, AmeriCorps recruited 25,000 volunteers to work in our schools, hospitals, and neighborhoods while earning money for college or job training."

Bob Dole

"No."

WASHINGTON (AP) — And then there were two.

Breaking clear in a contest once crowded and tangled, Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole has secured the Republican presidential nomination and won the right to engage President Clinton in the fall.

Neither man at this point has a comprehensive platform. But what they do have, after Clinton's three years in the White House and Dole's 27 years in the Senate, are records. And since January they've answered questions on a variety of subjects put to them by The Associated Press.

Here are their answers, plus summaries of their words and actions on a variety of issues. Positions may change, and Ross Perot may yet jump in again to mix everything up.

But as of now, this is where they stand and what they've said include watching movies in the language studied, cooking, going to lectures on topics related to the language and culture, organizing dance parties and much more.

Participants of the International Program from all over the world meet for group discussions and work on individual projects presenting their countries of origin or a point of view on a cultural issue. One academic credit is received for the program. There are both International and American students in this program.

The Atmosphere of Thatcher is truly unique in its diversity: over 20 languages are spoken on the four floors of the hall.

Many students who live in Thatcher this year are going on exchange abroad next year. Others, exchange students from different countries, are returning to their home universities. A good number of this year's residents are, however, staying in the House, and giving a solid base to the dynamic structure of the programs.

Prosecutor Lawrence Bunting said he will argue that Miller and Wantz had other options.

"In this case, you have a lady who had multiple sclerosis - it was not terminal at the time - and you have a lady who the medical examiner testifies there was nothing physically wrong with her," Bunting said. "She had a mental problem."

Bunting said the doctor and his supporters are misleading the public.

"Everybody can look at somebody who is terminally ill and say, 'This person needs help,'" Bunting said. "Everybody has sympathy. The question is, in a free society do you allow someone without any constraints to act, as the American Medical Association has called, a reckless agent of death?' That's what we have in Dr. Kevorkian."

Despite Breck's ruling, defense attorney Geoffrey Fieger said Thursday he still plans to show jurors Kevorkian's "sole intent was to relieve pain and suffering." He said the ruling "has absolutely no effect on us."

Kevorkian faces up to five years in prison on each of two counts if convicted.

O[illegible] the past few weeks casino gambling has become one big if-then question in social and political circles. Every day it seems there are [illegible] in the morning to make casino gambling a reality in Massachusetts, and every day it seems [illegible] getting closer and closer to [illegible]

[illegible] this rise in an epidemic threatening to [illegible] our society? All the latest [illegible] that gambling is here to stay — at [illegible]

[illegible] has already been legalized in 24 [illegible] which was once confined to [illegible] New Jersey, has spread across the United States like wildfire. Taking the form [illegible] to [illegible] gambling has swept this country in the past decade, [illegible] Mississippi, where sweet gambling [illegible] to [illegible] in Atlantic City [illegible] and that is starting to [illegible] the general population.

[illegible] That [illegible] people the opportunity to [illegible] betting — work to [illegible] You [illegible] drive to [illegible] a bus [illegible] pattern. A bus [illegible] to [illegible] Amherst.

[illegible] gambling is that it targets [illegible] communities those few advantages are easily outweighed by the problems they bring on, which include increased crime, bankruptcy and suicide rates.

Given these facts, how have casinos made it as far into society as they have? The answer is money. These companies have serious money which they don't mind throwing around as campaign contributions and television advertising.

In recent years, the gambling industry has become one of the top political donors in the country. Last June, Bob Dole, the man who could be president, raked in half a million dollars at a single Las Vegas fund-raiser, a success he will not forget soon, especially when it comes to matters of gambling.

Like the tobacco industry, gambling has set up a powerful network of lobbyists to push its agenda forward, even though everyone knows that society is being hurt in the process. Government should know better than to listen to this dirty money, but money, no matter how soiled, is hard to ignore.

Listen folks, gambling is as addictive as any drug out there. It has ruined many lives and ended others. It hurts not only those who are addicted, but their families and friends. When someone loses money at a blackjack table, they might as well be losing food off of their dinner table.

I know what it feels like to be swept up in the excitement of gambling. As soon as you go down five dollars, you think you can get it back in a hurry. If you win, you are deserved in thinking that you can win forever. Either way, the vicious cycle continues until you're in a hole that you can't climb out of, and when you lose there's nobody there to help you. It leaves you with not only empty pockets, but an empty feeling in your stomach. The addict knows how stupid it is, but that won't keep him from returning to the tables whenever he has money again.

It really is kind of sad that so many people in this world fall victim to that monster called gambling, but will the government do anything to change the latest trend of casino gambling? Don't bet on it.

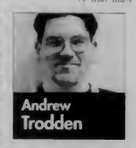
Inspired by a fire

Y[illegible] April Fool's Day [illegible] was very well [illegible] But for me, April 1 [illegible] day to flex my [illegible] hoped all [illegible] gullible cuss [illegible] to remember a tragic [illegible] took my brother [illegible]



[illegible] often. I can imagine [illegible] anything but gratitude.

I know what I think and feel when I remember that day. If it doesn't make me sad as hell then it scares the shit out of me. So I can imagine what the memory does to my brother.

That's what begins to amaze me about my brother. he has continually been able to overcome all sorts of obstacles. Which is something I wish I was able to do more of. The difference is he was able to overcome a life-threatening injury, the pain that followed, the scarring, and the horrible memory of it all. When I think about overcoming obstacles I think about little things like finding time to get all of my work done or getting through the week with only pocket change to spare.

That's when I begin to wonder if I would have the will to fight the good fight if faced with such a circumstance. If I can't even make it over these little hurdles how in the world am I going to leap that building?

How are any of us? Let's be reasonable, do any of us really have what it takes to win the fight for life or do we maybe just think we do? I'd surely like to believe that I could overcome that battle, but I don't know for sure I've never been faced with it. As most of us haven't.

So now every time I'm faced with something that I might consider an obstacle I think of what my brother went through to beat his odds and that makes me realize that I don't really have an obstacle at all. All problems are small unless we make a big deal out of them.

I once read a quote that went something like "touch a thistle timidly and it will prick you, grasp it boldly and its spines will crumble." Which basically just means to take the problems and challenges we face in our lives and deal with them till they are done.

That's just what my brother did, he grasped the thistle boldly and its spines crumbled under his pressure. My brother has become a big inspiration to me since I realized how amazing he really is.

We all need a little inspiration in our lives. I've got mine, have you got yours?

A large pizza with extra data

O[illegible] it's all over. The mighty U-Mass basketball team has fallen. But I'm not going to write about that — you'll see enough of those columns over the next few days.

I will waste your time, however, with some stuff related to the tournament.

You think the campus was going crazy when the Minutemen were on the road to the Final Four? You should have seen the out-side world. Especially the business people, those slugs were trying to take advantage of any situation possible.

I was sitting in the newsroom down in the dungeon we call the Collegian when the phone rang.

"Hello, Collegian."

"Hi, I'm from Jericho Promotions, Inc. and we conducted a study about..."

Right there she lost me, we get tons of calls on stuff like this, but I was going to be polite and listen to the schpeel that she must have so diligently worked on. I missed most of the beginning because the Tetris game I was playing was more riveting than she was. I guess what she was shoveling was how personality traits in male and females change when their schools do well in the NCAA tournament.

I did a lot of "uh huh"'s and "yeah"'s, until she said this amazing fact:

"Whenever U-Mass beats a team by more than 20, meat- topped orders [for pizzas] increase 15 percent throughout Massachusetts."

Ex-squeeze me?

"Yes, um, but they actually fell by 10 percent within Boston."

OK, ma'am, are you serious, or is this someone calling from Southwest?"

"No, I am very serious, would you like me to fax you some more information?"

Definitely."

I got the fax just a few minutes later and I could not believe that someone actually put out a survey about this crap — here's some other messed-up facts:

The study shows that during the tournament men show increasingly childlike demeanor while women are more motivated to do more academic studies.

I kept reading stats and a lot of them had facts on pizzas involved. I realized why eventually, the people who did the survey where pizza delivery people.

I'm sure the facts are real accurate. How did they get this information?

"Hello, Joe Blows Pizza Joint, can I take your order... wait a minute, is that college basketball I hear in the background? Can I ask you a few questions?"

The study showed that there was a 30 percent rise in incidents of males playing Nintendo when the delivery person came to the door at colleges of teams who won the first round games. I know that fact is wrong. No one has a Nintendo anymore, I'd rather play Atari — Pitfall rocks harder than Super Mario Brothers.

Orders to women at college libraries of schools that made the "Sweet Sixteen" rose by 32 percent.

These people have some pretty exciting lives — remind me not to work for a promotions company.

Apparently, if Marcus Camby has more than six blocks, pepperoni orders rise 11 percent in the Commonwealth.

If Kentucky attempts more than 20 three-point shots in a game, pizza orders increase by 31 percent. Kentucky attempted nine three-pointers during the semi-finals game — poor Domino's.

Men in final four schools increased their clank calls by eight percent, were four times more likely to be wearing only underwear when pizza arrived and were 87 percent more likely to ask for milk than any other group in the country.

"Hi, can I have a large peppers and onion pizza, a carton of milk and some pants?"

Here's a fact for the finals game last night: whenever a Big East team plays, vegetable topped orders increased nine percent in the Northeast.

Columnists who write about this stuff are 81 percent more likely to never have a reader again.

Copping out

I[illegible] was a Friday night around 12:30 a.m. and two friends and I were returning from uptown. We had decided to forego the bar scene for the night and had opted for coffee and ice cream at Bart's instead. We thought it would be kinda cool not having to wait in line for 20 minutes, actually being able to sit at a table, and not having beer spilled all over us that night.

If you've never given up Delano's for a coffee shop some weekend night, you should try it. It's especially fun to sit by the window and watch all your fellow peers stumble by. You'll have some great stories to tell, and the best part is you can even make stuff up because chances are your friends won't remember what happened anyway.

After about 20 cups of coffee (I only exaggerate a little) and talking about everything under the sun, we decided to leave. I mean at this point I even knew that my friend had seen "The Outsiders" 12 times (and when these 12 times were), and that if she had to choose to be one animal, another friend would like to be a seal. It's amazing the topics one starts discussing after numerous hours with the same people.

We hopped into the car and started off towards home. An elderly man was driving in front of us so the trip was taking a bit longer than planned, but we really didn't mind. When "Margaritaville" came on the radio, we were even kinda glad for the delay. There's nothing like having the windows rolled down and singing that song with your buddies.

We were basically the only cars on the road (remember I said it was 12:30, the bars don't close until 1:00), except for the couple of police cars that passed us. Then the all too familiar heart-racing event happened: One of the cops pulled into a driveway and proceeded to follow us. This halted our karoke to Jimmy Buffett and we continued down the road for about a mile in silence, before inevitably the blue lights came on.

We pulled over, and my friend frantically opened the glove compartment, looking for her registration. I guess the fact that the policeperson always remains in the car for about 10 minutes before approaching your vehicle isn't that bad, considering it always takes at least that long to actually find your license and registration. So what seemed like hours later, after we'd found out from a receipt that my friend miraculously had spent forty dollars at CVS the day before and carries a lifetime supply of Big Red gum in her purse, all in her attempt to find her license, the cop approached the car.

The scene from Terminator 2, when the cop approaches the car and asks, "Have you seen this boy?" flashed through my head as the policeman beamed the flashlight into the car.

"License and registration" please.

"Ummm... officer... I was ummm... just wondering... well, why was I pulled over?"

"I will tell you after you give me your license and registration."

So my friend handed them over.

The cop looked at them and then proceeded to flash the light into the car. First at the driver, and then at the rest of us.

"Have you been drinking tonight?"

"No."

"How about you?" he shined the light into the backseat.

"No," I said. Not that it was really any of his business, considering I wasn't driving and I am of legal drinking age.

"Well, the reason I pulled you over was because you have a burned out tail light." How he saw that coming from the opposite direction or why he had to follow us for five minutes before informing us of this, still eludes me.

"Have a nice night now, and make sure you get that light fixed," he said as he returned to his car.

Now I strongly believe that one should not drink and drive. It is a much more serious crime in my eyes than many people treat it. Therefore I have no problem when someone is swerving in the road or otherwise implying they are under the influence for a police officer to pull them over. In fact I think that cops should be watching out for this behavior.

However, it is not only an inconvenience but also an infringement of your rights to be pulled over to check for drunkenness without any reason to suspect this condition. The fact that it is late on a weekend night and we are college-age students does not justify this.

Classy quartet comes to Bowker

By Matt Sinclair
Collegian Staff

QUARTETTO GELATO
Bowker Auditorium
March, 31

Canadian Quartet Quartetto Gelato proved a real hit when they performed at Bowker Sunday. With a diverse and intriguing program which included classic favorites, operatic arias and traditional numbers, they had something to offer all tastes.

The four-person quartet has been particularly active this season and are currently engaged on a coast-to-coast tour which will take them from New York to California, with concerts in cities such as Washington D.C., Austin, Dallas and Los Angeles. They also performed in the summer Oregon Bach Festival, and during their 1994-95 season they performed in excess of 70 concerts.

Other notable achievements include their contribution to the hit movie Only You, (starring Robert Downey Jr. and Marisa Tomei), for which Quartteto Gelato recorded the soundtrack.

One of the most important elements in the Quartet's music is its ability to generate humor and to enable the audience to laugh and enjoy itself. This is achieved through the use of witty musical twists and by employing their considerable expertise in ways not readily available to the average musician.

Although the quartet itself is relatively new, its performers are all distinguished within their field. Cynthia Steljes (oboe and English horn), has performed extensively on radio and in concert, not just in North America but in Eastern and Western Europe, as well as in the Middle East.

Peter De Sotto (violin, voice, mandolin) is also distinguished and has won numerous scholarships and awards. He was a member of the Toronto Symphony for 10 years and has an impressive history of prestigious voice teachers — his singing really had to be heard to be believed.

Born in Italy, Claudio Vena (viola, accordion, arranger) spent three years with classical pop-group Quintessence. More recently he has been assistant director of the Miss Saigon orchestra in Toronto.

Last but not least is George Meanwell (cello, guitar), who has belonged to a variety of ensembles and has travelled considerably. Possum Dixon to revisit Valley at Iron Horse

By Mike Burke & Tara MK Connelly
Collegian Staff

COURTESY INTERSCOPE

Possum Dixon will bring their pop-perfect tunes to the Iron Horse stage.

Named after a fugitive seen on America's Most Wanted, Possum Dixon have never been a band to follow traditional methods to stardom.

They are not your average generation X alternative rockers, just a simple four piece from Los Angeles obsessed with creating that perfect pop song, a far cry from Bush's or Silverchair's desire for the perfect image.

Singer Rob Zabrecky and guitarist Celso Chavez joined forces in 1989 as off-beat cabaret act without a real name. It wasn't until pianist/guitarist Robert O'Sullivan hooked up with the duo that the roots of Possum Dixon were set. This was four years ago and since then the band have escalated into one of the genre's hottest new talents.

Their self-titled debut album was a masterful mix of sound and lyrics that was followed by three singles and a triple 7- inch box set and even a seven song cassette.

Their sophomore LP, Star Maps which was released late last year on Interscope Records, follows the same recipe for success that Possum Dixon had but with more electricity and smarter lyrics that keep making them a definite stand out. Simply put they are the definition of a no frills pop band.

Songs like "Nerve" and "Executive Slacks" chronicles the groups rise to comparable fame, all the members of the band were forced into doing rather disdainful day jobs in order to support themselves in between nightly gigs at seedy L.A. bars, a lifestyle many struggling musicians are used to.

This however is not the first time the quartet has played the Valley, last year they hit Pearl Street playing for a modest, but receptive audience. Possum Dixon is perhaps the best example of a band that knows what it wants, what it's listeners want and how to put it all together in one big package for success.

Possum Dixon will play the Iron Horse April 3 at 10 p.m. Miss Reed will open. For tickets and information call 586- 8686.

Redford & Pfeiffer get close

Avnet's latest film sappy, but leads make it all worthwhile

By Jennifer Howell
Collegian Staff

UP CLOSE AND PERSONAL
Directed by Jon Avnet with Michelle Pfeiffer, Robert Redford
Playing at Mt. Farms Four

Michelle Pfeiffer and Robert Redford bring intelligence and real emotion to what would have otherwise been just a sappy formula newsroom romance as they co-star in Up Close and Personal.

Up Close and Personal tells the story of an ambitious young woman, Sally Atwater (Pfeiffer), who arrives at her desk assistant position at a Miami news station with nothing but a poor background in Nevada, a sister she wants to lift out of the trailer park and endless drive.

Sally's ambitions are given direction as news director Warren Justice (Redford) becomes her mentor and trains her as a reporter. Soon an image change, a name change and a few lessons in life make Tally Atwater into a viable reporter. At the same time, Atwater and Justice fall in love.

The rest of the movie deals with choices Atwater and Justice must make as reporters and lovers. They struggle with career and emotional issues as their relationship and Tally's career take off at the same time.

In the hands of any other actors, this plot might play like one of the less-interesting made for TV movies. With Redford and Pfeiffer on board, however, the characters become convincing and even watching them frolic on the beach to the strains of Celine Dion's "Because You Loved Me" becomes bearable.

Pfeiffer is enjoyable to watch as she makes her transformation from awkward novice to superstar. She is endearing and believable as she rips a suit and spills her purse all over the floor on her first day of work. She is an assertive, exciting match for Redford as she plays protegee to his mentor. And she remains just as accessible and likable to audiences as she reaches polished stardom.

Redford, meanwhile, plays a role he's played a million times before—confident, independent, witty and handsome with a social conscience and an eye on a woman who's definitely his equal. Redford is definitely repeating himself, but somehow that doesn't matter. He plays the role with a practiced charisma that sucks an audience in, and makes them

TV actor to take on new Biblical role

By Lynn Elber
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — So here's this actor, David Suchet, claiming it was him playing Agatha Christie's Hercule Poirot these past six years on PBS' "Mystery!"

Nah. Had to be the real thing. Poirot on TV was, after all, just as a Christie reader would picture the detective, from his precisely barbered moustache to his perfectly exasperating ego.

A mere impersonation? C'mon. Here's Suchet appearing as Aaron in the TNT miniseries "Moses," and there's not a whit of resemblance between the Old Testament figure and the Belgian sleuth.

Aaron is a simple, ragged refugee who grows from fear to faith in the two-part drama starring Ben Kingsley (8 p.m. EST Sunday and Monday, April 7-8). Poirot was all cleverness and manicured composure.

But TV credits don't lie, so we'll have to give Suchet his due as an exceptional character actor who simply vanishes into the role he's playing.

Which is exactly his goal, says the Englishman.

"I love to be different people," he said. "I'm not very interested in showing myself off as myself. My gift at all, if indeed I have a gift, is being able to transform myself."

Those transformations, besides Poirot, include Sigmund Freud in a much-praised British TV production and a Middle Eastern terrorist in the new film Executive Decision (a "big Hollywood action movie," Suchet tags it).

"That's what I am, a character actor," says Suchet, lulling a caller with his rich, theater-trained voice. "I've never been a great romantic lead."

He is, he admits by phone from New York, playing just such a part, a suddenly jobless and homeless man who finds work in a film now in production in the city.

"There you are," he said, playfully. "People like short, stumpy men sometimes."

Roles like Aaron, in TNT's fourth Old Testament epic, are more typical for Suchet, 50. He said he welcomed the chance to play Moses' brother and to explore the Bible.

"Those wonderful stories that are found in the Old Testament and the New, they're glorious. I don't find them dusty. I find them full of humanity, full of reality, full of drama."

And in full voice:

"I thought Aaron would have more of a booming voice, because God choose him to be one of Israel's high priests — and without a microphone," the actor said.

Author discusses net surfing

Author J.C. Herz talked about the future of the Internet, and her experiences writing her current book Surfing on the Internet during a recent phone interview.

"I think the Web is a testament to the speed of technological development," Herz said.

She wrote the book before the World Wide Web was developed, and it went to press when the media first discovered it.

"I wrote Surfing when the Net was still Bohemian," Herz said.

The future of the Net lies in the Web because we are a visual society, Herz said. The only thing limiting the Net from directly competing with television is speed, she said. There are already Web sites which are similar to soap operas.

"I think MUDs [on–line games] and Web pages are the theme parks of cyber space," Herz said. "Everything in our society such as malls and stores are becoming theme parks."

In the past people had to use drugs to alter their minds to go to another world, but today people can use the computer instead, she said.

The development of the Net might be hindered by the recent Telecommunications Bill passed by Congress and signed into law on Feb. 8.

"I think the law is bone headed and Unconstitutional," she said. "The courts will probably repeal it, but until then it will limit people's rights on–line."

She said she does not expect too many people to be arrested under the law because essentially Internet service providers are liable for content, so they are forced to become police.

"The strangeness of the Net is its lack of boundaries," Herz said. "Where is the jurisdiction? It's part of an age old dispute about state's rights taken into a new arena with more energy."

In order to research her first book, Herz had to go on-line. In the beginning she said it was great because it was like she was being paid to goof off.

"For awhile I wallowed in it until it became a Sartrian hell," Herz said. If she did not want to log on, she had no choice, she said.

Herz is currently writing a book about video games and pop culture. She said video games have a dramatic impact on pop culture because everyone under 30 grew up with either Atari or Nintendo. She said the book is expected out early next year.

cheer the characters on.

The movie is also helped by subtle political undertones in the script by Joan Didion and John Gregory Dunne. Jon Avnet's direction manages to make these messages a natural part of the narrative.

It is true that Up Close and Personal is often sappy. It doesn't say anything that other films haven't said before. There is nothing very extraordinary about it. But Redford and Pfeiffer's performances make this movie into something worth watching and a good date movie, judging from the number of couples glued to their seats (and each other) at the end of the credits. Book chronicles author's adventures on Internet

J.C. HERZ
Surfing on the Internet: A nethead's adventure on–line
Back Bay Books

J.C. Herz weaves a whimsical adventure through the nether worlds of cyberspace in her first book.

Herz wrote about all the outrageous and hilarious events that occurred to her on-line.

From posing as a tempting seductress to pretending to be a man, she has done everything on-line.

She takes the reader from adventures on chat lines and games to the Usenet.

While on the Usenet she took part in a heated battle between the "legions of purple sponginess" who support Barney, the popular children's character, and those who are at odds with his teachings.

Beyond simply exploring cyber space, she reveals how addicting the Internet can become for people. She opens the book by telling how she got started on–line one night while studying for an exam at Harvard a few years ago.

The Net was an addiction for her, and she illustrates it through out the book. She discussed how she lost sleep because she would log on after midnight and stay on–line occasionally until the sun rose.

Like an alcoholic who has moments of lucidity, so does the book. She reveals a sense of sorrow concerning her endeavors and other people's on–line.

The best example is her discussion with a 19–year–old on a chat line who on the Net lives out his fantasies of leaving his parents and moving to Los Angeles. After she leaves him, she realizes she has a real life.

The book is easy reading, and quite enjoyable for anyone who has ever used the Net for more than simply e-mail.

It's the macaroni and cheese of truck payments.

Ump McSherry dies after first-inning collapse

By Joe Kay
Associated Press

CINCINNATI (AP) — Umpire John McSherry, who planned to see doctors the next day about an irregular heart beat, collapsed on the field seven pitches into Cincinnati's opener Monday and died at a hospital about an hour later.

The devastated Reds and Montreal Expos postponed the game about an hour after McSherry collapsed. It will be replayed in its entirety today.

University Hospital said McSherry died of "sudden cardiac death," a condition in which the heart beats out of control. McSherry, 51, was listed at 328 pounds and had a history of medical problems. He had told the other umpires that he was going to be treated Tuesday for arrhythmia, or abnormal heart beat.

"I wish he would have done it sooner," Reds catcher Eddie Taubensee said.

McSherry, the crew chief and home plate umpire, turned away two minutes into the top of the first inning and headed for the tunnel behind the plate that leads to the umpires' dressing room. He fell face-first when he reached the warning track.

The other umpires covered their faces and players gathered around while the crowd of roughly 53,000 fans went silent. Doctors in the crowd rushed onto the field to try to help revive McSherry, who never regained consciousness.

He was declared dead at 3:04 p.m. EST at University Hospital. A spokeswoman said McSherry's heart had stopped beating properly. McSherry was believed to be the first major league umpire to be fatally stricken during a game. Ray Chapman is the only player to die after an on-field accident - he was beaned by Carl Mays in 1920 and died shortly thereafter.

College basketball star Hank Gathers died about two hours after collapsing on the court during a game for Loyola Marymount in 1990. Detroit Lions receiver Chuck Hughes collapsed on the field in the final minute of a game against Chicago in 1971 and died later that day.

The Expos-Reds postponement was believed to be the first major league game called off because of a death.

Reds manager Ray Knight put his arm around umpire Tom Hallion as they watched doctors try to revive McSherry.

"He said John was supposed to go get his arrhythmia (treated) earlier and he didn't want to do that," Knight said. "He made the statement that, 'I'm going to be here opening day with them and then go get that tomorrow.'"

McSherry was named a crew chief in July 1988, replacing Lee Weyer, who died of a heart attack two weeks earlier.

Last August, he was forced to leave a game between Atlanta and Chicago because of heat exhaustion. In 1993, he left a game in Cincinnati against Los Angeles after becoming ill in 87-degree heat.

McSherry was forced to leave Game 7 of the 1992 NL playoffs between Pittsburgh and Atlanta in the second inning because of dizziness. A year earlier, he collapsed because of dehydration during a game between St. Louis and Atlanta.

"John was superb human being, an excellent umpire," NL president Len Coleman said. "He had the respect of everyone in baseball and his death is a great loss."

Umpires are given annual physical checkups. McSherry was examined in February, the NL said.

McSherry looked fine before the game Monday, as horse-drawn wagons circled the field and former Reds manager Sparky Anderson threw out a ceremonial first pitch to Knight, who was managing his first game.

"He was joking around with me before the game," Taubensee said. "In fact, he said, 'Eddie, you can call the first two innings.' He seemed to be in good spirits."

Mark Grudzielanek flied out to open the game and Mike Lansing struck out against Pete Schourek. After the second pitch to Rondell White, McSherry backed away from the plate, waved to second-base umpire Steve Rippley with his right hand, and started toward the dressing room.

"After the second pitch to Rondell White, he just said, 'Hold on, time out for a second,'" Taubensee said. "I turned around and said, 'Are you all right, John?' He didn't say anything. I thought maybe he pulled something (a muscle) by the way he was walking. After he collapsed, I lost it."

Boston Bruins suffer tie against lowly Senators

KANATA, Ontario (AP) — The Boston Bruins scored a lucky goal in the third period credited to Tim Sweeney and held on for a 1-1 tie against the lowly Ottawa Senators on Monday night.

Boston (36-30-10) squandered the chance to pull even with Washington for sixth place in the Eastern Conference. Both teams have six games remaining, while New Jersey and Tampa Bay have seven games left and fell two points behind the Bruins.

Ottawa rookie Daniel Alfredsson broke a scoreless tie at 2:21 of the third period, using Alexei Yashin as a decoy on a 2-on-1 break before wiring a wrist shot under the crossbar behind Bruins goaltender Bill Ranford. It was Alfredsson's 22nd goal and NHL rookie-leading 52nd point of the season.

But 68 seconds later Boston caught a break. Dave Archibald's hard clearing attempt from the Ottawa goalmouth hit Sweeney's shinpad and bounced straight back past Senators goalie Damian Rhodes.

The Senators broke a four-game losing streak but remained the worst team in the NHL with a record of 15-56-5.

Ottawa out-worked and outshot Boston in the scoreless opening period but the Bruins had the better scoring chances - the best being Sandy Moger's backhander that rose past a gaping Ottawa net with Rhodes down and out. Todd Flik also missed an open net with a slap shot from outside the Senators' blue line after intercepting a clearing pass by Rhodes.

Ranford's best save in the first period may have been an innocent- looking deflection off his own defenseman that forced a skate save.

There was nothing subtle about Ranford's work in the second period, which he began by lunging across his goalmouth to stack the pads and stop Sean Hill's power-play slap shot.

The Bruins killed off four minor penalties in the second period.

Sabres 6, Canadiens 4

Pat Lafontaine scored two goals as the Buffalo Sabres, already eliminated from playoff contention, skated to a 6-4 victory over the Montreal Canadiens on Monday night.

Buffalo, which also got goals from Brian Holzinger, Mike Wilson, Randy Burridge and Jason Dawe, had lost four of its last five games, but won the season series 3-2.

Montreal (39-30-8) fell to fifth place in the Eastern Conference standings, behind Florida, with five games remaining. Andrei Kovalenko, Valeri Bure, Mark Recchi and Saku Koivu scored for Montreal, which had 50 shots at Dominic Hasek.

Midway through the first period it looked as though the Canadiens had come prepared to fight, but not ready to play hockey. The crowd of 21,169 cheered during bouts between Donald Brashear and Rob Ray at 11:11, and again barely a minute later when Turner Stevenson and Matthew Barnaby went at it.

By 12:47 of the opening period, Buffalo was ahead 3-0 on goals from Holzinger, LaFontaine and Wilson. The Sabres had jumped to a two-goal lead on their second and third shots of the game against Jocelyn Thibault.

Thibault was lifted in favor of Pat Jablonski for the third period.

Montreal closed the gap to one with 1:41 left in the third on Koivu's goal, but Dawe scored an empty-netter at 19:04.

Irvin indicted on two counts

By Mark Babineck
Associated Press

DALLAS (AP) — Michael Irvin, the Dallas Cowboys' all-time leading receiver and one of the NFL's most popular players, was indicted on two counts of drug possession Monday. He faces up to 20 years in prison if convicted.

Irvin and two female companions were indicted by a grand jury less than a month after police found them in a motel room littered with cocaine and marijuana.

The indictment charges Irvin with felony possession of at least four grams of cocaine and misdemeanor possession of marijuana. Irvin, former teammate Alfredo Roberts and the two women, described by police as topless dancers, were found in an Irving motel room on March 4 with drugs and paraphernalia.

Jail officials said Irvin was arrested shortly after the indictments were returned, then released on $5,500 bond. He was seen entering the grand jury courtroom about 1:30 p.m. Monday and was seen leaving the Lew Sterrett Justice Center with Roberts about 3 p.m.

Just 10 weeks earlier, Irvin helped the Cowboys to their third Super Bowl championship in four years.

Telephone messages left with Irvin's attorney, Kevin Clancy, were not immediately returned. No trial date has been set for the case.

A statement released by the NFL said:

"We are aware of today's grand jury charges and will closely monitor the case. Players ultimately convicted of drug-related violations of law are subject to disciplinary action by the commissioner.

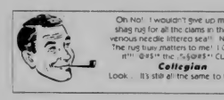
"Pending resolution of such court cases, the NFL drug policy and program for drugs of abuse and alcohol states that players involved in drug-related incidents are required to undergo on a confidential basis a medical evaluation by independent doctors that could result in a mandatory treatment program. In addition, players in the drug program are subject to 10 tests per month for two years. Failure to comply with any portion of the policy would result in fines leading to suspension."

There was no decision on whether to indict Roberts, a 31-year-old business associate of Irvin, said a spokeswoman with the district attorney's office.

Irvin and one of the women, 22-year-old Angela Renee Beck, face punishment of two to 20 years and a fine of $10,000 if convicted on the cocaine charge. The misdemeanor charge is punishable by up to 180 days in county jail and or a $2,000 fine.

Beck was charged with felony possession of at least 4 grams of cocaine and misdemeanor possession of marijuana. Jasmine J. Nabwangu, 21, was charged with possessing less than a gram of cocaine, a felony, and with misdemeanor possession of marijuana. Nabwangu could face 180 days to two years in jail and or a $10,000 fine if convicted of the cocaine charge.

Police said Beck claimed the drugs belonged to her, and officials estimated their worth to be $6,000. She was the only one arrested when the drugs were seized on March 4.



Oh No! I wouldn't give up my llama shag rug for all the claims in the intravenous needle littered sea!! Hay Nay!! The rug truly matters to me! I CARE for it!!! @#$! the S&@#$! CLAM!!!

Like Lianne, she had one of the best beams of her life on Saturday. And I think she's averaging a 9.6 on the floor.

"Everyone is really focused, and that is so important for this time of year."

And this time of the year brings the Regionals. Out of seven teams, UMass is seeded fifth, behind, among others, top-seeded Kent St., and second-seeded Penn St., which is hosting the meet. Kuzara realizes that the first five seeds are very close in talent, and the meet will be virtually up for grabs.

"Right now we've got to stay relaxed," he said. "We've got nothing to lose, and everything to gain at the Regionals. The pressure is all on Penn St. and Kent St. Everyone at the meet will fear UMass the most. We're performing at our best, and we've got people coming back from injury. If we hit with everyone in the spots their supposed to be, it's going to be tough to beat us."

Kuzara points to his freshmen as one reason for his team's solid outings.

"The freshmen play has such an important role on this squad, particularly Denise and Anita [Sanyal]," Kuzara said. "We've really counted on those two. We knew they would be good, but with freshmen, you never know if they can maintain their high level throughout the season. All of our freshmen have competed for us all year long, while filling a lot of different positions, and have gotten better as the season has progressed.

"What's satisfying is we haven't had to adjust our goal of going to Alabama [the site of the NCAA Championship]. And if we win the Regionals, we go there automatically. The A-10's were very important for us. We really came together in that meet."

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS
J.J. Tolhurst tied for third on the balance beam and took fourth in the floor exercise as the Minutewomen captured their first A-10 gymnastics title Saturday.

Then there are guards Monte Mack from Boston and Winston Smith from New Jersey. With their addition to the UMass lineup, the Minutemen get the depth that they lacked so much this season, although it never really was a problem.

Edgar Padilla and Carmelo Travieso should enter their senior seasons as one of, if not the, best backcourts in the country. And with Clarke (who's confidence rose towards the end of the season), Mack and Smith on the bench to spell the tandem, heavy minutes shouldn't be needed as they were this season.

How good the UMass frontcourt will be is dependent on Camby and if he decides to go to the NBA or not, along with Weeks and if he is able to return next season. With Camby and Weeks, along with Ketner, Babul, Inus Norville and the additions of 6-foot-6 forward Chris Kirkland and 6- foot-9 power forward/center Ajmal Basit, the frontcourt will obviously be solid. But take out Camby and Weeks, and there is a big question mark, as lack of experience becomes a factor.

After the loss to Kentucky in the national semifinals Saturday, Camby said he hadn't thought about going to the NBA. Calipari has said he'll support whatever decision Camby makes.

"For what he's done for this program, the Commonwealth, the University and my family," Calipari said, "all I can be is happy for whatever he decides to do."

Once Camby makes his decision and Weeks decides what he's going to do (he said he would make a decision before September), the outlook for the 1996-97 Minuteman team will be clearer. But with Camby and Weeks, UMass could enter the season as one of the pre-season favorites to win the National Championship.

Unlike Davis and Sabo, Ryne Sandberg had actually given up the game, but he came to realize that he too loved baseball too much to give it up so quickly. Back in the Windy City with the Cubs, Sandberg looks to drive the talented, and over-shadowed Cubs to the playoffs.

Julio Franco, banished to the island paradise of TVs and VCRs last season, has come back to his original team to maybe take a shot at a World Series ring. The former shortstop for the Indians, second baseman for the Rangers and DH for the White Sox is now taking a stab at the first sack at Jacobs Field for defending A.L. Champion Cleveland.

Former Cy Young Award winners, Dwight Gooden and Frank Viola, both dominant in their day, are toiling in the American League East, but in very different situations.

Gooden, back from drug abuse rehab, has earned a spot on the Yankees roster, and is fighting for the fifth slot in the rotation. Viola, on the other hand, is coming back from major surgery and is working his way up from the Blue Jays' Double-A affiliate.

All these players have different circumstances surrounding their falls from grace in the major league baseball world, but the tie that binds these ballplayers together is the fact that they are all still kids inside dreaming for one last chance to hit the series-winning homer or strike out the big slugger with the bases loaded in the bottom of the ninth. These guys love the game, and that's the way it should be.

• Is there another Mickey Mantle in our midst? Can the baseball players of today equal the feats of Babe Ruth, Ted Williams or Ty Cobb?

Who knows? Today's ball players really have no incentive to play long enough to establish career records like the 755 home runs by Hank Aaron or Pete Rose's mark for hits.

At the present, you can put together one good season, become a free agent, get a three-year, $10 million contract and be set for life.

So, do we have men today playing the game for the fun of it, for the smell of the cold hot dogs and warm beer, for the sound the bat makes when you hit the sweet spot? Is there a great player in the major leagues today?

Ken Griffey, Jr., still only 28-years old, is clearly the baseball icon of the '90s. Nike has even nominated him for President. He is arguably the most talented overall player in the past 20 years, and at an age where it's easy to be excitable and over-exuberant, the Kid is remarkably poised and level-headed. If he can play at his prime for another 4-6 years, and for another 8-10 overall, great young outfielders may someday be compared to Griffey rather than the Say Hey Kid.

Matt Williams, Frank Thomas and Mo Vaughn are powerful corner infielders that provoke memories of Jimmie Foxx and Ed Mathews. Vaughn is unique in his colorful manner, but not in his restless passion for playing baseball.

Baseball was in a downward spiral for a couple of years, but the examples of these four throwbacks and many more like them may help resurrect the national pastime.

Fred Hurlbrink, Jr. is a Collegian staff member.

debut of Buddy Bell, who replaced the retired Sparky Anderson.

Lira, who also made the first opening-day start of his career, also became the first native of Venezuela in major-league history to start on opening day.

Eddie Williams hit a two-run homer for the Tigers in the eighth. The first three Tigers singled off Radke, with Travis Fryman's hit driving in Chad Curtis for a 1-0 lead. Detroit loaded the bases with two outs, but Mark Lewis hit into a force to end the inning. Lira also struggled in the first. Minnesota took a 3-1 lead on a run-scoring single by '95 Rookie of the Year Marty Cordova and a two-run single by Hollins.

The Twins led 6-1 by then after a three-run third. Lawton, who probably would have been at Class AAA Salt Lake if Puckett had not gone on the 15-day disabled list over the weekend, drove in two runs with a two-out single with the bases loaded and a full count.

In having such a strong club in only its second season, Newcomb credits both being able to put together the right personnel and assistant coach Dan McAuliffe.

"Dan has done a phenomenal job with team," Newcomb said. "He's been able to work with this team on the things we've needed to improve on. He's been such a huge factor for us."

Currently, junior Vicky Bamond is the squad's leading scorer, with 33 goals thus far.

"Vicky is in 100 percent better shape than she was last year," Kuzara said. "She's really been playing great for us. Also, Mirca Martinez-Cruz has been doing excellent, game in and game out. She's getting the ball where it needs to be. And if the ball is there, so is she."

Newcomb also praised Barbara Hickey for her strength, quickness and quality play at both the offensive and defensive end. Senior goalie Jessica Griffith was also lauded for her continued improvement, along with Cathy Leeburg for her quick hands, game-sense and strong offensive and defensive play.

In the EWPA tournament, UMass downed MIT, 16-6, beat BU, a first-year program, 11-2 and trounced Dartmouth, 15-6. Ironically, the Minutewomen may be looking at their loss to Harvard as the most positive aspect of the weekend.

The closest it had ever come to beating the Crimson was 12 points. On Saturday, they took the Ivy Leaguers to double overtime in a 9-7 loss. This is perhaps the best example of how far the program has come. But Newcomb feels that two weeks will bring an even better game, when the two teams meet again.

"I'm not making any guarantees, but we're going to be giving Harvard a lot of problems in a couple of weeks. Right now we're still learning to play together, trying to move the ball faster and know what to do with it when we get it. But we'll be clicking soon enough."

Women's gym wins first Atlantic 10 title

By Steven Grant
Collegian Staff

What has been the best season ever for the Massachusetts women's gymnastics team continues to get even better. In fact, this past weekend may have marked the highest point in the program's history.

For starters, the Minutewomen won their first ever Atlantic 10 Championship on Saturday, and did so in front of their home crowd. Also, Tara Swartz, only a junior, was named the A-10 Gymnast of the Year, while Denise Johnson earned co-Freshman of the Year Honors. In addition, coach Dave Kuzara was named the A-10 Coach of the Year.

UMass (9-4) can now look forward to the NCAA Northeast Regional on April 13th, and with strong performances, the NCAA Championship at Tuscaloosa, Ala., April 25-27.

"So many positives came out of [this weekend]," Kuzara said. "It's definitely going to help us not only for the rest of the regular season but on into next year, as well."

The Minutewomen finished with a score of 191.925, their best total of the season. George Washington placed second (190.475), Rhode Island third (188.000), and Temple fourth (187.925).

In the vault, Lady Colonial Alexis Hrynko took first place with a 9.900. But the next three spots belonged to UMass. Lianne Laing (9.850), freshman Denise Johnson (9.825) and Swartz (9.800) took second through fourth, respectively.

Swartz showed why she won her trophy, by winning the uneven parallel bars with a score of 9.875. Adrienne Carver (9.725) of Temple and Jaime Shanley (9.600) of URI placed second and third, respectively. Johnson's 9.525 was good enough for fourth place in the event.

On the balance beam, the Minutewomen took three of the first four spots. Laing won the event with a 9.800, while Swartz (9.675) and senior J.J. Tolhurst (9.675) tied for third place. GW's Rose McLaughlin prevented UMass from sweeping the first three spots with a score of 9.750.

"Lianne did the best beam of her life," Kuzara said of his junior.

As for the floor exercise, Hrynko won the event, registering a 9.800. The best mark for UMass was fourth place, Tolhurst's 9.750. Kim Becker and Amy Nelson of URI tied for second with a 9.775.

Much to the satisfaction of everyone in Curry Hicks Cage, Swartz was the all-around winner, finishing with a 39.050.

"Right now, Tara is only a junior, and she already has three A-10 titles," Kuzara said. "And no one ever thought that anyone would come even close to Tammy Marshall's record of five. She has been just outstanding all season long for us.

"The win was a total team effort. That's one of our strengths right now. I'm especially pleased with what Lisa Coyne has done for us.

Possibilities abound for next year's hoop team

By Candice Flemming
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's basketball team has just ended the best season in school history, a season in which it recorded a 35-2 record and advanced to the Final Four for the first time in school history, and the questions have already started.

Will junior Marcus Camby make himself eligible for the NBA draft? How will the Minutemen deal with the losses of co-captains Donta Bright and Dana Dingle? Will Tyrone Weeks, who played with pain in his foot all season, be able to return for his senior season? Will Charlton Clarke, who spent most of his freshman year injured, turn out to be the player everyone was expecting him to be, coming out of St. Raymond's high school?

How about all of the new players coming in, including 6-foot-10 Lari Ketner, who sat out this year due to Proposition 48 requirements, how will their transition to the college level be?

Will the players mesh together as well or have the kind of character this group of Minutemen had in sprinting out to a 26-0 record and No. 1 ranking before suffering its first loss of the season?

"We had a unique group of individuals that we may not assemble again," Massachusetts coach John Calipari said. "It wasn't just about pure talent. It was that they were great kids and they would all step back so that people could step forward... and that's very unusual."

The players coming in are definitely talented, with Mike Babul leading the way. Babul, a 6-foot-6 swingman from North Attleboro, is Calipari's biggest recruit and was a Parade Magazine fourth team All-American. He could come in and start right away, taking either Bright or Dingle's spot.

UMass faces UConn after weekend split

By Chris Stamm
Collegian Staff

As the old saying goes, "It was the best of times, it was the worst of times."

This phrase rang true for the Massachusetts baseball team, as it split two double-headers on Saturday and Sunday with Temple, in Philadelphia.

On Saturday, UMass came out with a vengeance trouncing the Owls 9-4 in the first game, to preface the 16-4 beating it dished out in the second.

"Saturday was a big bright spot," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "We played very well in all categories."

The Minutemen played aggressively in these two, putting a lot of pressure on the defense, hitting in the clutch and stealing bases.

"There are a lot of things you can do, even though you might not get a hit, to help score runs," Stone said, " and we were doing that very well."

Sunday, however, UMass struggled as the Minutemen fell 5-1 in the first game, before being blanked by the Owls 7-1 in the second.

"Unfortunately, it didn't turn out that way on Sunday for a couple factors," Stone said. "Their pitching was better than it was on Saturday, and we hit a lot of pop-ups and flyballs. They're not a better team than us, but they played better than we did on Sunday."

The obvious difference between Saturday and Sunday was hitting.

"We had some situations early in the game, bases loaded, one out, we've got to deliver," Stone said. "Our guys had their bats on their shoulders at the plate, and we have to be aggressive in those situations. We were getting the pitches, we just weren't swinging the bat.

"We could have really taken advantage if we played the way we were capable of playing," Stone said, "It's early and you always want to start out strong in the Atlantic 10. That could have made things very difficult for us."

The Massachusetts baseball team (10-6) returns home to the Earl E. Lorden Field for its home opener today against the Connecticut Huskies (8-11).

After playing the last 16 games on the road, coach Stone is anxious to get the ball rolling in Amherst.

"The UMass-UConn series is something we always look forward to, and they always look forward to," Stone said.

Jason Grabowski (.377) should prove to be a potent offensive threat for the Huskies.

With a .870 slugging percentage, Grabowski has nailed 10 home runs in 19 games. Combined with first baseman Chris Bisson (.354), the Huskies have a formidable offense.

Getting the nod on the mound for UMass is sophomore Scott Barnsby. After pitching 4.2 innings, Barnsby holds a 13.50 ERA. Last year, Barnsby rounded out the season with a 3.02 ERA.

"If they come to play, I feel pretty comfortable," Stone said.

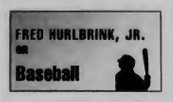
"We worked hard, we're always well prepared and we have good enough talent to beat most people we play."

Today's game is the first of a five game home-stand, as the Minutemen will play two double-headers against Fordham on Saturday and Sunday.

Mets, Cardinals are over-rated

I will shave off all my body hair if both the New York Mets and the St. Louis Cardinals make the National League playoffs this season.

Too many self-proclaimed experts are wetting themselves over the young guns of New York and the revamped lineup of the Cardinals. Granted, these teams are vast improvements over their 1995 counterparts; they both have potential and, in the near future, should make the playoffs, but not this summer.



The Mets' lineup is well-balanced top to bottom, but lacks a proven power threat. If Rico Brogna is for real and Jeff Kent can improve on his power numbers while making the full-season transition to third base, and prodigies Paul Wilson and Jason Isringhausen mature fast enough, the Mets will be a threat to the veteran Braves in the next two years.

Despite popular belief in St. Louis, Tony LaRussa is not God, and his team is just plain not good enough to get into the post-season. The Cards also need improved power from the corners, and they are counting on ageless Gary Gaetti to account for most of that clout.

Ron Gant is a spectacular talent, but I don't see his repaired leg holding out for too much longer. LaRussa's long-time pitching coach, Dave Duncan made former Athletic Dave Stewart a star, he could do the same with Andy Benes, but not in '96.

• Comebacks seem to be all the rage for the summer of '96. The Cincinnati Reds employ two stars of the '80s who want to get back in the lime light and contribute to the success of their franchise. But most of all, they want to play ball.

After a few disappointing injury-plagued seasons with the Dodgers and the Tigers, Eric Davis, once compared to Willie Mays, found himself in spring training fighting to make the Reds' Opening Day roster.

Chris Sabo has also been around the block, scratching and clawing to keep playing, just trying to stay in the batting order. He has played all over the diamond in the past two years — third base, left field, first base, DH — and now he's back in Cincinnati, where he made a name for himself, platooning with Jeff Branson at third base.

Women's water polo improving with EWPA wins

By Steven Grant
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's water polo team is no longer a rookie, and after a successful first season at the varsity level, the Minutewomen are showing no signs of a sophomore jinx, as they have jumped out to an 8-4 start and are ranked No. 17 in the country.

After going 5-3 at the Claremount Tournament in California earlier this season, which coach Bob Newcomb described as "one of the best trips we've ever had," and going 3-1 in this past weekend's EWPA New England North Tourney, the team is confident of things to come, yet realizes it still has some way to go before everything falls into place.

"We're a very strong team," Newcomb said. "Every single player has progressed. Our strengths are team speed and team defense. But we lack a lot of playing time together, and inexperience is a weakness."

Softball steamrolls past LIU

By Leigh Torbin
Collegian Staff

After 22 grueling games against top national competition in Florida, Georgia and Arizona earlier this year, the Massachusetts softball team was looking for a good momentum builder as the Minutewomen played their first games north of the Mason-Dixon line.

Sunday, UMass swept Long Island University 15-2 and 4-0 in a doubleheader played in Brooklyn. The wins improve the Minutewomen to 14-10 on the season as they prepare for a doubleheader today at Vermont.

Senior captain Amy Powell had a career game in the first game of the twin-bill. Powell went 3-for-3 with a pair of home runs in the game, the first two of her career, after 156 career games. This is only the third time in school history that a Minutewomen has hit two homers in a game.

Powell's homers came in consecutive at-bats in the Minutewomen's 15-2 mercy rule drilling of the Lady Blackbirds. In the contest Powell scored three runs and chipped in five RBI to aid the UMass cause, and stole a base. In addition, Powell was errorless in 11 chances at second base.

The second game saw freshman Danielle Henderson continue her hot streak. The freshman won her seventh consecutive decision, her third in a row by shutout. Henderson went the distance for the eighth time in 12 starts, struck out five, and lowered her ERA to 1.65, second only to Liz Wagner's 1.41.

UMass gained an added speed element last year with the arrival of Tracey Osier, who set a school record with 22 stolen bases as a freshman. The entire team has followed Osier's lead this season.

The Minutewomen stole a total of 13 bases on Sunday, nine in the night-cap alone. Osier led the way for UMass by swiping four in the second game, tying the 11-year old school record for steals in a game.

Freshman Amanda Galas currently leads the team with 12.

The Minutewomen have swiped 51 bases this year (on just 57 attempts) and as a team stand just 12 shy of the season record of 63 set last year.

Sophomore Kim Gutridge also shone brightly during the games at LIU. Gutridge went 5-for-7, with three RBI and a pair of runs scored. Gutridge had the game-winning RBI in the second game of the doubleheader, plating Stephanie Mareina with a double.

The seemingly endless road continues today as the Minutewomen play on the shores of Lake Champlain in Burlington, Vt. at 2 p.m. The Catamounts enter today's double-dip with an 8-6 mark and will look to avenge a 7-0, 7-3 sweep at the hands of the Minutewomen last year at Totman Field.

From there UMass will travel to Central Connecticut for a doubleheader on Thursday, and Virginia Tech for two games on Saturday in its Atlantic 10 opener. The home opener for the Minutewomen is April 9 against Hartford.

Hill outduels Clemens as Rangers beat Sox in opener

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — It didn't take Ken Hill long to start earning his big contract with the Texas Rangers.

Hill outdueled Roger Clemens, and the Texas Rangers beat the Boston Red Sox 5-3 Monday in their season opener.

"It was nice going out there not having to worry about being traded or where I was going to go," Hill said. "I just relaxed and pitched my game. I wanted to go the distance but I'm not disappointed it didn't happen."

Craig Worthington, starting because Dean Palmer has an injured hamstring, homered for the Rangers, who drew 40,484 to The Ballpark in Arlington, about 8,000 short of a sellout.

Hill pitched for St. Louis and Cleveland last year, then signed an $8.15 million, two-year deal with Texas. He allowed eight hits in 8 2-3 innings, struck out seven and walked none. After Tim Naehring homered in the ninth, Ed Vosberg finished for the save.

"I wanted to go out there in the ninth," Hill said. "I told (manager) Johnny Oates to come get me if somebody got on."

"I didn't want him to face the tying run," Oates said. "This is why we went out and got Ken Hill. This shows the kind of performance he can produce."

Clemens, 3-1 in seven season openers coming in, allowed four runs and three hits in five innings, struck out five and walked six.

"I was disappointed I got behind hitters," Clemens said. "I expect that to get better. I had a flaw in my delivery, but I expect to iron it out. It felt like I was pitching uphill out there."

Ivan Rodriguez put Texas ahead in the first when he walked and scored on Will Clark's double. Worthington, who had just two homers last year, homered in the second.

"I didn't even know if I was going to make the team until Saturday," Worthington said. "I figured Clemens would try to get ahead of me early so I swung at his first pitch and hit a fastball out. He still has a fastball but it's not as lively as before."

Texas added a pair of unearned runs in the fifth after shortstop John Valentin booted a grounder by Rodriguez. Will Clark walked, Juan Gonzalez hit an RBI double and Worthington followed with a sacrifice fly.

Mo Vaughn's third single of the game drove in a run in the sixth. He added an RBI groundout in the eighth.

Mark McLemore singled home a run in the bottom half off Jeff Suppan.

Twins 8, Tigers 6

Brad Radke and Matt Lawton made sure the Minnesota Twins didn't need Kirby Puckett on opening day.

With vision problems keeping Puckett out of the opening-day lineup for the first time since 1984, Radke struck out a career-high eight and Lawton had two hits and two RBI in Puckett's place as the Twins beat the Detroit Tigers 8-6 Monday.

Winner Radke, making the first opening-day start, gave up five singles in six innings. He was replaced by Pat Mahomes to start the seventh with Minnesota leading 7-1. Dave Stevens worked the ninth for the save, allowing an RBI double to Travis Fryman.

After John Flaherty opened the second with a hit, Radke retired 15 of the last 17 batters he faced. Dave Hollins had two hits, two RBIs and two runs scored in his Minnesota debut before a crowd of 30,195 at the Metrodome.

Loser Felipe Lira lasted just three innings, giving up six runs on eight hits as the Tigers faltered in the managerial

Stewardesses a high-flying job in Japan

TOKYO — She's bright and disciplined, with a flair for languages. She's about to graduate from a top school, eager for a prestigious career.

International business? Law? Diplomacy? No — serving drinks and demonstrating how to use flotation devices.

In Japan, becoming a flight attendant — a "soochoowadesu" — is a dream come true. Tens of thousands of young women line up every year for scarce spots on the cabin crews of the three major Japanese airlines. Those who succeed are the envy of their peers. It's reminiscent of America in the 1960s, when serving food and drink on airplanes had a glamorous popular image. In modern-day Japan, the phenomenon says a lot about opportunities for women and standards of feminine behavior.

"Stewardesses meet the most beautiful ideal of womanhood: intelligent, beautiful and gentle," said Kumi Kaseya, deputy editor of Stewardess Magazine, read every month by 30,000 fans and wannabes.

On U.S. and other foreign airlines, flight attendants often enjoy long careers and are rewarded for flight experience, seniority and knowledge of safety procedures.

Georgia family says church won't marry interracial couple

THOMASVILLE, Ga. (AP) — An all-white church that backed down from an attempt to remove a mixed-race baby from its cemetery is refusing to marry the child's parents or let them join the church, the family said yesterday.

Lila Wireman, the baby's great-grandmother, said deacon Logan Lewis told her the child's parents, Jamie Wireman and Jeffrey "Bubba" Johnson, would not be allowed to wed at Barnetts Creek Baptist Church.

"I told him they wanted to join the church, get married and straighten out their lives," Mrs. Wireman said. "Logan said they're living in sin and their child was born in sin because they were not married."

Jamie Wireman, 18, who is white, and Johnson, 25, who is black, have lived together for more than two years.

Lewis said he had not received a marriage request, but he acknowledged talking to Mrs. Wireman about the couple joining the church.

"I said, 'Mrs. Wireman, I don't think it's the appropriate time for this because I don't think there is any repentance in their heart,'" he said.

The deacon called the new controversy an attempt to persecute the 200-member church.

Blacks make up about 38 percent of the 40,000 residents of Thomas County, along the Florida state line.

Expert speaks on JFK shooting

By Amy Paradysz and Tara MK Connelly
Collegian Staff

William Cheslock, a 30-year John F. Kennedy assassination scholar spoke to University of Massachusetts Professor Stephen Oates' "Kennedys Through Film" class yesterday.

Cheslock's multi-media presentation showed evidence contradicting the single assassin theory which was put forth by 1964's Warren Commission, and supported a conspiracy theory later verified by the 1978 House Select Committee on Assassination that said, "Kennedy was probably a victim of a conspiracy."

Cheslock began with his "hard core, final conclusive evidence that Oswald did not do it alone," then "the medical evidence from both Dallas and Washington," which was further proof of a conspiracy.

Through filmed interviews, slides and verbal commentary, Cheslock outlined the findings that lead him to believe Kennedy's body was not transported directly from the hospital in Dallas to Bethesda in Washington, where the autopsy was done.

"Documents have been classified and declassified and there is no definitive answer," said Cheslock, who said that conspiracy theorists speculate several possible groups or persons behind the assassination. Although Cheslock skimmed over these because they had previously been covered in the class, the suspects include the Mafia (with which Jack Ruby was allegedly connected), the military industrial complex (which was aware Kennedy had plans to withdraw from Vietnam upon his re-election), the segregationists (who opposed the Kennedy Administration's civil rights stance) and, of course, the impassioned communist, Lee Harvey Oswald acting alone. Volunteers share Peace Corps experiences

and Holly Anderson
Collegian Correspondent

Melissa Upton lived like the Filipino villagers when she volunteered for the Peace Corps, until her bamboo hut was blown away by a typhoon.

Upton described her experience in the Philippines at a panel discussion at the University of Massachusetts Campus Center last night. The panel featured six recently returned Peace Corps volunteers. The focus of the discussion was the volunteers' personal experiences in their respective countries.

Ironically, Upton was thankful that her hut blew away.

"That was good, because I moved in with a family," she said. "In a cement house."

Upton specializes in marine fisheries. In the Philippines, she coordinated mariculture projects. Collaborating with local fisherman, she visited sites and worked in the water growing green mussels. She is now working toward her doctorate in wildlife fisheries and conservation, an interest which developed from her Peace Corps experience.

Chris Seremet spent three years in the Solomon Islands and Namibia. In the Solomons, the country housed him in a leaf and stick hut on stilts. Seremet expected his living arrangements would lack Western conveniences.

"I like camping," he said. "I figured I'd just go camping for the next three years."

Seremet said he preferred the leaf and stick hut over the cement house he had in Namibia. He said volunteers must be flexible with their housing expectations.

"It depends on your mind set, too," he said. "If you know what situation you will be in you can get mentally prepared for it, and you won't have a problem."

Ann Hartman taught English in Pakistan and Bulgaria for three years. She was aware of the cultural differences that restricted her as a woman in Eastern Europe.

"Expectations were very different with what I couldn't or I shouldn't do," she said. "In Bulgaria, it seemed like home on the surface but after a while the cultural differences become apparent."

Crile Doscher spent two years teaching English in the Yemen Arab Republic. Doscher left in 1988, before the civil war. He said the Peace Corps' primary concern is the safety of the volunteers. When threatening situations arise, volunteers are pulled out of the dangerous areas.

Doscher discussed the difficulties of representing America in a foreign country.

"Once at a social gathering a Palestinian antagonized me, saying that Israel was the U.S.'s 51st state," he said. "These types of situations are difficult to deal with, especially if you don't agree with the United States government."

Peace Corps recruiter Charles Hamilton said that the Peace Corps is separate from the State Department. Volunteers are required to swear an oath to the Constitution, but not to an ideology or United States policy. However, he said volunteers are ambassadors of the U.S. on an individual level.

Margo Stoddard volunteered for the Peace Corps with a bachelor's degree in French and International Relations. During her three years in the Central African Republic, she worked with agriculture and forestry. She explained how Peace Corps volunteers may not have specific goals.

"People think you go into it for two years and then you know where you are going," she said. "But you won't necessarily have it figured out at the end of two years."

Stoddard's experience influenced her to change her career goals. She is now working towards an advanced degree in wildlife biology.

The Peace Corps is beneficial to those hoping to attend graduate school. Ten years ago, Hamilton applied and was rejected. After six years in the Peace Corps, every program he applied to accepted him and offered financial aid. Graduate school was one of many benefits Hamilton and the other volunteers received from the Peace Corps.

"Certainly the experience itself is the greatest benefit," he said.

To speak with Peace Corps recruiters Charlie Hamilton or Karen Elam, drop by the Peace Corps Office at 12 Draper Hall, UMass, or call 545-2105 or 800-424-8580.

New budget proposal cuts $15 million from UM–Amherst

By Jonathan Liberty
Collegian Staff

The Fiscal Year 1997 House Ways and Means Committee Budget Proposal for Higher Education in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, which was released yesterday, contains a $15 million cut from the budget of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst.

The proposal takes 10 percent off of the total higher education budget, resulting in a $30 million loss for the UMass system, which includes Dartmouth, Lowell, Worcester and Boston, as well as Amherst.

The money from the cut will be used to create a $64 million fund which the Higher Education Coordinating Council (HECC) (which has been changed to the Board of Higher Education) will use to help fund schools which have increased their amount of teaching, improved efficiency, and eliminated redundant programs.

"Although a $64 million dollar fund will be created by the 10 percent cut, there is no guarantee that UMass will receive any money from the fund," said Marc Kenen, director of the Student Center for Education and Research Advocacy (SCERA).

The FY97 Budget proposal also adds a 1 percent increase to Massachusetts higher education.

"Whether or not we receive the 1 percent increase, the budget still leaves without enough money," said SCERA member Jason Vecchio.

A system wide reserve of $11.3 million is included in the budget for collective bargaining. However, the Massachusetts system of higher education needs $7.5 million for Fiscal Year 1996 pay raises plus $10.2 million in new raises which begin on July 1.

Therefore, if the $11.3 million reserve was created to cover all collective bargaining costs they need to be closer to an approximate $30 million for all of higher education, which includes 29 state-wide campuses.

"Although the proposed budget appears to level fund, there will be a definite need to increase the pool in order to get back to true level funding," Vecchio said.

Vecchio spoke with State Rep. Ellen Story (D-Amherst) concerning the state budget and what the repercussions will be at UMass-Amherst.

He said Story said the $11.3 million reserve will not be enough to cover the costs of collective bargaining for all of Public Higher Education.

He also said Story has agreed to create an amendment involving the $11.3 million reserve. SCERA is also reviewing the budget and speaking with administrators and state legislation in order to assist in the amendment. The amendment is due tomorrow.

Members of SCERA will be discussing the budget at their meeting today to decide the best way for the campus to deal effectively with maintaining level funding.

Presently, the University System Board of Trustees formally sets fees for each of the five campuses while HECC set the tuition. However Section 190 of the Budget proposal has given HECC the right to set both the fees and tuition.

Section eight in the budget provides that all sums appropriated in the budget shall be expended in a manner reflecting and encouraging a policy of nondiscrimination and equal opportunity for members of minority groups, women and handicapped persons. It also requires that all entities receiving funds to take steps, consistent with the law, to ensure equal opportunity and affirmative action.

Author, reporter to talk about life as an inmate

By Humphrey brown III
Collegian Staff

Author/reporter Nathan McCall will give a talk entitled "Makes Me Wanna Holler" tonight at 8 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center Auditorium at the University of Massachusetts.

Nathan McCall is the author of the best-selling autobiography Makes Me Wanna Holler, the story of McCall's transformation from gang member to prison inmate to a reporter for the Washington Post.

McCall has been profiled on a number of major media programs and publications, including the "Today Show" and Newsweek due to the success of his ground breaking and shockingly honest tales of past experiences in his life that are outlined in the book.

Makes Me Wanna Holler is a gripping autobiography in which McCall takes a look back on his journey from troubled youth to professional journalist and how complex the issues pressing young black men, and the American system that devalues them, really are.

"The problems among us," McCall wrote, "are more complex than something we can throw jobs, recreation centers, social programs or more policeman at."

McCall explains in his autobiography how young black men will combat the white system that oppresses them by taking on a hard core, rebellious, macho image that eventually leads to violence and self destruction.

McCall said he had the opportunity, while in prison, to change that type of mentality within himself through disciplined reading and thought while talking with jail house philosophers, well versed in Marx and Malcolm X. After his release, he went back to school where he began his journalism career.

The talk is scheduled for 8 p.m. at the Fine Arts Center. Tickets are available at Fine Arts Center box office and are free to undergrad and grad students with valid I.D., $5 general admission.

MIM discusses nature of feminist struggle against patriarchy at UM

By Anna Lotto
Collegian Staff

Representatives of the Maoist Internationalist Movement (MIM) and the Revolutionary Anti-Imperialist League (RAIL) held a lively discussion on the nature of the feminist struggle against patriarchy Monday night in the basement of the Campus Center.

About 25 people attended the groups' presentation, "Rape, sex & patriarchy: The feminist struggle on college campuses," which was led by one representative from each organization. The audience was vocal throughout the talk, expressing both interest and criticism for the views presented.

According to the first speaker, Chris Johnson, a representative of MIM, the purpose of the talk was to "promote and discuss a feminist analysis in the interest of the majority of the world's women" and to "build public opinion for revolutionary feminism."

The talk also focused on local issues such as the University of Massachusetts Escort Service, the nature of the Everywoman's Center, and Anthony's strip bar. MIM was particularly critical of a March 1 rally, organized to protest alleged rapes on campus fraternities, as too narrow in its focus.

"The luxury to focus just on fraternities is a sign of American women's gender privilege," read an article in an April edition of MIM Notes. "By calling on the patriarchy to protect young college women from individual men, these women are legitimizing the patriarchy — reinforcing it rather than tearing it down." The title of the article was, "Does the struggle against rape end at frat row?"

Johnson opened with a reference to "so-called feminism" on college campuses and the popularity of these "pseudo- feminism" groups at places like UMass. These groups ignore the larger aspect of feminism which must concern itself with all the world's women, as opposed to only relatively privileged American women, Johnson said.

Holiday of remembrance begins

By Anna Feder
Collegian Staff

At sundown tonight, the Jewish holiday of Passover will begin. The holiday is a time for Jews to remember their freedom from slavery in Egypt in biblical times.

The holiday lasts seven days in Israel and eight days outside the Jewish Holy Land. The holiday is celebrated by hosting two Passover dinners usually involving family and friends.

Tonight is the first dinner, or seder, which includes the blessings over the wine and representational foods, the telling of the story of Passover and the actual meal. The seder plate is the center piece of the Passover table and the symbolic "offering" of thanks.

The most important part of the seder is the magid, the telling of the departure from Egypt. The Haggadah, the book listing the order of the events connected to the seder, the blessings, and the actual story says "And thou shalt relate to thy child on that day, this is done because of what the Eternal God did for me, when I went forth from Egypt."

The next part of the seder is the meal itself, during which those gathered discuss everything ranging from questions about the various rituals to how their week has been going. The meal is different from other meals in that there is no chametz, which means leavened bread, or grain of any sort. In its place is matzah, unleavened bread, which is thin and cracker–like. It is eaten because when the Jews left Egypt their dough didn't have time to rise so they were forced to bake it into cakes of unleavened bread.

The commandment regarding chametz covers not only its consumption but the possession of it for the entire eight days. All such foods are traditionally sold to a non–Jewish neighbor or friend. Chametz which Jews do not realize they are in possession of is declared "null and void as the dust of the earth" in the search for the chametz that occurred last night. This ritual is symbolic of a more thorough "search" for chametz which is done earlier and is performed by each household.

After dinner comes the hiding of the afikomen. This broken piece of matzah is hidden by the children of the household. An adult, usually a parent, is elected to search for the afikomen and must give the children a ransom if he/she is unable. The seder cannot continue without it, giving the children the upper–hand when the bargaining begins. When they finally agree on a "price" the matzah is recovered and eaten with dessert.

After dessert, those present recite the Birkat HaMazon, the prayer said after meals and Hallel, an additional prayer said on certain holidays. At this time an extra cup is filled and the door is opened for the Prophet Elijah who Jews believe will come in spirit, heralding the redemption of them from their present exile. The seder concludes with the toast "Next year in Jerusalem," a request that next year when Passover is celebrated it will be with the Messiah in Israel.

who was truly involved in a conspiracy, if anyone, Cheslock demonstrated Secret Service involvement.

Shortly after the assassination on Nov. 22, 1963, Dan Rather, the only newsperson to view the Zapruder film of the assassination, said Kennedy's hands went to his neck and then his head went forward.

"I think my seven–year–old nephew could take a look at the film and see that the head went back," Cheslock said.

Rather's interpretation supports the lone assassin theory; Cheslock's interpretation, that the fatal shot came from the right front, supports a conspiracy theory. The media has always supported a single assassin theory, even to this day, according to Cheslock.

A hole in Kennedy's neck measured as 5 mm in Dallas, where 26 medical personnel were present, turned into a 6.5 cm whole in Washington. Personnel at Bethesda claimed there were "little sawmarks on the side of Kennedy's skull," Cheslock said. The president left Dallas wrapped in sheets, lying on a mattress in an expensive bronze casket. He arrived in Bethesda in a body bag in a "pinkish–gray" 60– pound casket. All this was shown through filmed interviews with medical and funeral technicians.

Air Force Two left Dallas a half hour after Air Force One, which contained Lyndon Johnson, Jacqueline Kennedy and her husband's body. Air Force Two flew past Air Force One and landed a half–hour before it. Cheslock said Secret Service agents asked J.C. Price, an official at the hospital in Dallas, whether there was an rear tunnel exit though which Jackie and Lyndon Johnson could exit. There was, but Cheslock showed a slide of Jackie and a film clip of Johnson exiting "in front of hundreds of people."

Aside from the overwhelming medical evidence, Cheslock also pointed out several investigative contradictions made by the Dallas Police Department, the CIA and the FBI.

"In the Warren Report, the eyewitnesses turned into one witness in a matter of hours," Cheslock said. According to further reports the witness, Howard Brennon, who couldn't positively identify Oswald in a line–up, said Oswald looked most similar to the man he saw. In a re–enactment of the scene, Brennon was unable to see a man on the sixth floor of the book depository. "The fact of the matter is that Howard Brennor had some problems," Cheslock said.

Other "problems" include the fact that five Dallas Police officers identified the gun found in the sniper's nest as a 7.65 Mauser, however in the Warren Report it changed overnight to a 6.5 Italian rifle. Two officers, Boon and Weissman wrote affidavits saying a Mauser was found. One officer, Deputy Sheriff Robert Gray, who had received the "Law Enforcement Officer of the Year" award in Dallas, was the only one of the five who kept to his original statement. Gray committed suicide with a rifle a few years after the assassination.

"In the sniper's nest, three shells were found. They were 6.5 mm shells that did not match the rifle planted," Cheslock said. "The shells weren't splattered around like one might expect from a bolt action rifle. They were found in a row, inches apart all facing the wall. They couldn't have been fired by a 7.65 Mauser that the five policemen found."

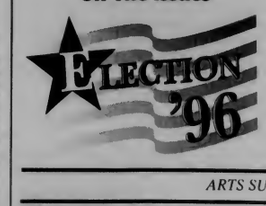
Cheslock said Oswald's assassin, Ruby, was connected with Al Capone. The FBI, according to Cheslock, claimed to have no prior knowledge of Ruby's involvement with the Mafia. "Jack Ruby definitely had Mafia connections," Cheslock said. Before Ruby died of cancer, he wrote a note to his personal prison guard, Al Maddox, claiming that he was framed for the assassination. What he didn't say was who sent him to silence Oswald and who was behind the assassination.

What perhaps is the most shocking of evidence allegedly concealed by the FBI are the results of a paraffin test done on Oswald in Dallas. A paraffin test detects traces of gun powder and nitrates. If Oswald did fire the Italian rifle, then there would have been three times as much gun powder and nitrates on his face, according to Cheslock. The FBI told reporters the test was positive, but kept the actual results classified until a lawsuit brought declassification.

"The results... said that Lee Oswald's face showed no traces of nitrates or gun powder," Cheslock said. "We were lied to." The nitrates that showed up on Oswald's hands could have been caused by carrying boxes of printing paper and carbon ink, which was part of Oswald's job, explained Cheslock.

According to Cheslock, advancement in technology has "made it a very exciting time" for JFK assassination scholars. Much of the information now classified will be public in 2039. Until then Cheslock said, "this research of mine will continue."

On The Issues



WASHINGTON (AP) — And then there were two.

Breaking clear in a contest once crowded and tangled, Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole has secured the Republican presidential nomination and won the right to engage President Clinton in the fall.

Neither man at this point has a comprehensive platform. But what they do have, after Clinton's three years in the White House and Dole's 27 years in the Senate, are records. And since January they've answered questions on a variety of subjects put to them by The Associated Press.

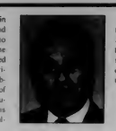
Here are their answers, plus summaries of their words and actions on a variety of issues. Positions may change, and Ross Perot may yet jump in again to mix everything up.

But as of now, this is where they stand and what they've said.

ARTS SUBSIDIES:

Bill Clinton

"The National Endowment for the Arts — in partnership with individuals, corporations and foundations — has brought art and culture to communities large and small throughout the country. The arts provide Americans of varied backgrounds an opportunity to share experiences they otherwise may not have. Federal subsidies for the arts — less than 0.02 percent of the federal budget — help attract tourists, stimulate business, and expand the tax base. This small investment expands the education and cultural base of all Americans."



Bob Dole

"I opposed the establishment of the National Endowment for the Arts in 1965 and I continue to question why the federal government should be actively involved in the culture business. I support the elimination of the NEA."

■ MIM

Johnson defined terms such as feminism, patriarchy, sexuality and gender according to MIM philosophy. After exploring various definitions of the term "rape," Johnson asked, "Why is what is rape to one woman sex to another?" MIM said in its April newsletter that, "as long as there is inequality between men and women, there can be no true consent and all sex will be rape."

Johnson led the audience in an "experiment" in which people voted "yes" or "no" to whether certain situations constituted rape. There were several objections from audience members who felt the examples were too vague, objecting particularly to the case of "two college students. Man asks 'can we have sex?' after making out for a few hours, woman doesn't answer, they have sex."

An anonymous representative from RAIL discussed pornography and how the industry "legitimized subordination against women." She quoted writer Robin Morgan's statement that, "pornography is the theory, rape is the practice," then Necessities/Necesidades statistics that a woman is killed every eight days in Massachusetts from domestic violence, up from one every 22 days in 1990.

Dialogue with the audience increased as Johnson discussed the ignorance of the March 1 rally of larger issues and the paternalistic nature of UMass security. Audience members challenged both of these assertions. One questioner commented that MIM was critical of grassroots efforts such as the March 1 rally when they were in fact "small steps" toward the larger goal of dismantling the patriarchy. Johnson replied that the rally was "progressive but very, very limited."

June Kehoe, a junior English major, asked the woman from RAIL how she upholds the ideas of her group in the face of everyday situations such as walking alone at night or relating with her boyfriend. Kehoe said she was seeking to understand the goals of her organization as they applied to women's lives. The representative said she did not think answering on an individual basis "gets us anywhere."

Discussion between the speakers and the audience continued for over an hour with debate ranging from the benefits of monogamy to what power women really have, both in this country and the Third World.

The talk was sponsored by Friends of RAIL, a Graduate Student Organization (GSO) at the University.

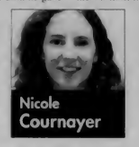
The eyes have it

Hey! Look at me when I'm talking to you." Did your parents ever say that to you? Mine did. I'd kick at the floor and pout and wonder why I had to be looking at them for them to know I was listening. I was much more comfortable staring at the rug or my feet or the wall when I was getting yelled at.

But I've discovered since those days of pathetic temper tantrums that the folks actually hit on something there (besides me, that is). Eye contact, or the lack thereof, plays a significant role in our lives.

My mom always tells the story of how, when I was a wee little babe, I'd stare at everything with big, brown eyes. Apparently, one of the kids that worked for my dad would challenge me to staring contests, and we would sit across the table from each other, eyes wide, until he gave up. So, I guess, as a child I was a starer.



As a self-conscious, confused adolescent, my eyes rotated from the horizontal to the diagonal and I looked at the floor in front of my feet most of the time, basically for fear of actually catching someone's eye and having to talk to her, or even worse, him. Oh, yes. Junior high was a special time for me. Social butterfly? More like a mole, I think. I didn't want to look at any one and I didn't want anyone looking at me.

Around seventh grade, my mom, who repeats this story a lot too, had one of those parent-teacher conferences with my English teacher, who told her that unlike my brother and sister, who looked at their desks most of the time but still knew the answers to any questions she posed to them, she could always tell I was listening because I followed her with my eyes constantly. In class, apparently, I was still a starer.

Of course, this newly acquired knowledge helped me in high school when I'd sit with my eyes fixed on the teacher and my mind somewhere completely different. Later, a professor told me that she always called on the people who stared because they usually weren't listening, only trying to make it seem like they were. She'd figured out my strategy somehow, so I started staring only occasionally in class from then on.

My seventh grade English teacher's comment to my mom has always stuck in my head, though, and I learned to equate eye contact with a positive, appreciative response from people.

At around the same time, we had a class in "assertiveness training" where eye contact was considered quite important. If you look at the ground, you are acting passively and are not letting the people who are talking know you're listening to them, thereby creating frustration and aggression in them. (For example, the parent situation—"Look at me when I'm talking to you!")

If someone is telling you something, chances are it's fairly important to him or her that you listen to it and acknowledge it in some way. No one likes to be ignored, and eye contact is a way to acknowledge that you are indeed listening.

Later in life, keeping this advice in mind, I've always tried to maintain eye contact with whoever is speaking to me. At first, it was difficult to make myself look someone directly in the eye for any significant length of time when my eyes constantly wanted to look downward. But eventually, as my confidence grew and I thought of myself as equal to the person I was conversing with, eye contact became far more comfortable.

Now, I don't even have to think about looking someone in the eye. It's common courtesy to me, but it was something I had to work at and learn how to do.

When I talk to people now who don't look at me for at least part of the conversation, I get highly annoyed because I can't tell whether or not they're listening to me. They seem rude. As soon as I get this impression, I stop talking to them because I feel like they're not interested at all in what I have to say. I may as well save my breath for someone who gives a damn.

I admit, there are days when I walk through the campus center with my eyes glued to the floor because I just don't want to talk to anyone, but I realize that this posture is not a very friendly one and I'm working on breaking myself of the habit.

It's a confidence thing to walk with your head up and eyes forward, but it's a gesture of politeness and a sign of respect when you make it a point to look someone in the eye when they're talking to you. The difference between looking somewhere else and making eye contact is kind of like the difference between a wimpy, half-hearted, barely touching fingertips handshake and a firm, sincere grip, complete with smile.

Astrological ignorance

I do not believe that astrology is valid. Rather, I know that it is valid. Belief is a weak term. It implies unquestioning acceptance of things that a person is unable or unwilling to verify. It is not necessary to believe in astrology because its validity can be empirically proven. For statistical evidence, see C.G. Jung's writings about synchronicity. For a more direct, personal approach, have your birth chart cast.

In order to cast a birth chart, or horoscope, it is necessary to know the longitude and latitude of the birth-place, as well as the exact time of birth. Obviously, this procedure is more involved than just reading a popular horoscope such as those found in mainstream newspapers. Popular horoscopes are a joke. They have little or no value because they are simply too general.

Astrology is a popular target of criticism and ridicule on the part of shallow minds. For example, I have had three professors who launched attacks on astrology in class for no apparent reason. This is unfortunate. Those who have investigated astrology know that it is valid. These professors have obviously not taken the time to investigate astrology, yet feel free to criticize it nonetheless. Professors make a dangerous error through such irresponsible running of the mouth.

We are expected to look up to professors for their wisdom. Yet if they insist on spouting lies and deceit, they are abusing their positions. By doing this, they are indoctrinating their students into their own narrow, ignorant views. Supposedly our professors possess wisdom, but when no less than three of my professors have openly insulted astrology, I wonder if our criteria for evaluating wisdom has not become hopelessly wayward. These professors would undoubtedly like to think of themselves as objective, scientific fellows, but their closed-minded dismissal of astrology betrays their irrational prejudices.

Why are our professors, our supposed role-models and leaders, so ignorant about astrology? Probably because the concept of astrology taxes their dogmatic conceptions of the world to a greater extent than they can handle. In other words, they are unable to sufficiently expand their consciousness. This is the general trend in world history. For example, prior to the Copernican revolution, we had a less informed view of our solar system.

Now we have the luxury of looking back and marveling at how deluded our ancestors were. I suspect that in 100 years humans will look back at the 20th century and wonder how we could have been as ignorant as we are about the universe. This is not meant as an insult to us. Rather, it is simply to acknowledge that human consciousness is constantly changing, and we never have all the answers.

For example, we are still baffled by infinity, and do not even completely understand gravity. We can take consolation in noting that presumably none of our ancestors understood these things either. But in the case of astrology, we simply have no excuse for our ignorance.

Astrology is the oldest form of science, and has evolved over the course of human history. In its current form, it is a complex, dynamic system which can provide more meaning and explanation of earthly events than any other empirically verifiable system.

Why then do we ignore such a valuable tool? Because of ignorance about its true nature. Most people never investigate astrology past the level of the horoscopes in popular newspapers, but these horoscopes are not real astrology. Rather, they are a compromised, bastardized product tailored towards our shallow culture.

We were born into a materialistic culture which has trouble acknowledging anything that cannot be examined in a test tube. When I first heard about astrology, I was so skeptical that I set out to disprove it. I only succeeded in proving its validity. We tend to be uncomfortable about things we do not understand. Astrology boggles the minds of even its most dedicated practitioners. It frustrates us to not be able to explain how astrology works. But through wrestling with this mystery we expand our consciousness, and this type of growth seems to be why we are on the Earth.

MIKE, I JUST DON'T SEE ANYWAY OUT OF THIS! I'VE GOT A RESPONSIBILITY TO THE STOCKHOLDERS!
WILL YOU LISTEN TO YOURSELF!

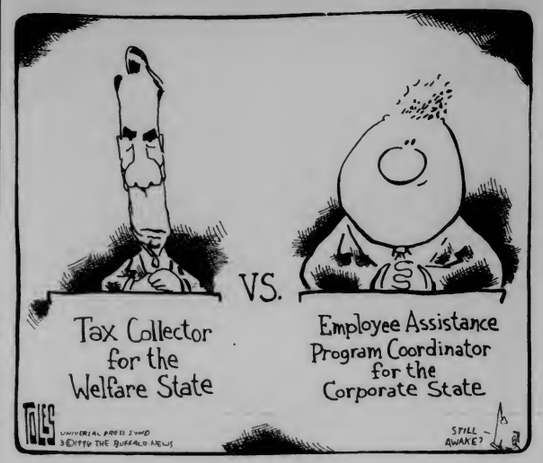
BUT MIKE— YOU'RE ONE OF THEM.
OH...RIGHT. WELL, HOW BAD IS IT?

Opinion/Editorial



Forever young

I have come to the conclusion that age is relative, not only visually, but numerically as well. I also believe that age denial is definitely a gender thing. As women get older they are trained almost from birth to deny their age.

When my Nana died, no one knew how old she was. She never told anyone her age and she hated to be photographed. She once cut out her passport picture and almost got detained by German officials because of it. When my mother and her brothers were trying to figure out her age they realized that the date that she gave them made her five years younger than her sister. Problem. She was born at least six years before her sister. They finally got hold of her birth certificate and realized she was 99 years old.

My mother inherited the same "denial gene." She married rather late in life (at 40) and ended up having my sister at 42. However, whenever she had a birthday she was always turning 35 — every year, for the past six or seven years. The ruse was up when we learned how to read and my brother snuck a peak at her driver's license. She said that it was a misprint, but we knew that she was born the same year as my Dad who was actually seven months younger.

I just turned 22-years-old and have come to conclusion that I will never have to lie about my age simply because no one ever believes it. When I was in Florida this past Spring Break, I reached an all time low at 14. Actually, when I was at my uncle's funeral a friend of my mother's clocked me in at 13, but I think she wasn't all there (if you catch my drift).

I get carded for lottery tickets, cigarettes and alcohol. I was actually carded three times at a bar and held up in line at Pearl Street for 15 minutes while the door man tried to scratch off the hologram, convinced it was a fake. I always carry four forms of ID just in case, and even then it's a hassle.

Maybe it's an Asian thing and maybe the only sign that you're "old enough" in this country is if you're five feet tall with a big chest and lots of makeup. But even with heels and lipstick, I just come off looking like someone who got into Mommy's cosmetic case. I do not know how many times I have been at a store and asked, "Excuse me can I help you? Is your Mom around?" or told, "You know, you're sooo tiny. Just like a little peanut!" Uh, okay. And you're really big — just like a walrus.

Everyone says that when I get older I will appreciate it. I will be 50 and may look like I've broken 20. But for now, I want to walk into Dairy Mart and be able to buy a Silver and Gold without having to dig into my pocket for the license. I want to be able to go to a R-rated film and not have the woman selling me the ticket look out the window to see if my Mom is waving "okay" from the car.

My friend Matt says it's a lot worse for guys. Who likes to date short men that look 12? What can a woman possibly see in a man that doesn't look old enough to shave, let alone hold a steady job and dabble in the stock market?

(Let me tell you, it sucks! — Matt)

See, straight from the horse's mouth. Thanks, Matt.

As I was saying, aside from the freaks of nature on the cover of Vogue and Allure ("Hi, I'm Nikki Taylor, I am a millionaire, I have twin sons, I've traveled all around the world, oh, and did I mention I'm only 20?"), most women in college are younger than I are, share similar stories.

In fact, I bet that if you got a group of some of us together we could successfully organize a field trip to the local petting zoo and all get in half-price. After that we could get some complimentary balloons and then drive over to MacDonald's where we could get Happy Meals. And all this fun for under $10.

But it does get tiring when you can only order the Happy Meal so many times before you realize the only thing you really want is the extra-value meal with super-sized fries and soda, but you can't order it because no one thinks you can finish it because you're just so damn tiny. Well, nice things come in small packages, and maybe I can become the poster girl for Dick Clark Youth Serum and host "Star Search."

Mullins lacked needed security

To the editor:

I am writing to express my disappointment in the handling of the events on the evening of the televised UMass/ Kentucky game at the Mullins Center on Saturday night. I lined up at 4 p.m. to be allowed in early and was one of the first in line. There were no visible security personnel or police. Why was crowd supervision not begun earlier? Why were there not guards and police outside earlier to ensure that the lines were kept orderly as of the first arrivals?

Once the doors were opened, I became subjected to many injuries. I am only 5-feet, 5-inches and 110 pounds; not a very able-bodied person in size by any standards. I was pushed to the ground in the entranceway and have scrapes and a bruise from the door jam I hit on the way to the ground. I was being pushed from behind by the throngs of people and couldn't catch myself. When inside, while getting a T-shirt, myself and others were pinned to the table. I was pushed face down and no one would stop pushing to let me out. Moving sideways to the edge of the table, someone grabbed the sleeve of my jacket and threw me back off the table.

Not expecting to be moved so abruptly, I lost my balance and fell to the floor. I was screaming as loud as I could for someone to help me up, but I was stepped on and kicked until I grabbed the leg of a police officer and he put his hand down to help me up. No one would stop pushing long enough to hear or help me.

I have bruises and scratches on my arms, legs, hand and hip from this incident which could have been prevented if security had planned ahead as well as the rest of the campus had for this night. Looking back to the first ever Midnight Madness at the Mullins Center, you will see that this is not the first time for an incident of this type. This raises the question of why it had to happen again and why they were not prepared.

As students, we have paid to ensure our safety and security on this campus. I'm very disappointed with the lack of security and the injuries I received. I feel that I, as well as other students that received injuries, are entitled to an apology for the miscomings of the staff that are employed to prevent this type of incident.

Congrats to the team

To the editor:

Saturday evening, I sat in the Mullins Center along with 5000 odd other UMass fans and helped cheer our team on. As a senior, I am all but heart and foot ready to leave this campus in May. At this stage, very little can bring my attention back to Amherst. However it is with some dismay that I felt some of the undercurrents around campus after Saturday's loss. Yes, our team did lose. However their achievement cannot have failed to leave each of us with an indelible feeling of pride. If I just may remind you of our team's progress over the past couple of years, who would have thought that we would now have a team in the position ours is?

Many of you may not have paid close attention to basketball over the year. If this is the case, ignore our team's sterling record and look only at Saturday's game. I don't think I have ever seen a team so tightly hold on and refuse to give up. That took a lot of heart, and I want to give each member of the team my most heartfelt congratulations. Though you lost, you are still number one.

Excerpts from Farrakhan

The following are excerpts from Minister Louis Farrakhan's speech for the National Newspaper Publisher's Association, where he was awarded the honor of Newsmaker of the Year.

Minister Louis Farrakhan

In the name of Allah, the beneficent the merciful, we give Him praise and thanks for all of His prophets... and the guidance that he brings to the human community... I greet all of you with the greeting words of peace, we say it in the Arabic language: As-Salaan Alleikum...

For me, to have done what I was blessed to do, putting on my body... such extreme strains to visit 18 countries in 38 days, to meet with 16 heads of state and government, to speak to hundreds of millions of people, I was received as a king, better than any black man that has ever lived in America...

Many of you in this audience, who have lived a few years, know that prior to the crucifiction of every one of our great leaders, the media had to castigate them and falsely accuse them.

W.E.B. Du Bois, one of the most brilliant that we have produced, because he became international, because he dared to challenge racism in his magnificent writings, they took his passport, he died in Ghana, developing the history of our people, but he suffered rejection from you, whom he loved, whom he worked for, whom he lived for, whom he died for. His own people disowned him, because the white media said he was not a good person.

Martin Luther King and Malcolm X. When Malcolm became an international man, went to Africa, tried to speak to the Organization of African Unity, tried to bring the case of black people before the United Nations, because he felt it wasn't a civil rights struggle, it was a human rights struggle. Oh it's so easy to put his picture on your wall today, but when the brother spoke on the streets of Harlem, many who would praise him today, would sneak on the other side of the street, because Malcolm was just too controversial. But how easy it is to put dead men on your wall, and deny living men, who have character and courage.

Martin Luther King was a beautiful human being, to the white establishment. As long as he dealt with Negro business, integrate a toilet, fight for our right to be buried beside white folk, help us, to sit down in a diner, and to bed down in the finer hotels in America, help us doctor, give us the right to vote. That brilliant human being, that man of great moral strength and courage, became an enemy to those in power, when he made an innocuous sounding speech 'I have a Dream.' But to those who saw that dream as a nightmare, when my little black boy, little black girls, Catholics, and Protestants and Jews and what not can live together in peace, somebody didn't like that. And so the next day at the field office of the FBI, a memo was sent to J. Edgar Hoover, that this man is the most dangerous Negro in America.

And when the good doctor decided against the war in Vietnam, and decided to stand for a principle that America could not fight the war on poverty, and then spend untold billions of dollars bombing people in rice peddies in Vietnam. And today, you have peace with Vietnam, huh? You go there now and you have trade opportunities. But when a man of principles said it was wrong to kill. And when Mohammed Ali stood up and said, "Them Viet-Cong ain't never called me nigger." Took his title, but Martin Luther King had done a grave disservice, because he dared to enter the international field, and interfere with what is called America's foreign policy objectives, and therefore Martin Luther King, Malcolm X, and all those who move in that arena, had to be silences, but first you had to be made to abandon him.

Now you go before congress to get a resolution based on press reports? The Justice Department sends me newspapers clippings as their basis for questioning me? What kind of country is this? What kind of intelligence is this? If you have something then bring it, if you have nothing, then shut up...

Now let me just say a few words about the motive. Why do you write like this? He's grubbing for money... As though having debt is a crime, well then you should write about your country. Five trillion dollars in debt, who are you grubbing for?

Farrakhan is a traitor, he went to Libya, and they shot down an American plane with American people on board... like you really care about the lives of the people on Pan Am 103. We're human beings, we pein at the loss of those lives... But America acts as though this just happens to Americans.

Was a Libyan jet shot down by Israel?... Was an Iranian jet shot down by Americans? With 290 persons aboard, and according to what the Iranians said to us, America has never apologized, nor offered compensation... So are the Iranian lives less valuable than the American lives? Are the Libyan lives less valuable then the American lives? Are Israeli lives lost, more valuable than all human beings on the earth?

If you are so convinced, that you have the truth that Kadafy and Libya did do it, let's bring the truth out. But don't use the media to try Libya in the media so that 87 percent of the American people, when there was an attack on Kadafy, went along with it and said "hooray."

You don't kill the heads of state of other nations with whom you disagree. You've never tried that with Russia, you never tried that on China, but you're so cowardly, you pick on little nations, bringing out your stealth bomber on Noreiga in Panama, killing innocent people down there, and lying to the American people, saying that you did not kill a whole host of people...

You live in America, and that is a great blessing, because you've never suffered one city to be bombed. Only we, the blacks in America have experienced bombing, in Oklahoma and in Philadelphia...

Because you don't like me, you sanction those who follow me... well then, if Kadafy wants to grant a billion dollars, for us to build homes, because I certainly won't buy guns, you know my history, and you know the history of the Nation of Islam, we don't terrorized, we set up schools, universities, factories. Isn't this what black folk need? Send the money Kadafy!...

We were only in Baghdad 27 hours, and we had a private meeting with Saddam Hussein... We met with the Ministry of Health, we met with the Ministry of Information, we spoke to the nation, but the thing that touched us the most we went to the children's hospital... We saw the babies who are suffering under sanctions. The World Health Organization knows this, the United Nations knows this, over 560,000 children have died in Iraq since the war...

Mainurition, throughout Iraq, people dying on operating tables, and the people who are being operated on, they have no anesthesia... Whether Saddam Hussein is right or wrong, why should the children die?... you have a slogan, "Save the Children," and 500,000 of them dead in Iraq... The mothers are bringing forth their babies prematurely because of malnutrition... They've got to put two in an incubator.

You've got to go and see, but of course, there's an embargo, you can't go. I can, and the reason why I can go is not because I am a defiant negro, I am a human being, and I am not just an American citizen, I am a world citizen, you can't limit me to the continental United States of America. I'm not just you, you didn't take me from just you. You brought me from Africa, why shouldn't I be concerned with what you doing in Africa?...

I conclude saying, black brothers and sisters stop using the language, minority. Never again should you use that in reference to yourself. You are only a minority if you limit yourself to America, but when you see yourself as an international people, then you outnumber the oppressor 11 to one, you are the majority people on this earth, and you ought to start acting like the majority...

Lets get busy. Lets stop fighting each other. And if they say things about me, don't believe it,... question me, and then if I'm wrong, I'm your brother, you correct me,... but don't go along with the enemy, whom you know wants to separate me from you, so that they can destroy me and then 30 years from now, they'll say, "You know that guy Farrakhan, he was an all right guy, lets name an alley after him." Thank you for listening, and may God bless you as I greet you in peace. As-Salem Alleikum.

Devastation arises from sanctions

By Lisa Chiu
Collegian Staff

Last Monday, the World Health Organization said health conditions in Iraq are deteriorating at an alarming rate. WHO also said that during the period under U.N. sanction, health standards have been set back 50 years.

University of Massachusetts professor of nutrition, Professor Peter Pellet, was the team leader of five individuals who went to Iraq on a UN/FAO mission from late July to early September 1995.

Pellet said that he was very disturbed at the situation in Iraq because of the lack of concern by western governments and particularly the United States. Pellet said, "We have great fuss when there's a single dissident somewhere... that is arrested... and we are killing children in Iraq through the sanctions... and no one wants to know about it... It just wants to be covered up."

According to Pellet, the key feature of the sanctions, which were given by the U.N. since 1990, is the prohibition of selling Iraqi oil on the open market.

He said that there is very little availability of food for Iraq, because of the lack of foreign exchange and the reduction in agricultural production inside the country. This combined with the extreme degree of inflation that has occurred in Iraq, making prices five to 10 thousand times what they were in 1990, makes getting food and medicine extremely difficult. The majority of the country does not have enough money to buy food, Pellet said.

The professor said that the government of Iraq does have an effective food rationing system. These rations are provided virtually free of cost. Prices are based on 1990 and not 1996 prices. These rations provide 1,000 calories per person, per day, however it is not nutritionally balanced, consisting of flour, oil and sugar, said Pellet.

COURTESY PROFESSOR PETER PELLET
A malnourished child in Iraq. W.H.O. said that over 567,000 children have died in Iraq since 1991.

The government covers the differences in price, making it a tremendous drain on the government's finances. This in part, is the cause of the tremendous rate of inflation in Iraq.

Pellet confirmed WHO's statement. While in Iraq, he said he saw severe malnutrition in the hospitals, and weighed and measured undernourished children in households. After comparing them to international standards, they found that the children were only a fraction of the size then should have been. He said that this was an indication of severe malnutrition.

Pellet said, "I saw what is termed classical malnutrition, there's swollen limbs... there's a child looking like a skeleton almost... So, I can confirm the malnutrition, we also can confirm the estimates of infant mortality."

WHO reported that 560,000 Iraqi children have died since 1991.

Pellet said Iraq's health care system has completely collapsed. Prior to the war Iraq was almost like a First World country in terms of health care. "Whatever complaints one has about Saddam Hussein, he did put in a very good heath care system throughout the country," Pellet said.

He said that even medical journals are practically impossible to get due to cost. Pellet said, "So, the country is being intellectually cut off as well, it seems in so many ways, almost vindictive."

The professor spoke about what he called a bizarre situation in Iraq, in which the United Nations, instigated by the United States, is imposing sanctions and simultaneously, U.N. bodies like UNICEF and WHO are trying to alleviate the situation which are imposed by the sanctions.

He said that the real purpose of the sanctions is to remove Saddam Hussein. He said removal of weapons is only a nominal purpose. He said, "As soon as they do one thing, [the U.N.] would say, well this hasn't happened, and that hasn't happened, and on and on it goes."

Pellet said, "We met with the Minister of health... I said to him there's actually very little that I'm going to tell you that you don't already know." He said, that's right, but if I tell the world they won't believe me, if you tell the world they will."

The United States threatens and China laughs

The United States is once again trying to intervene in an internal Chinese dispute, apparently hoping to use international tension to elevate the importance of a regional election in a renegade province by sailing a large naval armada through the Straits of Taiwan.

But, while Clinton's latest military adventure may reflect traditional American gun boat diplomacy and arrogance in Asia, it also serves as yet another confirmation of the growing impotence of an American empire in decline.

Hussein Ibish

Just as in the case of American hysteria about North Korea's supposed nuclear weapons program," U.S. blustering, posturing, and sabre-rattling has left everyone in East Asia distinctly unimpressed and quite unmoved.

In this case, the traditional silliness of the American posture on Taiwan's relationship with the rest of China only underscores how little interest is to take United States views on this question seriously. After all, for decades the United States progressively insisted that its puppet regime in that small island was the sovereign government of China.

After years of absurd obscurantism, but not before several experiences on the battlefields of Korea and Vietnam, Washington bowed before the power of Beijing and recognized reality of its sovereignty in China.

The division between Taiwan and the other Chinese provinces is the result of an earlier chapter in American intervention in Chinese affairs. The United States insisted on supporting the fascist government of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek, which had lost all credibility in China due to its incompetence, corruption, and servility to the West.

Above all, though, Chiang's treacherous, anti-national, and unpatriotic attitudes made him fantastically unpopular. In 1927, Chiang had seized control of China by betraying and massacring the Communists, his nominal allies in the struggle to unify the nation. With the backing of the United States, he continued to pursue his war against the Communists in spite of the Japanese invasion in 1931, and refused countless calls from the Communists and the people to put differences aside to fight the foreign invaders.

Only when Chiang was taken hostage by his own mutinous generals did he agree to make alliances with his fellow Chinese to resist Japanese assault.

After 1945, Chiang's anti-national tendencies rose once again to the fore, exemplified by his American-inspired use of captured Japanese troops against his own people. The United States used this same abhorrent tactic in Korea and Vietnam as well. As Truman put it at the time, "It was perfectly clear to us that if we told the Japanese to lay down their arms immediately and march to the seaboard, the entire country would be taken over by the Communists. We therefore had to take the unusual step of using the enemy as a garrison." Such was the alliance bolstering Chiang Kai-shek.

Inevitably, his forces were routed in short order and fell back on the island of Taiwan, having prepared the locals for their rule with a massacre of some 20,000. There, the United States navy blocked the unification of China under its new, independent communist government, and sheltered Chiang.

Furthermore, the United States promoted the ludicrous fiction that this despised proxy in Taiwan was the legitimate government of all of China. This intervention created the renegade province status that Taiwan continues to hold. At no time did any of the parties, China, Taiwan or the United States, claim that Taiwan was not a part of a single China.

Recently, though, some elements in Taiwan have been expressing independence-minded perspectives. While China clearly does not anticipate any need to forcibly assert its authority in Taiwan, it cannot accept any such secession.

The reason for the recent Chinese military maneuvers is, of course, to remind the world that Taiwan will always be a part of China, regional elections notwithstanding. The American military posturing is as wrong-minded and futile as Defense Secretary William Perry's childish "reminder" to the Chinese that "We have the best damn navy in the world." Just another paper tiger, fluttering in the wind.

Fernandez speaks on independence

Boricuas Unidos, the University of Massachusetts Puerto Rican Student Organization, held its second Puerto Rican Cultural Night last Saturday evening.

The event began by honoring members of their Registered Students Organization, for contributions made to Boricuas Unidos. Among the honorees were Celinnette Baez, Jenny Balbuena, Malwin Davila, William Davila, Nicholas Estrada, Jacquelyn Léon, Alberto Morales, Rosa Rodriguez, Nathalie E. Valcarcel and Nelson Acosta and Martin Espada.

Dr. Ronald Fernandez gave the keynote address after the awards presentation. Fernandez is a Professor of sociology at Central Connecticut State University in New Britain, Conn. He is the leading English-writing authority English on Puerto Rican colonialism and the past and present independence movement In Puerto Rico.

Fernandez began by talking about the Fuerzas Armadas De Liberación Nacional (FALN). He said that many people see the FALN as fanatics. According to Fernandez, Americans seen these Individuals, who are willing to go to jail and die for what they believe in, as fanatics, even though Nathan Hale, who said, "I have but one life to give for my country," is celebrated as an American hero.

Fernandez said, "What I'm asking you to do when we begin tonight is don't get caught up, please, in historical hypocrisy. The issue tonight is who is the criminal and who is the revolutionary."

He linked the present freedom fighters to historical revolutionaries of Puerto Rico. Fernandez said, "These people are open revolutionaries."

Fernandez spoke about research he had done at the Nixon Library. He found documents which quoted Sen.

Jackson in 1974, as saying that Puerto Rico became a part of the United States by an act of conquest. According to Fernandez, Jackson also said that Puerto Rico couldn't become independent even if the people voted for it.

In the same year that Jackson said these words, the FALN committed their first act of defiance, said Fernandez. He said, "The [currently imprisoned members of the FALN] acted because they recognized the truth, not only of colonialism by the United States, but the fact that it was criminal behavior."

Fernandez spoke further about what he called "immoral milestones" or cumulative crimes against the Puerto Ricans in United States history.

Fernandez said, "How do you get a situation in which 80,000 [Puerto Ricans] are in Chicago, or which 700,000 are in New York? For Oscar and the other people in this particular movement, they come back to colonialism, because colonialism is the core explanation for the Puerto Rican diaspora."

ELIZABETH BROWN / COLLEGIAN
Professor Ronald Fernandez, speaks at Puerto Rican Cultural Night.

He urged people to get involved in helping to free the prisoners, because according to Fernandez, freeing the prisoners is the first step to the decolonization of the Puerto Rican people. He said that people need to create a crisis by using all means possible such as marches, speeches, non- violent disobedience and boycotts to get the world to focus its attention on Puerto Rico.

Fernandez concluded by saying that there should be three things expressed in this protest. One, that Puerto Rico was, and is, a colony of the United States; two, that the United States has 'plenary' or absolute power over the people of Puerto Rico; and three, by natural law, Puerto Rico has only one owner, the Puerto Rican people.

Following Fernandez's speech, UMass student Jaime Flores read some of her poetry. The event ended with a live band and dancing.

Hardcore's new molecules talk

By Adam Dlugacz
Collegian Staff

The hardcore scene used to be about a more then just a style — it used to be about a message. Today all you have to do is wear the right clothes, have a lot of tattoos and piercings and know how to kick box to be in the scene. However, there are still a few bands that know hardcore is much more than that.

H2O played their first show on Dec. 28th, 1995. Consisting of Toby Mohr on vocals, Todd Mohr on guitar, Rusty on guitar, Eric on bass and Todd Franklin on drums, they quickly rose to the top of the New York hardcore scene. They most recently exhibited their melodic, D.C.– inspired hardcore at Pearl Street last Sunday night. After the show the Collegian had an opportunity to converse with front man Toby Mohr.

According to Mohr, he began going to hardcore shows in 1983 when his older brothers used to sneak him out of the house. Since then he has made hardcore his life. Looking back on the old scene, Mohr said, "It used to be about the music and the message. It was a way to get your aggressions out from high school. A place to sing along to lyrics you couldn't hear on the radio. It was a dumping ground for all people that weren't accepted, it was like being in a family."

Mohr has also been straight edge his whole life. Though no one else in H2O is straight edge, Mohr tends to dislike bands who are militant about the edge.

"Straight edge is a personal decision, it's not a movement, it's a lifestyle. Everyone has their own lifestyle, some people like to drink, some don't, it's a choice for you. It makes me different. I don't like these kids that get into straight edge to alienate other people, it's just another form of racism," said Mohr. "It's not about what you eat, drink, or smoke, it's what is in your heart."

Finally, Mohr discussed the effects of major labels on hardcore and all the new kids who discovered moshing through MTV.

"If a hardcore band wants to go to a major label to get their message to a wider audience it's okay. Sick Of It All are on a major label and they haven't changed in 10 years. If someone's going to pay me to sing, that's okay cause then I can stay on the road and let a wider variety of kids know what hardcore and straight edge are about."

Mohr is critical of some aspects of the music scene, especially moshing.

"Kids today think it started at Woodstock or Lollapalooza. It's the idiots who don't know the roots. They should look at the roots and where it came from, not just thinking that Green Day started it. It's up to the hardcore kids from the scene to be united and school these new kids and let them know what it's about. It's not what's on MTV, it's a lifestyle, it's singing along to the music you believe in. It's up to you guys, you have the roots to teach the new kids. Then it'll be more fun at shows," he said.

Mohr summed things up by saying,

"We want guys, girls, little kids, unity, the spirit, and fun of it — a big family thing. It's not about how you dress, it's what is in your heart and in your mind."

So far H2O only have a 7-inch on Equal Vision Records but an 11-song CD is to be released on Blackout Records on May 14th.

Yiddish music revives Northampton

KLEZAMIR
The Iron Horse
Mar. 31

NORTHAMPTON — The revival of Yiddish music is over and a new generation is writing and singing better than in its hay day. Last Sunday night the band Klezamir took the floor at the Iron Horse Music Hall with passionate fervor, leaving the audience mesmerized.

The band, which was started in 1987 on the University of Massachusetts campus, includes Rhoda Benard, Amy Rose, Jim Armenti, Neil Zagorian and Jim Blumenthal. Benard lives in Boston while the other members reside in Western Massachusetts. Their usual gigs include local weddings and Bar Mitzvahs.

The objective of the concert, which was sponsored by Congregation B'nai Israel, Smith/Amherst Hillel, Temple Israel, UMass Hillel House, Jewish Community of Amherst and WSRI, was to raise funds for the Western Massachusetts Food Bank.

"Food Bank grows food for people who are hungry" said Food Bank Farmer Michael Doctor. "We depend on people like you for our funding." The idea for the fund-raiser came from the founder of the band, Rose, who is a share holder in the food bank.

The room was dimly lit by the candles that adorned the tabletops. An awed silence prevailed as the crowd waited anxiously for the band to take stage. Klezamir strode on stage and dove into their first song "Araber tants," which means Arabic Dance, from their new CD Klezamir Cooks for Tante Barbara.

Included in the set were several other songs from Klezamir Cooks as well as older favorites requested by the audience. The band took the time to tell the stories behind each of the songs. The subject of these songs reflected the playfulness and humor of the band. One such song "Di Mashke (whiskey)" is about the importance of whiskey in an individual's life. Another song that was played, "Chicken," is an account of the life of these land fowl.

The band also played two new songs that they had been working on that weren't yet released. The audience expressed their overwhelming approval by clapping and dancing while members from the band ventured out into the crowd. They performed for nearly two hours stopping only for a 15 minute break in between sets.

During the break, the band members took the time to autograph the albums they were selling and to talk with their fans. The event was a great success, both raising money for a worthwhile cause and injecting the audience with a dose of witty Yiddish folk rock.

Coen brothers' latest a masterpiece

By Justin Daniel Smith

FARGO
Directed by Joel Coen
with Frances McDormand, William H. Macy, Steve Buscemi
Playing at Academy of Music

Fargo is the quintessential Coen brothers' movie. Those who are familiar with them either love them for their dark, often sarcastic look at humankind or hate them for their film-school geek, self-absorbed aestheticism — but the latter have not seen Fargo.

For the last 12 years the Brothers Coen have been the most consistent force in filmmaking. In the past they have tackled such genres as comedy (Raising Arizona), film noir (Miller's Crossing), mystery (Blood Simple) and bizarre David Lynch-like experimentation (Barton Fink).

With Fargo they meshed all of the themes of their past films (sans the big budgeted but highly under-rated flop The Hudsucker Proxy) into a twisted black comedy masterpiece.

The story revolves around Jerry Lundegard (William H. Macy), a Ward Cleaver-esque car salesman in rural Minnesota who finds himself deep in debt. In desperation he concocts a plan that involves the kidnapping of his wife.

He hires two thugs (Steve Buscemi and Peter Stormare) to commit the crime in order to receive the ransom from his wife's wealthy father. Obviously the plan goes awry, leading to the murders of a few unsuspecting people of Brainerd, Minn. — the wintery playground for Jerry's misfortune.

Brainerd is full of interesting characters who create a comical contrast to the vicious crimes. The Coens are quick to parody their native Minnesota and the inhabitants' unusual dialect. The people are good-natured and warm-hearted but seem completely apathetic to the murders.

Brainerd chief of police, Margie Gunderson (Frances McDormand) first appears as dim-witted as the others but later she reveals her genius as an investigator. At seven months pregnant, Margie waddles about on the path of the criminal thugs.

Never before has a setting been so important. The horizon-less snow glazed pastures of Minnesota create the misty tone that carries the movie in a Twin Peaks-ish gloom. The colors, fuzzy and bleak, are a great contrast to the vivid red when blood spills.

The acting is impeccable. Peter Stormare is a great thug, unthinking and uncaring to the world around him — he says little and does little unless he feels it is utmost necessary. Steve Buscemi plays, well Steve Buscemi — a character who throughout his relative short but omnipresent career has become a welcome presence in independent film.

The relatively unknown Macy will likely achieve more than a "Hey, it's that guy" achievement that has haunted him in his days acting for David Mamet and his supporting character on "ER." McDormand, a versatile Coen regular, gives Margie a warm, maternal feel.

The real stars though are the Coen brothers. Once again their direction (actually Joel directs, Ethan produces, both are credited with the writing) is phenomenal. Their movies make you feel as if they let you in on an inside joke.

Fargo is an intelligent movie that gives the audience far more credit than Hollywood would ever dare. In a big budget cinematic world, it's great to see a small-scale independent film triumph. A+

Classic tale of justice begins new incarnation starring Kevin Whately

By Matt Wolf
Associated Press

LONDON— Twelve Angry Men changed the rules of courtroom drama four decades ago, shifting the focus from the defendant to the jury.

"I just thought it was a swell idea," said Reginald Rose, the 75-year-old New Yorker who wrote it.

Over the years, his fiercely moral dissection of the ways of the jury has fed television, film and the theater, in that order. It heads back to London this month in a new stage production starting previews April 11 at the Comedy, and opening April 22.

The scenario is simple: An all-male jury gathers one muggy New York summer hoping to reach a speedy conviction only to have the agreed-upon guilt of the accused successfully challenged by one determined juror.

On screen, the 1957 film launched the directing career of Sidney Lumet and gave Henry Fonda one of his finest film roles as the crusading juror No. 8.

An earlier — and shorter — television version in 1954, filmed before a live audience, helped define a vanished era of excellence in TV drama.

The stage script, too, has had a prior West End life, opening in July 1964 with a cast headed by the late Leo Genn. A separate European production — produced by Lars Schmidt, Ingrid Bergman's third husband — was subsequently seen in France and Scandinavia.

The new incarnation may be the headiest on stage yet, arriving in time to cater to a society no less fascinated by the psychology of the juror during the age of "Court TV."

Directed by noted English dramatist Harold Pinter, the current "Twelve Angry Men" stars local TV favorite Kevin Whately (Inspector Lewis from "Inspector Morse") as Juror No. 8, alongside British stalwarts Timothy West and Peter Vaughan. Heard on tape as the judge is the voice of E.G. Marshall, who played Juror No. 4 in the movie.

Twelve Angry Men is ever more pertinent amid a current climate in which the integrity of a jury — the play's true topic — is forever being questioned.

"This is about justice and bigotry," Rose said of his script, whose defendant is a teen-age Puerto Rican accused of knifing his father to death. "What is a jury supposed to do when a poor defendant has a court-appointed lawyer who didn't give him much of a defense?"

The son and grandson of lawyers, Rose wrote the teleplay in five days in 1954 following a jury duty stint that left him impressed with the solemn atmosphere and serious feeling of the legal process. Its success proved the decisive factor in taking up writing full time after an initial career as an advertising copywriter.

Whereas he derides the "dreadful spectacle" of O.J. Simpson's year-long trial, Rose's invented case was meant to be mundane.

"Mine was the kind of case that takes place every day in the big city — the ordinary case nobody pays any attention to."

Season brought memorable moments

By Jim O'Connell
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Next year's Final Four will be played in Indianapolis.

So it would be fitting that if another of the powers that were, Indiana, wins the title, following in the footsteps of Kentucky and UCLA.

Kentucky's 76-67 victory over Syracuse on Monday night, was its sixth national title, and first since 1978, for the school whose fans have always considered championships a birthright. UCLA, the only school with more, won its 11th a year ago.

The Meadowlands Arena, where Kentucky beat Syracuse, will be the last building with a capacity under 30,000 to serve as host unless there's a change in the rules. From now on it's domes only, starting next year with the RCA Dome.

The 1996 NCAA tournament certainly won't go down as one of the classics, but there were more than enough outstanding games and moments.

People will long remember Princeton's first-round win over UCLA, a game that sent Pete Carril into retirement with that elusive NCAA victory on his resume and sent the defending national champions home to a lot of questions.

Syracuse's Final Four run was filled with the shots that fill highlight packages. Two came in one regional semifinal victory over Georgia — Jason Cipolla's to tie the game off a pass from John Wallace and Wallace's 3-pointer to win in overtime.

There was Western Carolina's last-second scare of Purdue as the Catamounts tried to become the first No. 16 seed to win a tournament game. There were mild upsets and some close wins than must have upset a lot of coaches.

There was a shattered backboard by Texas Tech's Darvin Ham against North Carolina that annoyed the purists and brought the tournament into a video vogue closer to that of the NBA.

The season closed with Kentucky as champion and Massachusetts the challenger that came close, losing to the Wildcats in the semi-finals by six points.

Syracuse and Mississippi State became the power conference also-rans who earned so much respect for tournament runs that got them in the Final Four. Purdue and Connecticut were the top seeds who had to answer so many questions about postseason play as the Final Four berth remains elusive for coaches Gene Keady and Jim Calhoun.

It was a year when the game was put into perspective when player of the year Marcus Camby lay on the floor after mysteriously collapsing and Dayton played on despite the shocking death of center Chris Daniels.

Now comes the offseason of waiting to find out which players return to college or opt for the NBA. Have we seen the last of Camby, Wake Forest's Tim Duncan, Georgetown's Allen Iverson and Connecticut's Ray Allen, 80 percent of the All-America team? How about Stephon Marbury, Georgia Tech's freshman point guard? Somehow the college game survives no matter how many underclassmen leave or high school stars decide to skip college altogether.

It will survive again.

Some answers will come on the way to Indianapolis.

Other new questions will arise as they always do after the first weekend in April.

Orange faithful cheer team

SYRACUSE, N.Y. (AP) — Kentucky got the trophy and the title. The Syracuse basketball team was given a spontaneous welcome home celebration yesterday from about 1,000 fans.

The faithful gathered at Hancock International Airport to greet the team's charter flight as it arrived just after 11 a.m. "We just wanted to show our support," said Tricia Martin of Syracuse, who was accompanied by her infant son, Liam, and 4-year-old, Neil.

"They played a great tournament. They never quit. I know they are feeling bad about finishing No. 2, but we are here to show them they aren't No. 2 to us," she said.

"Let's go Otis. Let's go Otis," Neil chimed in, voicing his support for his favorite player, center Otis Hill.

Fans began gathering at the airport by 10 a.m., not even 12 hours after the buzzer sounded in Syracuse's 76-67 loss to Kentucky in the NCAA title game at the Meadowlands in East Rutherford, N.J.

"I bleed Orange," said Bill Montroy of Syracuse, a diesel mechanic who told his boss he would be a few hours late so he could take his 7-year-old son, Derek, to the airport.

"They know that. They knew I would have to come to this. I'll make up the hours later. It's important to let these players know we've appreciated their efforts," Montroy said.

"It was an incredible three-week run. They showed everybody never to underestimate Syracuse or Jcoach Jim] Boeheim," said Eric Reinhold, a Syracuse student who was with his friend, Chuck Malinowski.

"It was an incredible experience for me as a fan. I just wanted to say thanks," Malinowski said.

While the crowd waited for the plane to arrive, people recited cheers and joined in rounds of "Let's go Orange."

After the plane landed, the players filed out slowly, still wearing pained expressions and looking like they had not slept. They perked up as they strode into the airport concourse, aroused by the screams and shouts of their fans.

As the players walked up onto a makeshift stage, a two-minute stream of applause poured from the crowd, and when Syracuse mayor Roy Bernardi finally tried to introduce the team, he was drowned out by fans' chants of "We are proud of you. Yes, we are proud of you."

Bernardi said the Orangemen had won the college basketball world's respect with "their heart, their dedication and their pride."

A haggard-looking Boeheim addressed the gathering first. "This means an awful lot. We are very disappointed in what happened last night but I'm proud of this group behind me," Boeheim told the crowd.

"I told them in the locker room, they are certainly not losers."

In a barely audible voice, Syracuse star John Wallace, who had 29 points and 10 rebounds against Kentucky, thanked the fans for their support. He was followed by fellow senior Lazarus Sims, and underclassmen Hill, Jason Cipolla and Todd Burgan.

Kentucky Wildcats return home to Lexington

By Chris Duncan
Associated Press

LEXINGTON, Ky. — Accompanied by flashing cameras, a booming band and streams of fans adorned in Kentucky blue, the NCAA champion Wildcats returned home yesterday night to a rousing welcome at Rupp Arena.

Fans lined the building early in the morning to snatch more than 23,000 tickets given away for the rally honoring the Wildcats, who won their sixth title Monday night with a 76-67 victory over Syracuse. By noon, the tickets were gone, and all that remained was the wait.

Finally, at about 7:40 p.m., the Wildcats, aboard a glimmering bus, were led by flashing police escort through a tunnel at the north end of the arena. The overflowing crowd burst into an ovation lasting several minutes.

Coach Rick Pitino waved as he stepped off the bus. Mark Pope, carrying the championship trophy in one hand and taping the crowd with a video camera in the other, led the players onto the floor. Most wore championship T-shirts and baseball caps.

Kentucky Gov. Paul Patton, Lexington Mayor Pam Miller and UK President Charles Wethington spoke before athletic director C.M. Newton introduced Pitino. Pitino, a little hoarse, received a minute-long standing ovation.

Pitino said he had spent the season trying to think of a nickname for his team. He noted the players had learned from their losses to North Carolina last year and this year to Massachusetts and Mississippi State.

"Not only do they learn, every time they did learn those lessons, they became untouchable to beat," Pitino said. "So I thought we'd call this team The Untouchables."

He said the team had felt the pressure to win the title. "People talked about the pressure," he said. "It's there, but we were going to laugh and have fun with it. We decided we were going to enjoy it, and we've had a ball."

After Pitino introduced the players, a championship banner was raised to the ceiling as a recording of "We Are the Champions" was played.

Earlier, utility and city workers were busy repairing broken street lights and fences and sweeping branches, bottles and beer cans left in the victory mayhem.

Lexington police reported 24 arrests from midnight to 5 a.m. EST yesterday, mostly for disorderly conduct or drunken or reckless driving. Police said that was relatively few, considering an estimated 10,000 revelers in the streets.

Ribbons of toilet paper wafted from the trees near the Blazer Hall dorm. Broken glass littered the entrance to the darkened Two Keys Tavern while down the street fans streamed into the Kennedy Book Store to buy the newest, bluest possible T-shirts, sweatshirts and other souvenirs.

And in case anyone somehow missed it, the game was replayed on television inside the store.

"We've even had students selling their textbooks for money to buy shirts," said Pete Hylen, the assistant manager at the bookstore. "I guess priorities are priorities."

Some students were unhappy the hoopla hadn't altered the routines of their professors.

Ryan Hart, a senior, was one of the first patrons at the Two Keys Tavern on Monday. Hart arrived at the bar at 10:45 a.m. EST to lay claim to a table. But he wasn't pleased when he had to leave an hour later for a Spanish test.

final run on Jette's single to right.

"They came to play today," Stone said. "They know that UConn is always a good team and we have to be ready to play them and beat them. And they came to play."

The Huskies recorded their first run in the top of the fourth when shortstop Jason Grabowski walked. Another walk, and an error charged to the shortstop, advanced Grabowski to third base. After the DH Jeff Scott popped up to left field, Grabowski scored.

Grabowski was involved in UConn's only other run on the day, driving a single to right to bring third baseman Rueben Wilson home. Wilson reached base after singling to lead off the fifth inning.

UConn's pitching staff could not avoid trouble with the Minuteman lineup, as the Huskies brought in five different pitchers to counteract the UMass offense. Nadeau, Chris Barton, John Morris, David White and Matt O'Connell pitched in an effort that totaled 17 hits, three walks, two strikeouts and five men hit by pitches.

Kelly was hit by a pitch twice in the game, the seventh and eighth times he's been hit this season, which breaks the single-season record for times hit by a pitch.

The Minutemen play again Friday at home against Fordham at noon.

pants.

It's not like the team would be bad either.

A line-up including Marcus Camby, Tim Duncan, Ray Allen and others would hardly be a slouch, in fact it would probably be a heavy favorite for the gold medal.

Why stop with basketball?

Olympic tennis has become a joke as well. With all the top international players competing against each other on a regular basis anyway, Olympic tennis has become just another tour spot.

The Olympics was founded on the ideas of athletes competing in a peaceful setting, founding friendships in the spirit of sportsmanship.

The pros bring none of that. They book expensive hotel rooms instead of becoming a part of the Olympic Village and they remain aloof and apart from the things that make the Olympics special.

So the move was a step in the right direction for the USOC, but instead of getting rid of a small part of the problem, it should be pulled out by the roots and the pros forced to watch the games on TV.

SHANE KEENAN/COLLEGIAN

UMass pitcher Scott Barnsby gave up just three hits, two unearned runs, and struck out six in picking up the complete game victory.

■ Barnsby

3.02. Barnsby had struggled earlier in the season, entering the contest against UConn with a 13.5 ERA after pitching four and two-thirds innings.

"I felt real good out there today," Barnsby said. "I've been pathetic all year, so it felt good to finally do something out there to help the team."

And help the team he did. Barnsby effectively shut down UConn slugger Jason Grabowski who came to the contest batting .377 with 10 home runs in 19 games. That's more than the entire UMass squad. Grabowski went 0-for-3 on the evening and couldn't spark a Connecticut offensive run.

"Last time I was out there, I didn't even last the first inning," Barnsby said. "It was nice to finally come back and throw well."

Massachusetts coach Mike Stone was pleased with Barnsby's outing and expects to see more of him throughout the season.

"I was very impressed with Scott's performance," Stone said. "He pitched like we're expecting him to pitch all the time. He has a live arm and didn't throw many pitches. They hit a lot of first balls and he was just throwing it in there."

Unfortunately for UConn, Barnsby set a tone that couldn't be answered by the Husky bullpen. And believe me, Minutemen fans saw plenty of it as five pitchers took to the mound, each with little success. In fact, the five Husky hurlers only combined for two strikeouts in the game.

The UConn pitching staff could be due for an eye exam. They seemed to see bull's eyes on the UMass jerseys as they combined to hit five Minuteman batters. Connecticut starter, sophomore Joel Nadeau of East Taunton, seemed to have it in for his home-state squad as he did most of the damage, taking out four of the five himself. The Huskies sent senior first baseman Justin Kelly into the record books, hitting him twice, breaking the single-season record for being hit by pitches just 17 games into the season.

While Stone was impressed with Barnsby's performance, he feels he has the ability to be a key contributor to the team.

"Scotty should be a weekend starter," Stone said. "He has the kind of ability where he can pitch in a weekend. When he starts pitching consistently enough, he will be [pitching on the weekend]."

The Minutemen entered the game batting an impressive .341 as a team and it showed. The top three sluggers going into the game for UMass was Muchie Dagliere (.413, 2 HR, 10 RBI's), shortstop Brad Gorrie (.404, 1 HR, 12 RBI's), and center fielder Nate Murphy (.373, 2 HRs, 19 RBI's).

Murphy led the way with three strong doubles in the game while Gorrie earned one of his own. Dagliere was good for a single on the game.

UMass returns to Lorden Field on Friday playing its first of two doubleheaders against the Rams of Fordham University. First pitch is at noon.

Michigan junior Brendan Morrison, a two-time Hobey Baker finalist, scored the game winning goal in overtime of the title game, but said that he was not nearly as happy to score the goal as he was to see coach Red Berenson get his long-awaited national championship.

The MVP of both the 1960 and 1961 Michigan teams, the Red Baron returned to his alma mater as head coach in 1984 after a successful NHL career. Berenson, who still holds some NHL records, won a pair of Stanley Cups playing for the bleue, blanc et rouge, and returned to Ann Arbor intent to win a title for the Maize and Blue.

Berenson took over a program that was at one of the lowest points in its 74-year history posting consecutive 14- 22 and 14-22-1 records. He cleaned house and took his beloved Wolverines to the last five NCAA tournaments, but in each of the last three years had lost in overtime. In doing so, Berenson has established a perfect on-ice model for other building programs to follow, creating a perennial power that nightly plays a consistent and well-balanced game.

According to rumors out of Beantown, BU will have a difficult start to its quest to regain the title in 1996-97. The Terriers are reportedly going to open their season against Minnesota in the Hall of Fame Classic either Oct. 11 or 12 at the Target Center in Minneapolis.

Gopher fans are quite possibly the most rabid group in all of college hockey, routinely filling any arena where their team plays to the rafters. There might not be a tougher way to break in your freshmen than in front of over 17,000 screaming Gopher fans. Expect BU to start off 0-1.

One player emerging from the shadows this weekend was Michigan freshman Greg Crozier. The son of former Buffalo Sabres goalie Bill, and a former New England prep standout at Lawrence Academy, Crozier turned in a tremendous two-way effort to help Michigan on to glory.

Crozier netted a pair of goals in the win over BU, and assisted on the championship-winner against CC, but was of even more help with his fore and back-checking.

After spending much of the season bouncing from line to line, Saturday Berenson placed the former Sports Illustrated Old Spice Athlete of the Month on the left wing beside Morrison and Bill Muckalt. The combination clicked beautifully, as the Tigers could not fully match-up with the trio.

Combined with the steady defensive play of hard-checking Bubba Berenzweig, Crozier will help lead the Wolverines later down the road.

As the title shuffles off to Ann Arbor, it's time for me to shuffle off from college hockey until October. The sport has a constantly changing landscape as next year teams will be trucking up to Buffalo to play Niagara, but none will take 1- 90 off to that good old place, sweet home Chicago.

Above all, the dynamic brand of hockey played at the college level is still considered reasonably pure and highly fan-friendly. It teeters on the brink of being about as big-time as possible without becoming over commercialized, like pro sports, college basketball and football.

It has been nothing but a pleasure to bring you tales of this distinct sport with a small time feel and admission fee.

Happy trails to you until we meet again.

Leigh Torbin is a Collegian columnist.

MICHIGAN ATHLETIC PUBLIC RELATIONS

Michigan sophomore netminder Marty Turco was hardly needed as the Wolverines cruised to their record eighth NCAA title. Michigan's defense held No. 2 BU and No. 1 CC to a total of just 40 shots and two goals at the Final Four.

games. "It's going to be in everyone's minds for a while. Hopefully, just the playing of the game down on the field will keep everyone's minds occupied."

They were clearly on something else before the first pitch. The mood was reminiscent of the Cleveland Indians' first spring training games after pitchers Steve Olin and Tim Crews died in a boating accident in 1993.

"It's still just a real somber feeling," manager Ray Knight said, in a voice barely above a whisper.

Rock music blared in the clubhouse, but no one joked around. "We're not discussing it as a whole," Reds outfielder Eric Davis said. "You see people reading the newspapers, whispering stuff."

The four-man umpiring crew — including Rich Reiker, who took McSherry's place — arrived at the stadium an hour and 10 minutes before the game. They walked past reporters without comment. "Maybe after, not right now," Jerry Crawford said without slowing.

Owner Marge Schott, who wanted to continue the game Monday after McSherry collapsed, was not at the stadium for the makeup game. Her office said she was out of town and unavailable for comment. She declined to talk to reporters as she left the umpires' dressing room Monday. Later, she told The Cincinnati Enquirer how disappointed she was that the game was called off.

"I feel cheated," she said. "This isn't supposed to happen to us, not in Cincinnati. This is our history, our tradition, our team. Nobody feels worse than me."

The 53,000 fans at Monday's game received rain checks. About half that number was in the stands for the first pitch yesterday. They gave the umpiring crew a standing ovation when it walked through a pack of photographers five minutes before the first pitch.

The umpires usually come out and receive the lineup cards before the National Anthem. This time, Knight and Expos coach Jim Tracy took out the cards after the Canadian and U.S. anthems.

As a sign of respect, the umpires even got gentle treatment once the game started. When first-base umpire Steve Rippley called Eric Owens' grounder foul in the first, the crowd began to boo and then hushed.

The makeup became Knight's second managerial debut. The first started with a parade, a first pitch from former manager Sparky Anderson, and a lot of smiles. Yesterday, he was dealing with his players' emotions and his own.

This spring, the Reds have put six players on the disabled list and had a minor-leaguer die in his sleep at the team hotel in Florida.

"I went through a thousand emotions yesterday," Knight said yesterday. "This spring, basically everything that could happen, happened.

"I knew I had a lot to learn. I just didn't know I had to learn it all in one week."

Abdul-Rauf hopes to come back

DENVER (AP) — Amid allegations he quit on the team and speculation he might be traded, injured guard Mahmoud Abdul-Rauf said he hopes to return to the Denver Nuggets before the end of the season.

Abdul-Rauf, surrounded by controversy when he was suspended for one game last month by the NBA for refusing to stand during the national anthem, must sit out at least five games after being placed on the injured list last Thursday with a left foot injury.

"I hope I'll be able to come back, I feel I'll be able to come back," Abdul-Rauf said Monday.

He said his "ability to explode, cut like I want to, the speed" is the reason he has been unable to play.

"It's still a little sore, but it's coming around," he said.

Abdul-Rauf was suspended for a game for refusing to stand during the national anthem. He was reinstated when he agreed to stand and pray during the Star Spangled Banner.

Appearing to confuse his suspension with his time on the injured list, Abdul-Rauf said Monday, "I'm going to try to work out before the last game of my suspension." Realizing his mistake, he laughed and said, "I'll try to get back as soon as possible."

After he pulled himself from a game against New Jersey on March 21, saying he had a sore foot, there were accusations inside and outside the organization he had quit on his team.

Massachusetts batters Connecticut in home opener

Brad Gorrie ['3] went 1 for 3 with an RBI and a run scored in the Minutemen's 10–2 win over UConn yesterday.

SHANE KEENAN/ COLLEGIAN

By Casey Kane

Behind a complete game from Scott Barnsby and back–to– back multiple run innings, the Massachusetts baseball team easily defeated Connecticut 10–2 at Earl E. Lorden Field yesterday.

The right–handed Barnsby got the start on the mound for the Minutemen and did not look back, going the distance for a complete nine innings to pick up the win. He allowed only two runs on three hits, and struck out six while walking five.

Massachusetts	10
Connecticut	2

"I was very impressed with Scott Barnsby's performance," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "He pitched like how we're looking for him to pitch."

University of Connecticut (8–12) pitchers were not as successful, as UMass (11–6) connected for 10 runs on 17 hits. Starting pitcher Joel Nadeau lasted only two innings and took the loss.

Barnsby's performance was backed by an aggressive Minuteman attack at the plate. In the first inning, UMass got on the board immediately when lead–off batter Ryan Jette singled, and shortstop Brad Gorrie hit a double to bring him home. Justin Kelly ripped a double down the third base line to score Gorrie.

Muchie Dagliere scored the winning run in the bottom of the third, after reaching base on a single to left field and stealing second.

UMass would need no other offense, but the Minutemen added a total of seven runs in the seventh and eighth innings.

With a full count, Murphy popped the ball just right of the foul line in left field for his second double of the day to lead off the bottom of the seventh. Designated hitter Doug Clark drove a single to right to score Murphy, giving the Minutemen a 4–2 advantage. Right fielder Pete Gautreau laid down a bunt to put two men on base, and third baseman Ryan Thistle did the same to advance the base runners.

Catcher Andy Kiah grounded out, but scored Clark in the process. Jette singled to bring Gautreau home to close the UMass scoring in that inning.

The eighth inning was even more productive for the UMass squad. First baseman Justin Kelly was the first to reach base in the frame with a walk. Murphy collected his third double of the game, a ground–rule double, which sent Kelly to third.

Clark hit a long drive deep into right to pick up a double scoring Kelly and Murphy. Clark then came home after Gautreau singled to shallow right. After a Kiah single sent Gautreau to third, the right fielder scored UMass' final run of the game on a sacrifice fly by Thistle.

Barnsby's complete game sparks win

By Chris Stamm

While the freezing weather on Earl E. Lorden Field may not have been an indication that spring is upon us, spring was in the air as the Massachusetts baseball team returned to Amherst facing off against the Huskies of Connecticut.

The bats were swinging as the Minutemen (11–6, 2–2 in the Atlantic 10) rolled to a handy 10–2 win over a struggling University of Connecticut club (8–12, 4–3 in the Big East). While out–distancing Connecticut by an eight–run margin is a clear indication that University of Massachusetts had the Huskies beat at the plate, the real story of the game was pitching.

Right–hander Scott Barnsby went the full nine innings while striking out four, walking six without giving up a single earned run. Last year the sophomore from Torrington, Conn., finished the season with the Minutemen's second best ERA of

Bring back the college superstars

Matt Vautour

The U.S. Olympic Committee announced yesterday that members of the next Dream Team will no longer be able to drape an American flag around their shoulders to cover–up a sponsors logo.

During the 1992 Olympics in Barcelona, several members of the Dream Team draped the flag around their shoulders on the medal stand to avoid any publicity for Reebok, the company that was an official sponsor.

So to eliminate this Dream Team nightmare in 1996, the USOC has prohibited this from happening again.

Here's nominating that the committee goes one step further and ban the whining overpampered athletes that created the problem.

The concept of the Dream Team was created to bring the best athletes in the world back to the Olympics. So the NBA celebs came, they saw and they wiped the floor with the world's collective basketball backsides all over Barcelona.

Point taken.

Whether it be Charles Barkley's dirty play in '92 or Larry Johnson's trash talking in the 1994 World Games, since Magic Johnson's smile highlighted Barcelona's opening ceremonies, things have gone down hill faster than Alberto Tomba.

It's even worse now. It seems that representing the U.S. has moved away from being something patriotic for many of the participants. Instead it has become a status symbol. Players want to use Dream Team to enhance their endorsements or to give them leverage in contract negotiations. In affect the Olympics, to many professional hoopsters, has become a glorified All–Star game on a bigger stage.

In fact, many have speculated that those athletes would have draped a Nike banner around their neck if they thought they would have been allowed.

It's pretty common knowledge that the Americans dominate foreign competition much the same way that the UMass team would dominate if it began playing high school competition.

So let the stars return to summer hibernating and lets bring the collegians back into action.

"Well we might not win..." some people will argue.

And so what if we don't?

The games will be competitive again and the chance to play will once again mean something to its partici-

After indictment, Irvin waits for his trial

By Mark Babineck
Associated Press

DALLAS — Dallas Cowboys All–Pro receiver Michael Irvin has spent his career basking in the spotlight since his days as a brash college star at Miami.

That spotlight has become a glare since Irvin and two teammates were indicted on drug charges Monday stemming from a March 4 incident in a motel room in which police found cocaine and marijuana.

Irvin, 29, is one of the team's most popular players on a roster full of stars. He is also known as being among the most flamboyant Cowboys, and his love of fashion led to his creation of the "Masterpeace Rugz" line of clothing.

Irvin posted a $5,300 bond Monday afternoon and will await arraignment. Angela Renee Beck, 22, and Jasmine L'Nabwangu, 21, a Detroit dancer, were not.

Irvin and Beck could face two to 20 years in prison and a $10,000 fine for felony possession of 4 or more grams of cocaine. The felony indictment against Nabwangu was for a lesser charge of possessing less than a gram of cocaine, punishable by up to two years in prison.

Irvin's friend and Masterpeace Rugz associate, former Cowboys tight end Alfredo Roberts, also was in the motel room but not charged.

At a news conference today, Roberts apologized to his family, friends and public.

"There's not many things I regret in my life, but I regret finding myself in this position," he said.

"I think if I'm guilty of anything it has been poor judgment." When was asked whether he had used or uses drugs, Roberts replied, "absolutely not." He also said he received no preferential treatment.

"I was treated the same as anybody else," he said.

Furthermore, his attorney Don Tittle said, "It would surprise me if he were called by the state as a witness."

Regarding Irvin's state of mind, Roberts said, "This is something he knows he just has to go through."

He also said their relationship has grown stronger during the grand jury probe. Roberts accompanied Irvin as he left the Dallas County jail Monday.

"I love him with all my heart," Roberts said among a swirl of reporters and photographers.

Michigan wins hockey NCAAs

Leigh Torbin on College Hockey

The tired old adage that offense wins games, but defense wins championships, rang true at this year's hockey Final Four, where Cincinnati's Riverfront Coliseum rocked to "Hail to the Victors," as Michigan won it's record eighth national championship.

While alleged experts drooled over the offensive production of defending national champion Boston University, which led the nation this year by scoring a whopping 6.05 goals per game, they overlooked the Wolverine defense in hastily picking BU to repeat.

What the pundits, and ESPN's Hockey East–slanted broadcasting crew failed to observe was that Michigan led the nation by allowing just 2.28 goals per game, while BU was 12th. On the offensive end though, Michigan was nipping at the heels of No. 1 BU, ranking second in the nation in goals–per–game with 5.60.

Michigan led the nation in penalty killing, while BU was 14th. Michigan's John Madden (no relation) had nearly double the amount of short–handed goals as the guys behind him.

Holding the Terriers to just 17 shots on goal, the Wolverines cruised into the national championship game, easily winning this clash of titans. For BU, it was only the second time it has been shutout since 1984.

BU's highly touted forwards were powerless on Thursday night, while Michigan besieged BU netminder Tom Noble. Late in the first period the Wolverines held an 18–1 shot advantage and a 2–0 lead.

By this point BU had completely lost its focus and composure, generally looking shell–shocked. The Terriers' usually crisp breakouts were plagued by poor passing by their generally sure–handed defensemen, and their neutral– zone play was shaky at best.

I watched the Terriers eight times in person this year, and five more on live TV, and not once were they ever rattled for periods longer than a few minutes. Michigan got under coach Jack Parker's team's skin, irking it like no team has since BU was drilled 9–1 by Lake Superior State in the 1994 national championship game.

Why is Michigan the most deserving champion, perhaps in the history of college athletics? Consider who the Wolverines defeated en route to capturing the title on Sunday.

In their final five games, all under the win–or–hit–the–golf– course pressure of either the CCHA or NCAA playoffs, the Wolverines defeated five of the top six teams, other than themselves, in the country.

No. 3 Michigan beat hated–rival No. 7 Michigan State, No. 5 Lake Superior, No. 4 Minnesota, No. 2 Boston University and finally No. 1 Colorado College in a tremendous title run. No one remains to argue against their superiority.

Good luck finding another team anywhere that has accomplished a similar feat in just 16 days.

Although Vermont lost its semifinal to Colorado College on a highly controversial goal in the second overtime, it gained a new measure of respect nationally.

Catamount goaltender Tim Thomas was phenomenal, and kept his team in the game with a series of tremendous saves on Hobey Baker finalist Peter Geronazzo.

Meanwhile Vermont's mighty mite forwards Martin St. Louis and Eric Perrin proved to the entire nation that they actually can play hockey in the school's long–awaited Final Four debut.

Look for good things from the Cats in 1996–97.

B-ball coping with death of umpire

By Joe Kay
Associated Press

CINCINNATI (AP) — No one paid attention to the rock music in the clubhouse. There was no kidding around during batting practice. Cameras were trained on the grim–faced umpires.

A day after umpire John McSherry collapsed and died, everyone still had a hard time thinking about baseball.

The Montreal Expos and Cincinnati Reds played a makeup game yesterday for the season opener that was called off a day earlier. McSherry collapsed behind home plate in the first inning Monday and later died of heart failure at a hospital.

The death overshadowed the makeup game as well.

An unknown person left a display of tulips on a table outside an entrance to Riverfront Stadium. Flowers arrived at the umpires' dressing room. A chaplain gave tribute on the field, and there was a moment of silence before the national anthem.

The umpiring crew got a standing ovation when it took the field. Shaken players who had urged the postponement Monday were still grieving when they took the field.

"Walking through the tunnel and past the spot where they were working on him felt funny," Reds reliever Chuck McElroy said.

"That was a scary sight yesterday," said Cincinnati's Pete Schourek, who started both

McCall discusses American racial issues

By Humphrey brown III & Gregory Casimir

Approximately 300 students gathered in the Fine Arts Center Auditorium last night to hear author/reporter Nathan McCall speak in a lecture titled after his best–selling autobiography Makes Me Wanna Holler.

In his work, McCall tells the story of his journey from troubled youth to gang member to prison inmate and finally as a journalist for the Washington Post.

McCall's appearance at the University was made possible by The Distinguished Visitor's Program, a University of Massachusetts organization, financed and operated by undergraduate students.

The event started promptly at 8 p.m. with an introduction by vice president of The Distinguished Visitor's Program, Michael Phillips, after which McCall took the podium.

"We're experiencing a crisis in race relations in this country," said McCall, as he talked about his recent travels. McCall said he was just coming off the last leg of the paperback tour for his book which also made the New York Times best–seller list.

He remarked on how many of his colleagues would ask him if he was obsessed with race due to the extent in which he delved into it in his book.

"Yea, I'm obsessed with race," replied McCall to the question. "I'm obsessed with race because white America is obsessed with race and white America's obsession with race has a profound affect on my life and the lives of many other African Americans."

McCall mentioned how the media in particular seems to have an obsession with race. He cited examples such as O.J. Simpson, the Million Man March and the highly publicized debate over affirmative action.

"Much of what's going on in the country relates to America's obsession with race," McCall said.

The problem of self–hatred and its effect on young black men in America was the major issue raised by McCall in the lecture and his book.

"In my biography, I try to show how race affects self–esteem and creates self–hatred among young black men," McCall said about the seriousness of racism in America. "We have too many young black males on the street today that feel they just don't have a future. If they think they have a future, they won't commit crimes or violence that will jeopardize their

Unabomber lead takes feds to Montana

UNCOLN, Mont. — Federal agents searched a cabin near a mountain pass on the Continental Divide in their search for the elusive Unabomber, who has killed three people and injured 23 more in 17 years.

Chuck O'Reilly, sheriff of Lewis and Clark County, said 20 FBI agents searched the home near Stemple Pass, between Helena and Lincoln.

Butch Gehring, a neighbor, said the small cabin was the home of a Ted Kaczynski, described as being a resident since 1971.

"He was real shy, real quiet. His conversations were short," Gehring said, describing Kaczynski as a hermit.

The University of California at Berkeley said Theodore J. Kaczynski, now 54, was hired as an assistant professor of math at the school for the 1967–68 school year. He resigned June 30, 1969.

There were reports of an arrest in the vicinity, but those reports were not confirmed. No one named Kaczynski was booked in the Lewis and Clark County Jail.

The man under suspicion received a bachelor of arts degrees from Harvard University in 1962.

Brown, 32 others presumed dead after plane crash

By Tonja Bozic
Associated Press

VELJI DOL, Croatia — Scrambling over rocky cliffs, peering with flashlights through sheets of rain, rescuers Wednesday night reached the wreckage of the plane carrying U.S. Commerce Secretary Ron Brown and 32 others. At least 10 people were confirmed dead and the rest presumed killed.

Reporters at the scene could see the plane resting on its belly on the top of a small hill in this coastal Adriatic village, near the port city of Dubrovnik. The plane's middle was burned.

Croatian police and U.S. soldiers were searching for bodies and survivors — an effort complicated by the heavy lacing of landmines in the area from the 1991 war.

"Only a crazy man would go there," Miomir Zuzul, Croatia's ambassador to the United States, told Associated Press Television in Dubrovnik.

Zuzul said 10 bodies had been found Wednesday night and Thursday morning. Croatian radio reported that the bodies of seven men and three women were recovered.

A woman found alive at the scene died as a NATO helicopter carried her to a Dubrovnik hospital, flying through heavy rains and high winds.

Brown, 54, had been traveling with about a dozen top American executives exploring business possibilities in the Balkans. Pentagon officials in Washington said 27 passengers and a crew of six were on board the flight to Dubrovnik.

The plane took off from Tuzla, Bosnia–Herzegovina, headquarters for U.S. soldiers with the NATO–led peace mission. A senior defense official in Washington said there were no indications of hostile action against the plane.

"We've got a pretty clear air picture in that area," the official said. "Early indications are it has more to do with tough weather and a tough approach."

Freeman fugitives comprised of varied backgrounds

JORDAN, Mont. (AP) — A hard–luck farmer swamped by debt. A mother fleeing child–welfare officials. Some fast–talking strangers hawking cure–alls for financial woes.

Taken together they are the Freemen, now notorious as a defiant band of racist, anti–government militants. Taken apart, however, they are more diverse — and more amateurish — than the ominous headlines imply.

If not for their guns and dreams of Armageddon, the 20 or so people fending off the FBI from a foreclosed wheat farm dubbed "Justus Township" might be deemed just a common collection of misfits and miscreants.

Some came to this isolated corner of the West to hide from the law. Others came to confront it. The law obliged. For 11 days, more than 100 federal agents have patrolled the snowy hills and fields around the farm, while rifle–toting Freemen stand sentry behind barricades.

Whether this standoff ends in grudging surrender or the disastrous disintegration of Waco depends as much on the character and motives of the Freemen as it does on any FBI strategy.

"For months, we kept hearing of these criminals moving up near here," said Ruth Coulter, 64, a rancher's wife who lives nearby. "You get sort of nervous. It's not the kind of people you want for neighbors."

Women with HIV focus of UMass lecture

EMILY BERT/ COLLEGIAN
Dr. Felicia Cohen of Southern Illinois University spoke on the subject of women living with the AIDS virus Wednesday afternoon in the Campus Center Auditorium.

By Melanie B. Arruda
Collegian Staff

"Women continue to be HIV infected and HIV affected," according to the Dean of the School of Nursing at Southern Illinois University, Felicia Lashley Cohen, who spoke at yesterday afternoon's "AIDS Update" in the Campus Center Auditorium.

In 1981, when the Centers for Disease Control (CDC) recognized AIDS, they focused on the white, middle class, better educated and politically active males, Cohen said. Poor, non–white and less powerful HIV infected women were overlooked, she said.

As a result of these biased studies, there is little information about HIV infections and women, Cohen said.

Today, women are under–represented in drug trials, and CDC definitions are mainly based on observation of males, Cohen said. Pregnancy, basic biological differences and the affects of sex hormones on the immune system have not been adequately studied, she said.

HIV positive women are generally diagnosed later, not diagnosed or misdiagnosed, Cohen said.

Some symptoms, which go unrecognized in HIV positive women, according to Cohen, include pelvic inflammatory disease, vaginal candidiasis and cervical dysplasia. Signs that a woman is HIV positive include vaginal, oral or esophagal candidiasis, she added.

Between the ages of 15 and 44, HIV remains the biggest killer since 1986, Cohen said. In 1994, HIV became the third leading cause of death in women after cancer and accidents, she added.

Women are at greater risk of becoming HIV positive since male to female transmission is very efficient, Cohen said. In June of 1995 about HIV infections and women, Cohen said.

Volunteers, patients share in learning

When Julie Watson, a University of Massachusetts sophomore, first contacted her "HIV buddy" she had no idea what to expect.

"The actual first time I called my buddy was petrifying," she said. "I just sort of resigned myself to the fact that it would be strange, and we hit it right off."

Watson is one of 27 volunteers for AIDS CARE/Hampshire County. This organization provides non– judgmental support and practical assistance for people with HIV or AIDS. The program matches volunteers with people in any stage of HIV to provide one–on–one companionship and practical assistance. Watson has been a volunteer since June, meeting with her buddy on a weekly basis.

"I do things like run errands, give rides or just go out for coffee," she said. "But the biggest thing is to just allow him a place to talk about it."

AIDS CARE/Hampshire County also uses bridge volunteers. These volunteers don't work with one client, but help with specific transportation needs and errands.

Valerie Nelson is the volunteer coordinator for the program. Her general goal is "to make the experience of having AIDS just a little easier."

Nelson said volunteers concentrate on the "little things" that make the difference to people with HIV or AIDS. She gave the example of a client who was afraid to tell his co–workers and boss he was HIV–positive. With the support of a volunteer, he grew comfortable enough to talk about his situation.

"Eventually he managed to tell everyone and articulate what he was looking for in terms of support," she said.

Nelson said that the program helps destroy stereotypes of people with HIV or AIDS.

When a Friend Has HIV...

- Be there. Don't avoid your friend. It gives hope. Be the friend, the loved one you've always been, especially now when it is most important.
- Call before you visit. Your friend may not feel up to a visitor that day.
- Like anyone else, a person with AIDS can have both good and bad days. On good days treat your friend the same as your other friends. On the bad days, treat him or her with extra care and compassion.
- Be sure to include your friend in decision–making whenever possible. Illness can bring about a loss of control over many aspects of life. Don't deny your friend an opportunity to make decisions, no matter how simple or silly they may seem to you.
- Remind your friend that lifestyles don't cause disease, germs do.

Caston sworn in as new SGA president

By Michael Elliott

The Student Government Association (SGA) Senate confirmed the 1996 elections at their meeting Wednesday night, swearing in President Maurice Caston and Student Trustee Sean Carter.

The Senate also certified the elections of numerous Area Government officials, although not all were present to be sworn in.

SGA Speaker Dan Castellano had intended to settle the numerous ties in races for Area Government positions by a vote of the Senate. However, the candidates in question did not attend the meeting, which they had been notified of, according to Castellano.

It was decided by the Senate, therefore, that these positions would now be considered vacant, considering that most of the candidates in these undecided races had received between two to three write–in votes.

While the SGA decides how these positions are to be filled, Castellano said that Area Governments will appoint people to the offices in the interim.

"We had no choice. We could not vote for people when they don't show up to the meeting," Castellano said.

New SGA president Maurice Caston was sworn in by speaker of the SGA Senate Dan Castellano at a general assembly meeting Wednesday evening in the Campus Center.

In other matters, Student Coordinator Michael Hass of the Student Center for Research and Advocacy (SCERA) announced plans to mobilize students to protest the most recent budget proposal released by the state Ways and Means Committee.

The plan would add one percent to all higher education budgets for state school, but would then take 10 percent from that amount to establish a fund controlled by the Higher Education Coordinating Council (HECC).

This fund, according to Hass, would be redistributed throughout the colleges and the universities in the Commonwealth.

Hass concerns stem from the fact the fund would not necessarily put the exact amount into the University as it took out. Furthermore, James Carlin, Chairman of HECC, could use the fund to augment his power within higher education circles to the detriment of the Amherst campus.

"He can use [the fund] as a bat. He's come out publicly and said that the University is bloated and can take a $30 million cut," Hass said.

The ensure that students are heard during the budget process, Hass said that SCERA is organizing "a all day blitz" to inform those in the University community about next years financial situation.

Students will be knocking on residence hall doors and calling parents, encouraging everyone to either write

Trustees vote on tuition, fee levels for UM system

By Michael Elliott
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — The University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees met today and passed a motion to freeze tuition for the Amherst campus for academic year 1996–97 and established a policy which will keep the increase of fees in check with inflation.

The motion, introduced by President William Bulger during a meeting of the Boards Committee on Administration and Finance, will be sent for consideration to the Higher Education Coordinating Council (HECC).

HECC sets the tuition and fees levels for all state colleges and universities. However, for the University of Massachusetts, HECC must be in agreement with the Board before any decision regarding tuition and fees is final.

While the tuition will remain as is for academic year 1996–97, fees were mandated by the Board to be increased by a amount equal to one half of the Consumer Price Index, determined by the federal government.

This move will ensure that the price of attending the University will not exceed increases in the rate of inflation.

"All of us support the concept of keeping student charges affordable," Bulger said.

According to the Boards plan, students will pay a additional $10 in fees next year. For students living on campus, $40 will be added to that increase. Out of state students will pay a additional $34 of fees, bringing the maximum increase for next year to approximately $85.

HECC has already recommended to the Board that they reduce tuition by 5 percent. According to Amherst campus Student Trustee Dan Rivera, this proposal did not include any guarantees that additional state funding would come into the system to compensate for the revenue loss, and thus was "a empty promise."

Rivera said that the tuition and fee levels approved today by the Board will be used as a starting point for a compromise with HECC.

Bulger said that he intends for negotiations with HECC to be productive and not lead to a political tug–of–war, pitting the two bodies against each other in a struggle for both power and publicity.

"We have no intentions of squabbling [with HECC] on the issue," Bulger said.

Rivera said that, despite increases, fee levels for next year will be better, comparatively, to those of years past.

"If you look at all the costs, we made out better this year," Rivera said.

The Board, in addition, held meetings on Monday to discuss the revision of admission standards for the University.

Provisions in the plan adopted mir-

Mayer examines Israeli conflict

Second Oslo peace plan, HAMAS discussed at Hampshire

By Liz Anderson
Collegian Correspondent

On Monday night the Five College Program in Peace and Security Studies presented a lecture by Tamar Mayer titled, "Renewed Violence and the Prospects for Israeli-Palestinian Peace" in the Franklin Paterson Auditorium at Hampshire College.

Mayer began her lecture outlining the Oslo peace plan between Israel and Palestine, which was created Sept. 13, 1993. In Mayer's analysis, the 400-page agreement boils down to two very important issues — the release of all Palestinians from Israeli jails and the withdraw of Israeli troops from the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

After numerous negotiations, Israeli troops slowly began to withdraw from the West Bank and Gaza Strip. Palestine gained some jurisdiction over its territories, and many Palestinians were released from Israeli jails.

Trade relations improved drastically between Israel and its surrounding Arab neighbors. Israel began to capitalize off cheap labor in Jordan, Palestine and Morocco. Things took a turn for the worse when Israel refused to release four Palestinian women accused and tried for the murders of Israelis.

In an attempt to reassure growing insecurities, the Oslo Two Peace Accords were created in Washington D.C., roughly three weeks after the assassination of Israeli's Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin.

"The Palestinian-Israeli conflict has been an on-going struggle over land, water and security since the end of World War II. It triggers very powerful responses from protagonists and observers. It is impossible for anyone to have a bias opinion," said Mayer, as she turned the discussion to the recent atrocities in Israel.

In the past two months there have been five terrorist attacks in Israel, killing 59 Israelis and six Palestinians, as well as wounding thousands of people from both nations. HAMAS, a fundamental Islamic terrorist organization, is responsible for these atrocities. With money HAMAS openly lures young Muslims to become human bombs and promises of a glorious after life, according to Mayer.

"As the poverty increases and the standard of living becomes near to unbearable more young men want to leave their life on earth and enjoy a rich after life. To be chosen as "martyrs" [suicide bombers] is an incredible honor," Mayer said. "One suicide bomber's family received $65,000 from HAMAS and was promised 72,000 wives in his afterlife."

Israel's Prime Minister Shimon Peres will not bring the leaders of HAMAS into political dialogue and negotiations, according to Mayer. She said that as the terrorism continues, Israel will continue to seal off the West Bank and Gaza Strip from all economic sources. This creates extreme poverty for both Palestinians and Israeli Jews living in this area, according to Mayer.

"Israel has sealed off the West Bank and Gaza Strip from all of their economic sources," Mayer said. "Closed off to work, food and medical facilities the people living in this area are living in extreme poverty. If the living standards continue to deteriorate more people will join HAMAS."

future."

McCall then reflected on his own past, his own feeling of self-hatred and what happened to him to change it.

"In telling my story, I try to convey when a young child looks into the world and he or she is not accepted in the world," he said. "I had learned to hate myself by the time I was 12 years old."

It was McCall's time spent in prison that changed the way he looked at himself and the world around him.

"In prison, I got into my spiritual self," he said. "I had been moving in the fast lane so much that I didn't realize there was so much precision in life."

While in prison McCall spent much of his time reading books such as Richard Wright's Native Son and Alex Haley's Roots.

"I saw myself in the character," said McCall in reference to the character Booker in Wright's novel. "I realized that if I didn't change my life I'd end up in the electric chair."

McCall went on to also explain the important lessons he learned from all of the reading he did in prison.

"In all that reading, I learned a lot," explained McCall, "Most importantly, I learned some very important messages about life in general and my life particularly."

With another book on the way and a movie deal with Columbia Pictures in the works, McCall made note of the fact that he was doing all right, but that his work as a concerned African-American dealing with issues of racism in society was far from over.

"I guess you could say I'm one of those who slipped through the cracks," McCall said. "But there are literally thousands of young black brothers out there robbin', sellin' drugs and what not, who are suffering from the same self- hatred that I once had."

Immediately following the lecture, there was a reception where McCall signed copies of his autobiography.

"You have to let go of your expectancies to do it," she said. "People have to let go of the image they have, whatever it may be, of a person with HIV."

Volunteers must undergo an intense two-week training session, have transportation and be willing to spend two to four hours a week with their buddies. While the program normally requires volunteers to be available on a year-round basis, Nelson can arrange special projects and internships for students who leave the area during semester breaks.

she said. Sex with injecting drug users makes up more than 60 percent of this category and over 20 percent of women with AIDS.

Some women may assume monogamy in their sex partner, Cohen said. "Even if her partner has sex with another person only once, it is usually with someone who is at risk for HIV." Other women assume that their mate has never been a drug user, she added.

AIDS cases have been reported in all 50 states including the District of Columbia. Seventy percent of AIDS cases within the U.S., have been reported in New York, New Jersey, Massachusetts, Washington, D.C. and Puerto Rico.

HIV positive women need access to services and care for non-infected family members, Cohen said.

Watson said that the program not only benefits people with HIV or AIDS, but volunteers as well.

"You feel like a real person in the real world, not trapped on campus," she said.

Her experience has taught her how to respect confidentiality and improve communication skills. She said she was amazed by how much seemingly simple favors, like giving a hug, can mean to a person with HIV or AIDS.

"It's given me a new perspective on my life," Watson said. "I value my lot in life now, and am thankful for what I have."

BALANCED BUDGET

Bill Clinton

Waging protracted fight with congressional Republicans that has shut parts of the government twice. Latest proposal retains goal of balancing budget by 2002 but transfers tough consequences to a future president: Two-thirds of the savings would come after Clinton stepped down from a second term. Opposes balanced budget amendment to the Constitution.

Bob Dole

Dole: A major figure in budget standoff with Clinton causing two partial government shutdowns. Says first act as president would be to call for constitutional amendment. "Congress needs the discipline." Amendment fell one vote short in Senate last year.

WASHINGTON (AP) — And then there were two.

Breaking clear in a contest once crowded and tangled, Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole has secured the Republican presidential nomination and won the right to engage President Clinton in the fall.

Neither man at this point has a comprehensive platform. But what they do have, after Clinton's three years in the White House and Dole's 27 years in the Senate, are records. And since January they've answered questions on a variety of subjects put to them by The Associated Press.

Here are their answers, plus summaries of their words and actions on a variety of issues. Positions may change, and Ross Perot may yet jump in again to mix everything up.

But as of now, this is where they stand and what they've said.

In addition, students will be traveling to Boston next Monday and Tuesday, according to Hass, to lobby on behalf of the University at the State House.

Currently, SCERA is seeking a number of amendments to the budget package which would make it ultimately more favorable to students, Hass said.

ror those of a similar agreement reached by HECC. Under the plan, students, according to the GPA and SAT levels, will be filed into four categories, one representing students with the highest score, and four representing students with the lowest score.

By the end of the decade, campuses would admit students under strict guidelines which will stipulate exactly how many applicants from each category can be admitted. Students towards the bottom of the pool, therefore, will find fewer spots available for them within the University.

Unlike the HECC plan, the Board will also be considering ways to incorporate interviews and essays as factors in the admission process.

Rivera said that he was greatly opposed to the new admissions standards because they will penalize students who stand to benefit most from completing a college education.

According to Rivera, basing admissions on the GPA and SAT score of a student will exclude those from poorer, ALANA communities.

Instead of the HECC controlled fund which would remove ten percent of the universities resources within the budget, Hass said that SCERA is asking that 20 percent be added to the budget to finance a collective bargaining reserve which will facilitate a long-awaited pay increase for all professional staff at the University.

On top of that increase, Hass said the University needs a additional $8 million in funding, to go directly to the Amherst campus.

They conquered everything but death.

Past world rulers like Alexander the Great, Tutankhamen and Julius Caesar have all had one thing in common: the past. They're stuck in it. It makes more sense to follow a ruler who has conquered death...and a world leader who promises to someday rule the world through peace.

Jesus Christ is that ruler. He claimed to be God, was crucified for our sins, and then rose bodily from the grave. And he promises to return to rule over the earth. For a free article on this remarkable person and his relevance for your life, call 1-800-236-9238.

Opinion/Editorial

Universal ignorance

Just so no one is alarmed, I'm happy to report some good news. My left side is OK. It was a defensive victim of an alleged attack by an unknown assailant(s) that the mutilated words that got me pulled out of commission. The evil Oldsmobile ordered a form attention chocolate wiper blade, a bruised window panel and a compound fracture of the side view mirror.

What the hell am I saying — my car got jagged Saturday night/Sunday morning. A peaceful, virtuous proud citizen spent a wonderful evening watching a basketball game transform into a savage excuse to vandalize. The mourning period after the UMass basketball team's 61-7 loss to Kentucky took place. The results were severe scarring, broken limbs and other assorted graphic non-reported injuries. There was a table thrown out of an Amherst window. There were shoes put through windows. There were bottles smashed.

And there were cars which were vandalized.

How weird is it that people react the way they did during the Midwestern gang rape in the NCAA Tournament and a means of being absolutely jerks a theme long for mass smashing and trashing. Then visit and double for the need to break things if one was a wacko. I have been much of the same if not more.

I was outside to get my ID, which was in my car, after the game. I looked at the shades and I knew why. I swear old Harry was actually one of those cartoon characters with a beating and a pulse. I looked at my driver's window. I saw the side view mirror on the ground a wide door dangling from the hinges, and the windshield wiper standing up straight like it was the center of attention.

I stood. I gathered up. I slowly took a breath. I looked around. I looked back at no damage. From there I proceeded to walk around the car. I looked at the damage. I was very distressed, not pissed and wanting for a few minutes I wallowed in a living room of destruction. I remained calm in a living room of destruction after a long vacation.

I was pissed.

I don't know. I'm a big fan of the Amherst Police Department. I've had my run-ins with them, but I've always been treated with respect. I've had my run-ins with Amherst Police Department. I've had my run-ins with the Amherst Police Department. I've had my run-ins with the Amherst Police Department.

I am an Amherst and a townie. I've been a townie for the past 10 years. I've been a townie for the past 10 years. I've been a townie for the past 10 years.

People and Pop Culture in the News

Jonathan Frankes, a.k.a Commander Riker, is slated to direct the next "Star Trek: The Next Generation" film due out this November.

Also trekking along the same lines is Whitewater juror Barbara Adams who showed up for the trial in full Starfleet regalia (complete with tri-corder and communicator badge). However, Adams was dismissed after talking to "American Journal" about her attire.

Isn't it bad enough that athletes are asked to endorse sports wear, soft drinks and tacos? Well, it gets worse — Michael Jordan is coming out with his own cologne. What could it possibly smell like, can't imagine but I can see the ads. "Jordan gets all the chicks, Jordan smells like old gym socks ..."

Do you honestly think that just because Stallone signed on to a more "arts film" that his image will be elevated to that of a burning intellectual? The buff and brooding lad signed onto Copland for less than one-percent of his normal $20 million fee. What a guy!

Sick of the hype that Lollapalooza has managed to garner (especially with Perry Ferrall disowning it)? Then tune into the "The Simpsons" this May when they host a "Homerpalooza." The plot has our favorite yellow Dad becoming a sideshow freakstar a festival tour that will include Smashing Pumpkins, Cypress Hill and Sonic Youth. The show's executive producer, Josh Weinstein, said, "If any old people are still watching by the end of the show, they're either gonna walk out or crawl out."

Sandra Bullock shedded her nice girl image for "bitch for a day" when she fired both her lawyer and her manager (spelling them both with her father John.

Tom Cruise got to play hero for a day when he saved Heloisa Vinhas from hospital bills. Cruise saw Vinhas at the accident called for EMTs and stayed with the woman until an ambulance came. He then footed the $7,000 hospital bill for the insurance-less woman, AND remains in contact with her, just in case she need anything else.

Remember the Swiss Family Robinson, that lovable close knit family that got shipped wrecked on an island and built that super cool tree house and then got attacked by pirates? Well, Disney has decided to remake the film this coming year although no cast has been announced.

Material for this column has been compiled from various news and wire services by Tara MK Connelly.

Music Andrew Llyod Webber

Andrew Lloyd Webber, composer extraordinaire, has compiled another CD of some of the finest music he has created. The songs span the range from the little known musical, Aspects of Love, to the Tony-award winning Phantom of the Opera.

The CD, The Premiere Collection Encore, includes some of the finest talent in musical theater today. Original Phantom stars Sarah Brightman and Michael Crawford team up for a reprise of "The Point of No Return." Barbra Streisand adds her powerful vocals to "Memory" from Cats.

Jason Donovan, star of Joseph and the Technicolor Dreamcoat, sings the hopeful "Any Dream Will Do" and Brightman is perkily sweet on "Everything's Alright," a selection from Jesus Christ Superstar. In addition to songs from the musicals, Webber has also added three songs from the Barcelona Olympics, including the theme, sung by Brightman and Placido Domingo.

Film Chungking Express

With the recent influx of Hong Kong cinema in the U.S., along comes the first feature released on the ubiquitous Quentin Tarantino's independent Rolling Thunder Pictures. But those expecting hard-boiled action from the likes of John Woo will be disappointed.

Director Wong Kar-wai's fourth feature, Chungking Express was just released in metropolitan areas. The film is currently divided into two parts that are connected by an incident at a food stand called the Midnight Express.

Both parts of the movie are about police officers with obsessive love lives that have recently lapsed. In the first part, police officer No. 223 is pining after his ex- girlfriend, in the second part, police officer No. 663 is smitten with a beautiful flight attendant. Wong proves that even there can be excessive violence in order to make an entertaining Cantonese film.

Concert Foo Fighters

Two and a half years ago Nirvana played in Springfield, with the Breeders, in support of their new album, In Utero. It was the last time Kurt Cobain ever played in Massachusetts.

Tomorrow night at the Worcester Auditorium, David Grohl, ex-Nirvana, returns with his new band the Foo Fighters along with Kim Deal's Breeders side project the Amps. The names may have changed but the sounds and attitude remain the same.

The Foo Fighters have continuously toured since the release of their self-titled debut. They have been high profile to say the least. On the other hand, the Amps quietly released one of the best albums of last year.

With the possible exception of the upcoming Coolio and Fugees shows at Smith, a double bill of the magnitude of Foo Fighters and the Amps can not be easily beat.

Quartet to jazz up Bowker Aud.

COURTESY VERVE

Virtuoso bassist Christian McBride and his quartet perform at Bowker tonight with special guest, Nicholas Payton.

By Matt Wexler
Collegian Staff

Christian McBride, an up and coming bassist will perform tonight at Bowker Auditorium with his quartet and special guest star, Nicholas Payton on trumpet. The quartet is part of the Black Musicians Conference 25th Anniversary titled "The Revolution Returns: The Next Generation in Jazz."

McBride is arguably the most respected and widely known young upright bass player today and with good reason. His accomplishments range far and wide, due in part to his musical upbringing. At eight years old he was listening to and playing James Brown tunes on electric bass. From there, he undertook the upright double bass, studying classical music at Philadelphia's High School for the Creative and Performing Arts. McBride also studied under Neil Courtney, bassist for the Philadelphia Orchestra. At 17 McBride travelled to New York on a scholarship to Juilliard, where his classical and jazz studies continued.

McBride's rise to the top of the bass world started after he dropped out of Juilliard in an effort to make a name for himself on the dog-eat-dog New York City music scene. McBride spent his days practicing and his nights jamming in clubs with his idols, meeting new players and picking up an informal musical education along the way.

McBride's playing has since developed a special recognizable sheen to it, a brightness and roundness coupled with an astounding accuracy of pitch, all of which adds up to supply an intensity to any group or band he may be playing with. His musical ideas are logical and orderly, representing his long affiliation with the music, but surprising and energetic enough to add a new flavor to the bass and inspire the soloists who are improvising over him.

McBride has released a solo album, "Gettin' to It" and in addition, he can be heard on over 70 recordings. He has played with trumpet players Freddie Hubbard, Wynton Marsalis and Roy Hargrove, saxophonists Joshua Redman, Joe Henderson and Bobby Watson, and pianist Benny Green, among countless others. In fact, Redman himself emulates McBride's musical prowess, saying "If anybody is a musical genius, he's it."

Philadelphia tends to agree and they established a "Christian McBride Day" to honor the bassist during the Mellon Jazz Festival last June and over 20 musicians came out to pay tribute to McBride.

McBride will be accompanied by three accomplished musicians: Carl Allen on drums, Anthony Wonsey on piano and Tim Warfield on saxophone. In addition to these fine musicians, McBride will have a special guest in the form of trumpeter Nicholas Payton.

Payton had already established himself as a name to be reckoned with on the trumpet scene. He began his journey on the instrument at the early age of four when he requested the trumpet as a Christmas present. At age nine, he was already accompanying his father on gigs with the Young Tuxedo Brass Band.

Payton had just entered his teens when Wynton Marsalis called to speak to Payton's father and he began playing his trumpet in the background so Wynton would hear him. Marsalis took Payton under his wing and encouraged him to continue studying and playing music. Since then, Payton has received calls from band leaders around the country and has been playing gigs on cruise ships and in night-clubs with the great players of today, such as trumpet player Clark Terry and pianist Marcus Roberts.

This concert offers the chance to see several of the new up and coming instrumentalists in jazz, the players that will take the music into the next century. With high class players such as McBride leading the way, jazz has a bright future to look forward to, as do the players themselves.

Christian McBride will perform tonight at Bowker Auditorium at 8 p.m. Tickets are $20, $15, $8 for children 17 and under. Tickets are $5 for Five College students. For more information or to order tickets, please call the Fine Arts Center Box Office at (413) 545-2511 or 1-800-999- UMAS.

Hampden Theater hosts Balinese dancer

Dances, masks, songs and comedy are often blended together in Balinese traditional dance/theater. Tonight, one of the foremost masters of Balinese dance, I Nyoman Catra, will perform at Hampden Theater and conduct a workshop.

Antonin Artaud described Balinese dancers as "living hieroglyphs" in the '30s and since then the performers have served as inspiration to Western theater artists.

Catra specializes in the Kechak monkey dance and masked temple performances. Catra said in an interview with Robert O'Malley that "Balinese people are mostly of the Hindu religion" and that dance is an important part of religious functions. There are several dances that are performed at temples, including sacred dances which take place inside the temple. Secondary temple dances highlight a particular religious activity while other dances serve merely as a form of entertainment.

Catra is particularly adept at the masked temple performances known as Topeng. The characters in the dance bear a strong resemblance to those of the commedia dell'arte. In tonight's performance, Catra will perform this dance and will continually change masks to play all the characters in a comic story. The half-masked clown servants in the dance are similar to the characters Harlequin and Pulcinella from the commedia dell'arte. The performance will blend English satire with Balinese songs and dances.

For anyone looking for an interesting dose of culture, mixing both east and west, I Nyoman Catra is a must-see.

Hampden Theater is located in the Southwest residential area. All tickets for this performance are $5 and are currently on sale at the Fine Arts Center Box Office. For more information, please call the Box Office at 545-2511 or 1-800-999-UMAS.

Bilking audiences out of laughter

By Laura Stock
Collegian Staff

SGT. BILKO
Directed by Jonathan Lynn with Steve Martin, Dan Aykroyd, Phil Hartman
Playing at Hampshire Six

Classic sitcom meets the big screen in the latest outing from comic mogul Steve Martin — Sgt. Bilko.

With the ever-present threat of government closure of his Army base, the push-over Colonel Hall, played by Dan Aykroyd, attempts to whip his soldiers into shape to impress the brass — but the man who truly has control on the base is Sgt. Bilko.

Bilko is in charge of the Army's motor pool (or rather, casino), where all of his soldiers are experts in appearing as though they are working hard, when in actuality they are hardly working. Used tires conceal roulette wheels, and work benches double as blackjack tables.

Bilko is a master con-man. He'll bet on anything, and funnels money out of the motor pool's account to further his gambling habit — including the fund appropriated to repair the Army's hovercraft.

COURTESY MELINDA SUE GORDON

Steve Martin is the new Sgt. Bilko

The smooth-talking and surreptitious Bilko manages to keep the wool pulled over the colonel's eyes while he turns the base into his own private country club — equipped with golf courses and pool bar. Trouble begins for Bilko after a disastrous demonstration of the hovercraft prompts the general to order an inspection of the base — primarily the motor pool.

Just as Phil Hartman was once an anchor to the now sinking ship "Saturday Night Live," Hartman's role as the ruthless general who inspects the base centers the film. He has a 15-year-old grudge against Bilko, whose botched gambling aspirations in a boxing match led to Hartman's character being shipped out to Alaska.

While the inspector general has two investigators performing a white-glove test to Bilko's computer files and financial data, the Sarge has another problem on his hands. His longtime girlfriend (played by Mr. Holland's Opus' Glenne Headly) is tired of being forgotten at the wedding after when Bilko goes off on gambling sprees, so she gives him one month to shape up or ship out.

In a time where moviegoers are enamored with the quick, physical humor of Jim Carrey and the sarcastic, obnoxious slant of Adam Sandler, some of Sgt. Bilko's comedy may be lost on younger viewers. For the college-aged audience, this re-make of the old television sitcom "The Phil Silvers Show" may lack some of its humorous qualities — those who have never seen the TV show won't be able to discern any authentic qualities from original to re-make; nor will they be able to compare Martin to the first Bilko, Phil Silvers.

Martin seems to handle this handicap well, but the jokes are so mild in Sgt. Bilko they elicit polite giggles rather than peals of laughter. While it is pleasingly sentimental to see the Two Wild and Crazy Guys teamed up again, Hartman is much trendier (and sometimes funnier) than Martin and Aykroyd. For those of you who haven't wondered, "Bilko, who?" it may be enjoyable — if you don't know Bilko, there isn't any pressing need to be introduced. C

Love and Rockets still powerful

Beat Happening rereleases compilation of pop–filled joy on CD

COURTESY AMERICAN RECORDINGS

Love and Rockets

LOVE AND ROCKETS
Sweet F.A
American Recordings

It took taken more than six years for the music world to catch up with Love and Rockets. Their 1989 album, Love and Rockets, featured feedback lacked fuzzbox treatments, sampling and a razor-sharp sense of lyrical wit and pop melodicism — all this long before the buzz bin madness of MTV and the "punk-cred" silliness of American indie rock. Last year's return from a five year recording absence brought that sadly uneven, and painfully lacking, house dance experiment Hot Trip To Heaven. Luckily, Love and Rockets has quickly followed that up with Sweet F.A., an album chock full of everything that made them great in the first place.

Sweet F.A. acts almost like a sampler of Love and Rocket's greatest hits from the folksy, Beatles-esque pop of Earth, Sun, Moon (most evident in Sweet F.A.'s "Natacha," a song that kicks even "new" Beatles song right where it deserves it) and the fuzzy pop of Express and Time And Rockets. Guitarist Daniel Ash handles most of the songwriting chores this time around, giving the album his typical twist of breath heavy, whispering vocals and spare, distorting riffing. "Fever" is a good example of the Rockets' style — a hushed intro, a sudden rush of noisy guitar and a pounding dance beat, all laced with a sexy haze of '60s style psychedelia. "Sweet Love Hangover," the first single, follows a similar pattern, but easily eclipses the rest of the album as a pop song of the highest magnitude — infinitely catchy and unrelentingly danceable.

Not to say that Sweet F.A. is all fun and dancing. Love and Rockets have suffered greatly under the thumb of record company politics (lack of support for Hot Trip, budget freezing on Sweet F.A. that forced them to record much of the album in a friend's garage, etc.). Songwriting reins are passed to bass player David J for the album's angrier moments, and drummer Kevin Haskins responds in kind with thundering percussion and frightening samples.

Many of the songs deal with the disappointments that inevitably accompany happiness — frustrations in the face of contentment. Much of this sentiment comes, of course, through the Rockets' own business frustrations, but both Ash and J use personal experiences as parables for greater human experience. With that in mind, it is difficult to listen to the album without feeling that the Rockers' have truly suffered, where most bands merely play the tortured role. Ash has even suggested that if Sweet F.A. is a commercial failure, Love and Rockets may call it quits.

It would be a tragedy to lose a band as imaginative and powerful as Love and Rockets — a band, that, on the strength of Sweet F.A. is certainly at the height of its amazing powers. B+ (Bradley Skaught)

BEAT HAPPENING
Beat Happening
K Records

The CD versus vinyl debate has long been argued to little consensus, but even the most enthusiastic and dedicated vinyl consumer cherishes CD reissues containing obscure bonus material that was not originally on the album. Last week K Records reissued a collection of Beat Happening's early work that had previously been sold as 1983–1985 on Feel Good All Over, but shockingly three essential tracks are missing from the new reissue, "Primitives," "I Spy" "Down At the Sea." These tracks, culled from the earliest Beat Happening recordings, date back to November 1983.

Beat Happening collects 24 songs from the band's early days showcasing the band's brutal since of sincerity and honesty. While the rest of the world was stuck on Duran Duran, Beat Happening were churning out innocent pop songs reminiscent of the Shaggs. Hardly apt musicians at the time, the Olympia WA trio relied more on their do–it– yourself attitude than their musical

Celine Dion turns diva on new LP

Celine Dion's Falling Into You

CELINE DION
Falling Into You
Sony

Canadian superstar Celine Dion's latest release, Falling Into You is swiftly becoming another huge success. Debuting at number two on the charts, the mega–chanteuse's album is her highest–charting album to date.

Dion has risen to international fame in an incredibly short time. Virtually unknown outside her native province of Quebec, she has bolted to the top of American charts within the last few years. A multi–million album seller in Canada, Dion is perhaps the most successful singer that Quebec has ever produced.

She appeals to both Americans and Canadians because of her bilingual ability. Dion has released over 10 albums in French, culminating with last years D'eux, marketed in the United States as The French Album.

Dion's American breakthrough came in 1991 when she and Peabo Bryson sang the theme song to the Disney movie, "Beauty and the Beast," winning both a Grammy and an Oscar. 1993 saw the release of The Colour of My Love, her third English album, which has sold over 12 million copies.

Singing movie theme songs seems to be Dion's forte. After the award–winning "Beauty and the Beast," she recorded a much anticipated song, "When I Fall in Love," for the movie Sleepless in Seattle. With her first release from Falling Into You she is once again riding the wave of success. "Because You Loved Me," the theme from the Redford–Pfeiffer film Up Close and Personal has already reached number one.

Falling Into You is one of the best English albums that Dion has recorded. Although not apt to surpass the sales of some of her previous works, this album has a certain maturity that her other albums lacked. Her songs are more bluesy and emotional, and though they may not have the pop appeal as some of her prior hits, they are better sounding and better written.

The best song off the album is the first track. "It's All Coming Back to Me Now," a seven–and–a–half minute reminder of how fantastic Dion really is. Here she recounts beautifully all the feelings about a reconciled relationship that everyone has experienced at one time or another. With lyrics like, "When you touch me like this/ And when you hold me like that/ It was gone with the wind/ But it's all coming back to me," the song gives hope to all prowess.

Classic songs such as "Look Around," "Bad Seeds," "Honey Pot" and "Let's Kiss" on Beat Happening are filled with simple but sweet pop tunes that are unrivalled in the underground music scene.

Over the past decade Beat Happening's influence has criss– crossed the world more times than the QEII. Lead singer Calvin Johnson formed K to release records by his own band and other international pop stars such as the Cannanes, Vaselines and many more.

While three tracks are missing from 1983–85, the reissue contains excellent packaging far surpassing the original release. Many old photos of the band are included as well as copies of flyers for early show. Can you imagine Beat Happening performing with Black Flag? Overall this reissue sums up brilliantly a vibrant stage in one of America's most important underground pop bands. A (Mike Burke)

DOWN BY LAW
All Scratched Up
Epitaph

Down By Law's last album Punkrockacademyfightsong featured the band's more aggressive, less melodic side. However, it still relied heavily on the harmonies and melodies that made them famous. Well, All Scratched Up flat out rips. Sure you still have Dave Smalley's incredible vocals and the bands ability to write a catchy tune, but this is hands down their most aggressive album.

The first song on the album, "Independence Day," is a tune about a riot that sets the tone for the rest of this album. There are still love songs like "Cheap Thrill" and daydream songs like "Far and Away," but that's about as mellow as this album gets. The rest of this album is a full–on tribute to the spirit, anger and energy of youth. The song "True Believers" features the line "You're looking at the kids saying its all junk/Looking at me just another punk/But we're not gonna take it from you no more/You say it's all stupid, wasting our time/Never saw the reason, never saw the rhyme. But we're not gonna take it from you no more." Those few lines sum up All Scratched Up quite well.

Furthermore, while there is a lot of angst on this album, Down By Law has not forgotten that good music helps the message, something many of today's bands have forgotten. Every song is tight and well thought out and they are all so damn catchy. "Radio Ragga" shows Down By Law's experimental side as it incorporates a reggae beat reminiscent of the Bad Brains.

This album is what great hardcore/punk is supposed to be about — catchy songs with lyrics the listener can relate to and sing along to. This is a tribute to youth and positive energy and what one can achieve with an optimistic outlook. A (Adam Dlugacz)

STABBING WESTWARD
Wither Blister Burn & Peel
Columbia

Stabbing Westward has followed up their promising debut, Ungod, with a sleight in focus, from outward to inward hate on Wither Blister Burn & Peel. Although lyrically maturing through emotions of wallowing and insecurity, the accompanying music appears as simply regurgitated drum sounds and synth beats. Once again, producer John Fryer (Nine Inch Nails, Love and Rockets) descends into the studio and his influence hangs like a dark mist above the music.

In fact, one might believe that Trent Reznor himself has somehow squeezed his fist into the album, disguised in lyrics such as, "...Everything's broken — Why does it seem this life's turned gray?," "Nothing can hurt me here" and "What have I become? Everything's undone."

Singer/ songwriter Chris Hall writhes painfully through songs which are just too thin to allow him to grasp the intensity his lyrics deserve. His vocals hauntingly swim through songs on which the band seems uninspired. Many of the songs start out with a certain softness, given its eerie shape by Hall's equally gentle vocals, only to reach the inevitable climax during refrains, over which his voice seems to be reaching for an anger. Yet, none of this is done effectively. Uninteresting guitars usually enter loudly, yet restrained in creativity.

The peaks on this album include the popular single, "What Do I Have To Do," the echoing lyrics of "Why," as well as the snarling guitar in "Falls Apart." Also, Hall leaves his perpetual state of lament and helpfulness to explore sexual abuse in "Sleep," and seeps gently through your skin in "Inside You." However, the musical formula changes very little, and when it does, the changes mid–song seem almost unnatural. Overall, 46 minutes of sound blend together, through your ears and out again, leaving a slight feeling of frustration as you think of what Stabbing Westward could have accomplished here. C+ (matt leonard)

Jones finds truth in A Family Thing

By Kathleen Sampey
Associated Press

NEW YORK — James Earl Jones stands in a New York City hotel suite engrossed in something atop the mantelpiece of the room's fireplace. He hears someone enter and, without looking up, says,

"Hello."

It's the voice that welcomes people to Bell Atlantic.

It is a commanding, but not unfriendly voice and becomes less intimidating when followed by his broad smile and outstretched hand.

Dressed in black slacks and matching blazer with a blue buttoned–down shirt open at the neck, he settles his 6–foot–1 1/2 frame into a too–soft chair to talk about his new movie.

A Family Thing is the story of a white man, played by Robert Duvall, who discovers he has a black half–brother named Ray Murdock, played by Jones.

"He's a simple guy, you know," Jones says of Murdock. "I'm not often asked to do something with this simplicity."

His voice has dropped to just above a whisper and stays that way for most of the interview.

Murdock is a Chicago cop slouching toward retirement. When Duvall's character confronts him, both men are shaken from what they thought was the ordinariness of their lives. From there, the story unfolds, not as a study in race relations, Jones says, but as the study of a family going through a search for its identity.

"You're raised to think of yourself as one thing, and you realize that's not what you are," he said of the story.

"Race doesn't define the characters in the story. What's interesting about the story is that people discover what they are aside from being black or white."

Smiling he adds, "We are who we are for much more interesting reasons than our color."

As for Jones, his ubiquitous and instantly recognizable voice is how millions of people define him. But even that isn't what it seems.

When audiences see A Family Thing, they'll notice Jones' character stuttering. It's not a put on.

"It's something that I've fought very hard against for years," Jones explains of the stutter that has been his companion all his life. "But it's not difficult to let it go. Let it happen."

Born in Arkabutla, Miss., in 1931, Jones' parents split before he was born. His maternal grandparents reared him and when they eventually moved to Michigan, Jones says his stuttering began. He was about 5.

He describes his being uprooted from Mississippi as no less than traumatic. "I remember leaving that place forever," Jones says.

scorned lovers everywhere.

Dion also does two covers: "River Deep, Mountain High," and the '70s super hit "All By Myself." Although not many singers can capture the sappy emotion Eric Carmen projects, Dion does a great job paying homage to the king of cheesy ballads.

Falling Into You is sure to achieve notoriety throughout the world, as all of her previous English albums have. It is everything that her fans expected and more. She hasn't compromised her self musically in order to achieve number one hits with this album — she has proven that she can do that regardless. Once again Dion shown that she is a diva of her genre and that she is here to stay. A

Casale testified Wednesday that one of the callers was Lange's probation officer. Lange had been on probation for an assault six years ago, Ballard said. He was five days away from finishing his five-year probation when the incident occurred, Ballard said.

After Lange was identified from the photograph, Casale went to the office where Lange was working and found the office decorated with enlarged pictures of Lange throwing the snowball. But Lange was not there.

Casale later arrested Lange at his house and drove him to the state police office at the Meadowlands for processing. During the ride, Lange offered that he was guilty, Casale said.

"He said, 'Sorry for causing you so much trouble. I didn't think throwing snowballs on the field was any big deal, but everyone was doing it,'" Casale said.

Though Lange did not receive a jail sentence for the offense, Ballard said, he likely will be charged with violating his parole. Lange had been fired from his job shortly after he was arrested and he remained unemployed for months, Ballard said. He found a new job last week as a franchise manager, Ballard said. He declined to be more specific.

Thomas–Malone not seeing eye–to–eye

TORONTO (AP) — General manager Isiah Thomas took to the airwaves Wednesday, launching a public relations offensive designed to quiet the Toronto Raptors' front-office controversy.

Thomas and head coach Brendan Malone have engaged in a week-long public soap opera over how much playing time Malone gives his starters and how little he uses his bench.

Based on his comments on two local radio stations, Malone's job remains in jeopardy if he doesn't begin seeing eye-to-eye with the GM.

"At the end of the season, we'll see if we can get back on the same page," Thomas said on The Fan, a local all-sports radio station. "If we can't, then we'll have to do what's best for the future of the franchise."

The rift reached a peak when Malone responded to Thomas's request by playing his bench more than his starters in Friday's blowout loss to Orlando. On Sunday, he stuck mainly with six players in a tight loss to the Lakers.

A happy medium might have been reached Tuesday in the Raptors' 104-103 overtime win over the Los Angeles Clippers.

The Thomas-Malone struggle has been going on behind the scenes for much of this season. It came to the fore this week when rookie star Damon Stoudamire was sidelined with tendinitis in his knee. Malone's philosophy of playing his best available players has earned Toronto 19 wins, eight more than the expansion-cousin Vancouver Grizzlies.

The Raptors have earned a gritty reputation and have raised expectations about being a playoff team in a year or two.

"I think we're a victim of growth, our expansion process has grown faster than expected," said Thomas.

For now, with playoff hopes vanquished, Thomas doesn't see the point in risking serious injury to those that will form the nucleus of the 1997 Raptors.

And he wants young players, such as point guard Jimmy King, to get more playing time so they can be evaluated.

"At this time of the season, you look at your bench and try to see if these guys can play," said Thomas. "There's enough time till the end of the season that we can evaluate them."

Thomas's struggle on the fan phone-in shows was to convince the fans that playing a weaker lineup and losing now will pay off down the road.

Noting on CFRB — the Raptor's flagship station — that ticket prices will probably rise every year, Thomas rhetorically asked one caller: "Do you want to pay higher prices and still have the team win 19, or 18, or 16 games?"

When one Malone supporter pointed out the coach was as much responsible for Stoudamire's rookie-of-the-year candidacy and the late-season blooming of Tracy Murray and Carlos Rogers, Thomas agreed and added that was his point about players like King and Dwayne Whitfield.

"Expansion is about long term. You must be able to prepare long term. We need to find out where they fit in this league," said Thomas. "You find out if they can or can't play.

"All of a sudden they get playing time and you find out, guess what, you've got a budding star on your hands.

"Let's see if they can play or they can't."

Wright Released

CEDAR GROVE, N.J. (AP) — Former Seton Hall and NBA basketball player Luther Wright has returned home after being institutionalized for a month as a psychiatric patient.

Wright was released Tuesday from the Essex County Hospital Center, where he was being treated for manic depression.

The decision was made after Wright spent weekends at home and faithfully took medication, said his agent Sal DiFazio.

"Hopefully, the medical regimen will work better for him than some of those that have been tried in the past. God willing, he'll get healthy," DiFazio said.

The 7-foot-2 inch Wright, 24, was a star basketball player at Elizabeth High School and played for Seton Hall University. He left after his sophomore year and was chosen in the first round of the 1993 NBA draft by Utah.

But he was diagnosed with bipolar disorder and cut from the team nine months later.

Wright has been committed to mental hospitals at least three times since he turned professional.

DiFazio said that under the terms of his contract settlement with the Jazz, Wright will be paid $153,000 a year for 25 years. He said Wright, who now lives with his mother and younger sister in Irvington, has not decided what to do with his life.

"Basketball is really secondary right now. The more important thing is to cure the body, cure the mind, the let him make the decision as to what he wants to do," DiFazio said.

McNair arrested for animal cruelty

EAST GREENWICH TOWNSHIP, N.J. (AP) — Todd McNair of the Houston Oilers has been charged with mistreating 22 pit bulls seized at his property where authorities say the animals were being trained for dogfights.

McNair, 30, was arrested Tuesday on cruelty-to-animal charges and released from the Gloucester County Jail in Woodbury after posting $10,000 bail.

The arrest followed an investigation prompted by the local Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, township police Lt. Scott Goess said. The dogs were chained at a vacant property owned by McNair, he said.

Neighbors reported hearing dogs barking and crying and seeing puppies and adult dogs in cages filled with dog feces. Goess said all the animals were in poor condition and one dog had a broken leg.

The pit bulls — 17 adult dogs and five puppies — were taken to a county animal shelter in Clayton, police said. All the dogs had scars on their heads and faces and many appeared to be malnourished and nursed fresh, bleeding wounds, authorities said.

"It was the worst case of cruelty to animals I've ever seen," Goess said Wednesday. "It was disgraceful."

The dogs were chained to trees with heavy chains used to tow cars, Goess said. Police also found equipment apparently used to train the dogs for fighting, he said.

Goess said police did not know that McNair owned the property or the dogs until he contacted the animal shelter to get the dogs back Tuesday. McNair was charged with some 81 offenses involving cruelty to animals.

The most serious charge against McNair is a criminal complaint for possessing pit bulls for the purpose of fighting, Goess said. If convicted, he could face a $7,500 fine and 3-5 years in prison, he said.

McNair, who has addresses in Paulsboro and Voorhees, could not be reached Wednesday. His lawyer did not return telephone calls seeking comment.

The 6-foot-1, 202-pound McNair, a running back, graduated from Temple and played for the Kansas City Chiefs from 1989 to 1993. He joined the Oilers in 1994.

Autry wins case

CHICAGO (AP) — A judge on Wednesday ruled that running back Darnell Autry can take an unpaid movie part this summer in Italy over the objections of the NCAA.

Cook County Circuit Judge Thomas P. Durkin sided with the Northwestern sophomore and theater student, who has been offered an unpaid part in two scenes of a supernatural thriller called "The 18th Angel," scheduled for filming this summer in Italy.

NCAA officials were considering an appeal late Wednesday afternoon, and one of Autry's lawyers, Peter Rush, said there could still be risks if the rushing star accepts the role.

"I will advise my client of risks and rewards, and Darnell Autry will have to make that decision," Rush said in a telephone interview.

Durkin has scheduled a hearing for April 10 on converting his temporary injunction against the NCAA into a permanent one. NCAA rules bar athletes from appearing in commercial films and NCAA spokeswoman Kathryn Reith said Wednesday from her Overland Park, Kan., office that if Autry is found in violation, penalties could range from him losing his two years of eligibility to a one-game suspension.

"We want to enforce the rules," said Bedell Tippins, a lawyer representing the NCAA. "There are 11,000 or 12,000 member schools who like to see some consistency in the application of the rules and not a carved out, isolated exception of the rules."

Northwestern has tried since January to convince the NCAA to let Autry act in the movie.

On Tuesday, Autry, 19, sued the NCAA, pressing for a decision before Saturday's deadline for him accepting the role.

"We want Darnell to do what every other student can do — pursue his major," said Mike Abernathy, another lawyer for Autry. Autry rushed for 100 yards or more in every game last season, and led perennial Big Ten doormat Northwestern to a 10-1 season and a berth in the Rose Bowl.

The movie's director, William Binkley, planned to pay Autry's travel expenses and other costs but would not pay him for acting.

Caminiti homers in Padres' win, Astros beat LA

Padres 7, Cubs 5

CHICAGO (AP) — The wind was blowing in at 15 mph. It didn't matter to Ken Caminiti, who drove a three-run homer over the right-field fence and clear out of Wrigley Field.

Caminiti later added a fourth RBI Wednesday as the San Diego Padres rebounded from a tough opening-day loss for a 7-5 victory over the Chicago Cubs.

"Caminiti's strong," Padres manager Bruce Bochy said. "He can turn the wind around."

The wind was no friend to Chicago's Ryne Sandberg, helping push his long drive foul in the third inning. That was part of a frustrating day for Sandberg, who was 0-for-5 with three strikeouts. After coming out of retirement, he is hitless in eight at-bats.

"You don't start pressing," said the 10-time All-Star second baseman, a notorious slow starter before he retired in June 1994. "You just work on things and make them better."

Things have been good for Caminiti since he joined the Padres before last season. After leading them in homers by a wide margin with 26, it was appropriate that he'd hit their first home run of 1996. Brad Ausmus followed Caminiti's third-inning homer with a solo shot. Wally Joyner also hit one out for the Padres, who were coming off Monday's 10-inning loss to Chicago.

"This is a funny field. The wind can blow in but the ball can still carry," Caminiti said. "Early in my career, I'd come in here with the wind blowing in and I'd hit three to the warning track. The wind would blow out and I'd hit four ground balls."

The Padres didn't only play long-ball. They got four singles from Tony Gwynn — his 27th four-hit game — and five solid innings from Joey Hamilton, who was questionable right up until game time with a stiff neck.

"The first two or three innings weren't bad. Then it started tightening up," said Hamilton, who had a one-hit shutout through four innings before giving up three runs on three hits in the fifth. "By the fifth, I couldn't even see the plate. I couldn't turn my head far enough."

Hamilton allowed four hits in five innings for his first win since Aug. 19. A career .075 batter, he also drove in the first run with a second-inning single.

Trevor Hoffman, the loser in Monday's game, retired all four batters he faced — striking out three — for the save.

"It's nice to get that first win," Bochy said. "The club is very confident, but getting the first one out of the way helps you relax."

In the third, Cubs starter Frank Castillo walked Steve Finley and then was hit in the foot by Gwynn's line single. The game was delayed for a few minutes while Castillo walked off the pain. When play resumed, Caminiti hit Castillo's next pitch out of the park. One out later, Ausmus homered.

"I felt fine. I just had bad location on the next few hitters," Castillo said. "I was wild in the strike zone all day. You have to keep the ball down or you're in trouble."

Joyner's homer off Larry Casian was his first off a left-hander since May 1, 1994. It also was his first in the NL after hitting 158 in 10 years for California and Kansas City. Chicago made it 6-3 in the fifth off Hamilton on Brian McRae's double, Mark Grace's RBI single and Sammy Sosa's first homer of the season. Sosa had 36 home runs last year, tied for second in the NL.

Caminiti hustled for an RBI in the seventh, beating Sandberg's relay on what appeared to be a double-play grounder. The Cubs scored twice in the eighth off of Scott Sanders. Scott Servais homered for the second straight game, and McRae had an RBI single.

Astros 5, Dodgers 2

HOUSTON (AP) — Fans came to see Hideo Nomo and left talking about Mike Hampton. And Nomo wasn't talking at all.

Hampton outpitched the 1995 Rookie of the Year and Derek Bell drove in two runs as the Houston Astros defeated the Los Angeles Dodgers 5-2 Wednesday.

Nomo, 13-6 and the starting pitcher for the NL All-Stars last season, allowed seven hits and struck out two in taking the loss before leaving the game in the fifth inning.

Then, he declined to talk about his outing, shunning the media, including his following of 80 Japanese credentialed media for the game because he said they distracted him when he warmed up on Tuesday.

Interpreter Michael Okumura explained "He has some kind of compromise with the Japanese media. They promise not to take bullpen pictures or behind home plate. He doesn't want to see cameras when he's pitching."

Okumura said the agreement had been violated and that Nomo declined to speak in protest.

"He wants you to understand he's terribly sorry that the American people won't get to hear his thoughts," Okumura said. "But when he comes back (to Houston) in July he'll have a big press conference."

Hampton shut out the Dodgers for six innings while Nomo fought wildness from the start and left the game in the fifth after consecutive doubles by Jeff Bagwell and Bell and a single to Sean Berry produced two runs.

Meanwhile, Hampton kept the Astros in the game.

"That's why you don't get carried away about what you see in spring training," Astros manager Terry Collins said. "He (Hampton) didn't have a good spring but he was good out there today."

Hampton had a shutout until Billy Ashley and Greg Gagne hit back-to-back homers with one out in the seventh. Hampton then struck out Roger Cedeno and Delino DeShields to escape more damage. He allowed nine hits, struck out six and did not walk a batter.

"He'd only thrown 75 pitches and I thought he still had something left," Collins said of his decision to let Hampton finish the seventh. "He settled down and got out of it." Hampton was ready to pitch.

"Spring training doesn't mean anything but this was for real and I was ready," Hampton said.

Todd Jones pitched the ninth to get the save.

Brian Hunter, who scored the go-ahead run in Tuesday night's 5-4 victory, led off Houston's third with a single. He went to second on Craig Biggio's hit, took third when Bagwell walked and scored on Bell's grounder.

The Astros went ahead 2-0 in the fourth. James Mouton walked, stole second and took third on catcher Mike Piazza's throwing error. Orlando Miller drove in Mouton with a single.

Hampton escaped the fifth in dramatic fashion. Mike Blowers, Ashley and Gagne started the inning with consecutive singles to load the bases.

Nomo, the next batter, bounced a grounder to Hampton, who forced Blowers at home and catcher Tony Eusebio threw out Nomo for the double play at first base. Hampton got Delino DeShields on a called third strike to end the inning.

"That was huge for him," Collins said. "He didn't get out of his game plan. He made quality pitches. When you're in the middle of the Dodgers' lineup you've got to make quality pitches."

Twins 16, Tigers 7

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — In a series that featured a stolen base by Cecil Fielder and Kirby Puckett on the disabled list for the first time, the Minnesota Twins' biggest offensive day in 20 months seemed almost routine.

Ron Coomer, Roberto Kelly and Mike Durant, three Twins playing their first games of the season, combined for seven hits and seven RBIs in a 16-7 victory Wednesday over the Detroit Tigers. The Tigers made it easier for Minnesota with three errors, leading to six unearned runs as the Twins scored 14 consecutive times.

"If you like to see the ball go around a little bit and see some crazy things happen, you got it," said Twins manager Tom Kelly.

Coomer had three hits and three RBIs to help Minnesota win its first series of 1996. The Twins, who needed nearly two months to win their first series last season, did it with Puckett and three other players on the disabled list.

They also did it even though Fielder returned to his more familiar role as slugger with a three-run homer in Detroit's six-run third inning. That put Detroit ahead 6-2, but it didn't last long.

A three-run triple by loser Scott Aldred on what might have been an inning-ending double play helped the Twins to five runs in the bottom half, and third baseman Travis Fryman and left fielder Melvin Nieves committed errors in Minnesota's six-run fourth. "We'll take all the breaks we can get," said Durant, a catcher who had three hits, an RBI and two runs scored in his major league debut. "Nobody can control injuries or anything that's happening off the field, but we can control how we play."

lege if he was going to be among the top selections in the June draft. Even though there were no assurances he would be taken among the top five picks, the information Cremins was able to obtain indicated the 6-foot-2 star would go early enough.

Marbury was selected rookie of the year in the Atlantic Coast Conference after averaging 18.9 points and 4.5 assists for the Yellow Jackets, who returned to the NCAA tournament this season after a two-year absence. They reached the round of 16 before losing to Cincinnati.

Marbury has three older brothers who played college basketball. His younger brother, Zach, just completed his sophomore season at Lincoln, the same high school Stephon led to the New York City Public School championship.

The news conference started 40 minutes late as Marbury refused to begin without his mother, Mabel, present. She was stuck in traffic in Brooklyn.

"I think my mother wanted me to stay," he said. "She's always looked at me as her baby and it's hard for her to think I went from high school to the NBA in one year."

Underclassmen have until May 12 to announce their intention of entering the draft. Marbury joins sophomore Lorenzen Wright of Memphis and juniors Ronnie Henderson of LSU and Darnell Robinson of Arkansas as those who have declared.

Minutewomen down Vermont; set to play CCSU

MASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Senior Amy Powell has been solid at second base for the Minutewomen and has also been hitting the ball with authority lately, smacking the first two dingers of her career last weekend.

By Fred Hurlbrink, Jr.
Collegian Staff

The weather in Vermont was downright cold Tuesday afternoon, and as a result, the second game of a twin bill between the Lady Catamounts and the Massachusetts Minutewomen softballers was called after three innings due to a 19-degree wind chill and darkness.

They were able to get the first contest in the record books, but the Massachusetts gloves were just as cold as the weather as the Minutewomen recorded seven errors (three by injured freshman Ashlie Hayes) in their unsightly 8-5 extra-inning victory.

"The cold was a great equalizer," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said. "I was very, very pleased. We just kept clawing our way back into it. It seemed like every time we did something good, [something bad happened]."

For example, in the top of the seventh Stephanie Mareina led off with a quick single but was called out for leaving the base too soon, leaving the bases empty with the top three Minutewoman sluggers coming up.

"[Stephanie] hasn't ever been called out for that — she's a junior," Sortino said.

The Minutewomen overcame the cold weather and some bad umpiring to put three runs on the board in the top of the eighth inning to pull out a victory in the back-and-forth contest.

A win is a win, but the expected and tolerable, early season sloppy play has not subsided, and could prove to be costly as the conference portion of the schedule nears.

"It's hard not to have errors in a game like that," Sortino said. "I'm not concerned at all. I think our defense is good, but if we have a game like that against UConn, they'll beat us."

Amy Powell, senior captain and defensive stronghold at second base, has been on an offensive tear of late. In her last three games she is batting at a .400 clip (4-for-10) with a pair of home runs and seven ribbies, raising her slugging percentage from .404 to .507.

"She's swinging the bat as well as she's swung it in the four years that she has been here," Sortino said. "You can see it in the way she's carrying herself."

A midfielder on the UMass women's soccer team, Powell is the fourth-leading fielder among Minutewomen regulars and is currently fifth in batting at .313. She leads Massachusetts with 19 runs batted in on the spring.

Sam Cardenas, Sortino's lead-off hitter, looks to be slowly coming out of her prolonged slump. She is 4-for-12 in her last three contests, raising her average to a still sub-standard .233.

Cardenas, along with Kelly Buckley and Chris Martens, were in the cage behind Totman for a little extra batting practice yesterday afternoon.

"[Sam] can hit the ball. She's got a great swing. She can hit a single, a double, a triple, or she can hit it out. That's a great lead-off hitter to have," Sortino said.

Sophomore Kim Gutridge, who had a key RBI single in the game-winning rally, continues to lead the team in batting with a .382 mark. The native of LaMiranda, Calif., is also pacing the team with 47 total bases, 10 doubles and a .528 slugging percentage.

Sneaking up on Gutridge on the team batting list is talented freshman Amanda Galas. Batting in the lower part of the lineup, she has thus far posted a .348 batting average — good for second on the squad — and has crossed the plate a team-best 19 times. Galas is also quickly approaching the Minutewoman mark for thefts in a season. She's already fourth on the all-time single season list with 14 stolen bases in 15 attempts, closing in on teammate Tracey Osier's record of 22 steals set last season.

The pitching was again strong as Liz Wagner went the distance, allowing one earned run on five hits while lowering her ERA to 1.36, earning her eighth win of the campaign.

Wagner is likely to be on the hill as Massachusetts travels down Rte. 91 for a double dip with Central Connecticut this afternoon at 2 p.m.

Men's tennis team drops Huskies

By Michael J. Nam
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts men's tennis team (1-5) fought for what could possibly be the best win of the season yesterday defeating Northeastern 4-3 in its first game home back from Florida.

The Minutemen were close to losing to the favored Huskies but following the disappointing doubles matches, the players led by the charge of senior co-captain Justin Lynn turned it around, as they won the next four out of five singles matches.

"After losing the doubles I thought we were in trouble," UMass coach Jim Dixon said. "I gathered everyone around and asked them 'Are you really ready to give up?'"

Apparently they weren't. After losing handily to the powerful Northeastern No. 1 and No. 2 doubles team of Sharad Koali and Dragu Milosevic, both Lynn and his partner Alex Aller went on to win their respective singles matches.

Lynn's feat was particularly impressive beating Koali in three sets 4-6, 6-3, 6-0. "He plays to win every day," Dixon said of the senior. "He would never have been expected to beat [Koali], but he plays intelligent. He plays with a big heart and he makes the other guy beat him."

Senior co-captain Darren Tow fought the other half of the Northeastern duo, Milisesic, but lost in two sets. Jason Blind, a freshmen, lost the other singles match. However the No. 4, 5 and 6 players, Todd Cheney, Aller and Mark Huckins, all won their matches to close out the win.

"We've particularly been strong this season in the four, five, and six spots," UMass assistant coach Doug Knuth said. "Our strategy was to win the doubles, and hopefully our guys would win three of the singles matches."

As that strategy did not happen the heart of the team showed through. The team is made up of only two seniors — the co-captains. The rest of the team contains three freshmen and two sophomores. The program itself is young after being re-instated only three years ago.

"They really have matured over the last few months," Dixon proudly said. "This is a game you thought we might win next year — not now, but these guys pulled together."

After going 8-1 during a weak fall schedule, this spring was rough with the team going 2-4 before yesterday's game. This win assures the team now of finishing over the .500 mark for the first time under Dixon.

"We lost to a strong Colgate team, which Northeastern beat, but with this win we are still ahead of our goal," Dixon said. "This is the finest victory in men's tennis since I've been here."

It's official: NBA next for Marbury

By Jim O'Connell
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Stephon Marbury made it official Wednesday night: One year of college basketball was enough to prepare him for the NBA.

After one season at Georgia Tech, the 19-year-old guard said he had signed with an agent and would make himself available for the NBA draft.

During a news conference at Junior's, a Brooklyn restaurant famed for its cheesecake, one of which was named for him, Marbury made the announcement surrounded by family, friends and his college coach, Bobby Cremins.

"I've always worked hard for this. I've always watched the NBA growing up. I always watched Michael Jordan and Magic Johnson and I said I could be playing on the court with them. Next year, I will be," Marbury said. "Opportunity is knocking and I have to take advantage of that."

Marbury said left no doubt that he won't be coming back to Georgia Tech.

"I don't want to prolong it. I have signed with an agent," who he identified as Eric Fleischer.

"I am putting everything behind me and focusing only on the NBA."

Marbury had said as far back as November that he would leave col-

Women's tennis faces UConn

By Mike Corey
Collegian Staff

Lately the Massachusetts women's tennis team has had two opponents — the team it's playing and the weather.

Last time the Minutewomen went down to Connecticut, last Wednesday in 30-degree weather, they beat the Huskies 6-1.

Today they will head down to the Constitution State again, this time playing Fairfield. If this match is played outdoors with the type of wind that the Minutewomen have been battling all week in practice, it could be very interesting.

However if the weather is too unbearable, this match will be played indoors in Milford, CT. Fairfield is in the process of constructing an indoor facility, something the UMass tennis association hopes will happen at UMass as well.

The Minutewomen have not played Fairfield in two years, as their match with them last year was cancelled due to rain.

"They're rebuilding their program. They have an excellent coach and they are a fairly deep team," UMass coach Judy Dixon said. "I expect them to be some trouble for us because I think that Fairfield is the kind of program right now where they're in a rebuilding posture, and because of that we could take them lightly. They would be the kind of team that could have a good day against us."

For Fairfield to do that though it would have to ruin the undefeated streaks of singles players senior Liesl Sitton and junior Liz Durant, who have only been accustomed to having good days. They each have handily won all three of their respective singles matches they have played this spring.

Doubles is a very strong area for the Minutewomen as well, as the No. 1 duo of Sitton and Caroline Steele, and the No. 3 team of Marie-Christine Caron and Lana Goredetskaya, have won all four of their doubles matches. The Minutewomen as a team have won 11 out of 12 doubles matches this spring.

"Three years ago, we would go into matches always being the underdog," Dixon said. "Now we go into the matches expecting to win, or at least being favored to win, in a lot of cases. One of the things I've had to teach this team is, now that the expectation is higher, they can't let down. There can be no slipups."

Fairfield comes into this match off its only loss of the spring season, 7-2 to the hands of Columbia. The team has compiled a very impressive record so far which stands at 8-1, including four shutouts of 9-0 over Siena, Manhattan, St. Peter's and Iona.

No. 2 singles player Maureen Canuso, a sophomore, is 8-1, as well as No. 4 player Kathleen Haley, a senior. The two's only losses have come to the hands of Columbia.

Fairfield has scored 64 points compared to their opponents 16, and have never let up more than two points in a match except twice. It gave up three against Bucknell and seven points in the loss to Columbia.

The Minutewomen should have a fairly competitive match on their hands this afternoon.

"We have to be mentally tougher. We have to play with confidence and play aggressively," Dixon said. "We've been working on movement, concentration, and also, a lot and lot of doubles work."

UMass has pounded the competition so far this spring en route to a perfect 4-0 record, 13-1 overall from last fall. The Minutewomen have scored a total of 21 points in the victories while only giving up four.

Giants' snowballer convicted and fined

By Ravi Nessman
Associated Press

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — The man photographed tossing snowballs during a New York Giants game in December was convicted Wednesday of improper behavior.

Jeffrey Lange, who became a national symbol of boorish fan behavior, was fined $500 and forced to pay another $150 in court fees and other costs.

Lange's attorney, Robert Ballard Jr., said his client may appeal the ruling by Municipal Court Judge George Savino.

Ballard said the Giants and officials from the New Jersey Sports and Exposition Authority, which runs the stadium, had singled out Lange from the thousands of snowball throwers.

"He's a scapegoat," Ballard said. "He's the guy they wanted. They got him. They're happy."

Lange, 26, of Readington is preparing to sue the sports authority for ruining his life, Ballard said.

In a nearly three-hour trial, Ballard argued Lange's behavior was not criminal and the sports authority wanted him prosecuted because he became the focal point of an unruly situation.

"But for the fact Jeffrey Lange was photogenic and published in a newspaper, Jeffrey Lange would not be here," Ballard said. The lawyer's arguments did not sway Savino.

"There's not a doubt in my mind that the defendant's guilty," Savino said in delivering his verdict.

Lange was one of thousands of fans involved in a sometimes vicious snowball fight that almost caused the Giants to forfeit a game to the San Diego Chargers on Dec. 23.

Fifteen people were arrested and 175 people were ejected from Giants Stadium for throwing snowballs during the barrage that left 15 people injured. The Chargers equipment manager was knocked unconscious by a snowball.

Richard Ryan, director of security for the sports authority, testified Wednesday the melee was a disgrace.

"There were numerous people throwing snowballs. So numerous it was out of control," he said. "It was physically impossible to apprehend everyone who was throwing a snowball that day." An Associated Press photograph published in numerous newspapers showed Lange at the game throwing a snowball.

Giants officials had offered a $1,000 reward for the first person to identify Lange from the photograph.

About 15 people called the team to identify Lange, Giants officials said. State Police Detective Donald

Unabomber suspect arrested; bomb components found

By Nicholas K. Geranios
Associated Press

HELENA, Mont. — Investigators found a partially assembled pipe bomb, chemicals and meticulous notes on making explosives in the mountain cabin of the former Berkeley math professor suspected of being the Unabomber, federal officials said Thursday.

Theodore John Kaczynski, 53, was charged Thursday with possessing the bomb components and was held without bail. Appearing before a judge, Kaczynski, bearded and thin, said he was mentally competent and couldn't afford his own lawyer.

The charge made no mention of the Unabomber's string of bombing attacks, which killed three people and injured 23 in 18 years. Federal officials said the charge was designed to hold Kaczynski while agents build a case.

The FBI again searched Kaczynski's hand-built, 10-by-12-foot cabin Thursday. Federal officials said the search could last several days.

"It's going very slowly because we're not sure if it's booby-trapped," said a federal agent speaking on condition of anonymity. "We have an explosives ordnance team X-raying everything before we touch it."

The cabin has no electricity or no running water, which would appear to match the Unabomber's aversion to modern society and technology.

FBI agents had been staking out Kaczynski's cabin near the Continental Divide for several weeks, ever since his own mother and brother in the Chicago area notified authorities that they had stumbled across some of his old writings while cleaning out the house they were putting up for sale and found them similar to the Unabomber's anarchist manifestos.

Kaczynski was taken into custody by federal agents Wednesday so they could search his cabin in the wilderness 50 miles northwest of Helena.

A key question went unanswered: How could Kaczynski, described by neighbors as going everywhere on foot or on an old bicycle, have mailed bombs from locations including San Francisco, Oakland, Calif., Sacramento, Calif. and Chicago? Other bombs were left in cities around the country.

Dick Lundberg, a neighbor, said he sometimes gave Kaczynski rides into Helena. Plane connections were available there. Asked about the possibility of accomplices, one federal agent said: "This guy is a loner. He wouldn't work with someone else." FBI and Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms agents found a partially completed pipe bomb in the loft at Kaczynski's cabin, according to an affidavit by FBI agent Donald J. Sachtleben. Ten three-ring binders were recovered filled with "page after page of meticulous writings and sketches which I recognize to be diagrams of explosive devices," Sachtleben said. The diagrams show cross-sections of pipe bombs and electrical circuitry.

In addition, agents found galvanized metal, copper and plastic pipes, four of them with copper plates sealing one end, "one of the first steps in the construction of a pipe bomb," Sachtleben said.

Rescuers shift focus; searching for causes

By Tony Smith
Associated Press

DUBROVNIK, Croatia — Investigators turned Thursday to unraveling the final minutes of Commerce Secretary Ron Brown's flight and the reason it crashed near this Dalmatian port, killing all 35 people aboard.

Defense Secretary William Perry said initial speculation focused on faulty instrumentation. But many questions remained a day after the jet clipped a barren hill in a raging rainstorm and crashed about two miles short of Dubrovnik's Cilipi Airport.

Why was the plane off course? Why did rescue efforts erroneously focus at first on the waters of the Adriatic Sea? Could Croatian, NATO and U.S. rescuers have reached the site any faster?

Even the number of victims was uncertain until more than 24 hours after the crash. Initial reports from Washington said 33 people were on board, but the State Department listed 35 victims Thursday — all Americans except for one Bosnian and a Croat. "In travel in this part of the world, and in these conditions, you don't always get a good (passenger) manifest," the U.S. Ambassador to Croatia, Peter Galbraith, told a news conference. Brown, accompanied by Commerce Department staff members and business executives, left the Bosnian city of Tuzla on Wednesday afternoon for what should have been a short 130-mile flight south to the Croatian coast.

In Tuzla, he had visited U.S. soldiers serving with the Bosnian peace mission, passing out fast-food and sports videos. He was to have visited the Bosnian capital of Sarajevo and the Croatian capital of Zagreb on the trip.

Officials in both capitals had eagerly anticipated Brown's visit for the possible U.S. investment it could bring to their war-battered economies.

"I am not sure we can overcome the loss of Mr. Brown," said Bosnian Prime Minister Hasan Muratovic, who had been expecting to meet the commerce secretary Thursday in Sarajevo.

Instead, U.S. investigators were arriving to try to determine what caused the T-43, the U.S. military version of a Boeing 737, to crash into the hill, known locally as Svett Ivan, or Saint John. The bodies began arriving Thursday at a makeshift morgue set up at the airport. Army Brig. Gen. Michael Canavan and search-and-rescue team members arrived at the crash site before dawn Thursday, and by afternoon there were about 50 members at the site, according to a military spokesman in Germany.

The White House said Canavan identified Brown's body.

Air Force Brig. Gen. Charles H. Coolidge, Jr., was scheduled to arrive on Friday to lead another investigation team.

Their effort may be hampered by the absence of voice and data recorders, the "black boxes" required on commercial flights. The Air Force said the T-43 did not have them.

Galbraith said he could not speculate on what caused the crash, but cited a driving rain and wind storm, and the plane's course. "The plane was not where it should have been," Galbraith said. That buttressed reports Wednesday from a villager who first spotted the jet and said planes were never heard in the area. The head of Croatia's air traffic control system said the plane had drifted left in its approach to the airport, about 12 miles southeast from the ancient city.

Perry, who used the same plane only days earlier on a Balkan tour, told reporters on his way back to Washington from Egypt that the hill the plane hit was set back, north of the airfield. "It was a classic sort of an accident that good instrumentation should be able to prevent," he said.

Texas convict asks court for castration

RUSK, Texas (AP) — Texas officials can urge a convicted child molester to undergo castration but can't make the surgical procedure a requirement for his getting out of prison, the parole board's chairman said Thursday.

The Texas Board of Pardons and Paroles will make sure Larry Don McQuay knows he is free to get castrated as he wishes, Board Chairman Victor Rodriguez said. He added that people have come forward offering to pay for the procedure and state money would not be used.

"Money does not seem to be a problem," Rodriguez said. "We've got people lining up that would either volunteer services or help pay for them if he wants to pursue this, and we encourage him to."

"I'm glad they are not going to stand in the way," said McQuay, who claims to have molested more than 240 times. "It's something I've been waiting for from the state."

McQuay, awaiting his release from the Skyview psychiatric prison unit near Rusk, repeatedly has sought castration, saying it would help him avoid a repeat of his past crimes.

Rodriguez said despite Attorney General Dan Morales' opinion that the state may allow McQuay to be castrated, the most the state can do is urge him to do so. "But our lawyers are telling us on this that to tie that as a condition of parole release is simply not possible," he said.

Beating victim wants better life for her kids

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Alicia Sotero Vazquez crossed the border from Mexico so her children could have a better life, she said from a hospital bed. After sheriff's deputies clubbed her, she feared for her own.

"I just prayed to God to help me, because I have kids, and my family," Sotero said Wednesday in a tearful interview with TV station KMEX.

Sotero, 32, and Enrique Funes Flores were beaten Monday by two sheriff's deputies after a high-speed chase in a pickup crammed with other Mexicans suspected of sneaking across the border. News helicopters videotaped the chase and beating, and the footage was played repeatedly in the United States and Mexico. Riverside County Sheriff Larry Smith condemned the beatings Wednesday, calling them a shocking use of excessive force. Sotero had worked in a now-closed clothing factory in Mexico to support her daughter, 11, and son, 9. She then worked odd jobs but couldn't make enough money, she said.

"I'm really poor, and that's why I decided to come over here, to get my kids an education because I never had one. I only finished second grade," she said.

SCERA plans phonebanking response

By Jonathan Liberty
Collegian Staff

In response to the Fiscal Year 1997 (FY97) House Ways and Means Committee Budget Proposal, the Student Center for Education and Research Advocacy (SCERA) will be organizing student phonebanking, parent phonebanking and trips to Boston in order to negotiate with House Representatives.

"With the release of this FY97 Budget it is definitely crunch time here at SCERA," said SCERA Director Marc Kenen, "We now need to inform the students about how they can save themselves from higher tuition and fees."

"Students can save themselves at least $275 just by making a simple phone call to a representative," said SCERA Student Coordinator Mike Hass.

Phones will be made available for students to call representatives on April 8 through April 10, 11 a.m. – 2 p.m. outside on the west steps of the Student Union near People's Market.

Although the FY97 Budget proposal restores a $30 million cut from Governor Weld's budget proposal, it leaves Massachusetts's Public Higher Education $30 million short for collective bargaining. That shortage would lead to a $15 million cut to the University of Massachusetts at Amherst.

Because the loss of the $30 million derives from a lack of funding for collective bargaining, SCERA has agreed to support gaining more money for collective bargaining for all of Public Higher Education.

Jason Vecchio, a SCERA member, has been speaking with Representative Ellen Story (D—Amherst) about creating an amendment to add more money for collective bargaining. The amendment is due April 8 at noon. It includes a 10 percent cut off of the top of the total higher education budget.

A $64 million fund would be created from the cut which will then be dispersed by the Higher Education Coordinating Counsel (HECC) to schools with the following criteria: increased amount of teaching, improved efficiency and the elimination of redundant programs.

SCERA is opposed to the 10 percent cut.

Culture events highlight India Night on Sunday

By Lisa Chiu
Collegian Staff

India Night, the annual cultural celebration sponsored by the India Students Association, will be held in the Campus Center Auditorium this at 5:30 p.m. this Sunday.

The event will begin with a lighting of the lamp, which will be performed by Charlena Seymour, dean of the graduate school. This lighting of the lamp will be an opening ceremony to the festivities. The evening will include a fashion show, in which students, both graduate and undergraduate, will be modeling period costumes. According to Sudha, the fashion show will not be a traditional display, it will be a multimedia performance, including slides and music, accompanying students in various historical costumes. The fashion show is entitled, "A walk through the sartorial splendors of India through the ages."

Following the fashion show will be two traditional Indian dances, including a Punjabi dance, and a folk dance. According to Sudha Maheshwari, one of the organizers of the event, there will be two instrumental recitals, a Jugalbandi, or two instruments played together and a Veena, (a stringed instrument). There will also be a short skit and a performance of folk songs and popular film songs.

A dinner will be available for $5, after the cultural events. It will include authentic Indian cuisine, prepared by University of Massachusetts graduate students. The Menu includes Dal Makhani; a lentil soup with cream, Nan; Indian Bread, rice, Alloo Mutter Gobhi; a potato, cheese and cauliflower dish, Raita; a yogurt dish with vegetables, Rasam; Indian soup and for dessert, Firni.

An Indian movie will also be shown after the dinner. This event is free of charge.

According to Maheshwari, it is a fundraiser to raise money for the Indian Students Association. Part of the proceeds will go towards funding a voluntary organization supporting educational services in rural India. Funds will also be used for other cultural events that the Indian Students Association plan throughout the year.

Vamsimohan Pulugurpatu one of the graduate students organizing the event said, "The purpose of this event is to bring together the Indian community to show our culture, and to show Americans what things are like in India."

Prof. delves into history of Easter egg

By Lucy Brinicombe
Collegian Correspondent

Professor John Donnellan of the consumer studies department is considered to be the on-campus expert on the economic factors of Easter. It "really has become a food holiday," he said, "rather than a clothing holiday."

Stores are bombarded with eggs. Eggs of all sorts, ranging from delectable, sweet tasting chocolate, complimented by the optional marshmallow or decorative ones, carefully painted or of most becoming bright plastic. Good boys and girls are assured their efforts at creating a nest will be worthwhile as the Easter bunny will reward them by cunningly laying eggs during a discreet visit. Eggs from bunnies, nests for hares, chocolate eggs, plastic decorative eggs to hang on trees, distant memories of Easter bonnets and parades: despite the strangeness of these customs they seem to be accepted as a very reasonable tradition.

History goes some way in rationalizing Easter weekend traditions, Donnellan said. Common belief is that the Easter bunny was originally a bird. In a rage, the mythical goddess of spring, Eostre, from which the word Easter is thought to derive, transformed the bird into a hare.

Associated to the moon and fertility, it is the hare who is the traditional symbol of Easter, Donnellan said. He assumes it was during German migration to the United States in the mid-18th century that the idea of the Easter bunny emerged. The hare had been misinterpreted and so the hare stepped aside for the bunny to take center stage.

Symbolizing "religious renewal," the wearing of new garments became a common tradition, Donnellan said.

This was augmented by the industrial revolution and the subsequent mass production of clothing with the invention of the sewing machine, Donnellan continued. New clothes were bought. Easter suits and extravagant Easter bonnets were purchased as part of the Easter tradition.

Donnellan drew a parallel between this and the Easter parades — opportunities for the public to display their new attire. However, the popularity of parades dwindled in the 1950s and 1960s.

Donnellan said he believes this is as a result of a decline in church attendance, and a growing disinclination to buy new clothes specifically for the occasion. Casual clothes rather than stylized and ornate clothes became more popular and this anti-fashion sentiment minimized the desire to buy new outfits and uphold the tradition.

The parades and the drive for new clothes have now almost disappeared. The novelty Easter bonnets and the romantic memories of the parades are but remnants of the past as candy in abundance is devoured over the weekend.

"Giving all of the monetary control to HECC for Massachusetts's higher education will only cause competition amongst the schools," said SCERA member Jen Corbet.

Hass said, "Most likely [UMass at Amherst] will not see any of this money. James Carlin, the chairman of HECC, has said that our University is bloated; and that community colleges deserve more funds."

Kenen added that the 10 percent cut will cause problems with budget planning for all schools.

"No one will know exactly how much money they will have for their budgets: $30 million is a large amount of money to depend on."

"Hopefully, Story will also be able to include a rollback of this 10 percent cut into the amendment," Vecchio said.

SCERA members will be going to the State House in Boston on April 8 and 9 to speak directly to representatives to try to gain their support for the amendment being created.

Also, on April 8 through 10, SCERA will be phonebanking to parents, 6:30 - 9 p.m. in room 420 of the Student Union. Students, who will be paid, are asked to make phone calls to UMass parents and ask them to call their representatives in support of the upcoming Public Higher Education amendment.

■ Unabomber

Also recovered were potassium chlorate, sodium chlorate, aluminum powder, lead powder and silver oxide powder, all of which can be used in bombs, he added. Three rolled-up pieces of paper appeared to contain "logs of experiments to determine the optimum pipe dimension and combination of explosive materials in various weather conditions," Sachtleben said.

Federal officials, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said searchers also found two manual typewriters. The Unabomber has sent a sheaf of typed letters over the past few years, and investigators wanted to compare those with the typewriters.

A former assistant professor of mathematics at the University of California at Berkeley, Kaczynski graduated from Harvard when he was barely 20, and received a master's degree and doctorate from the University of Michigan several years later. Academic-oriented and obsessed with technology, he fits the FBI psychological profile of the suspect.

After retreating from academic life in the 1970s, Kaczynski lived in Utah, doing odd jobs and menial labor.

Evelyn Vanderlaan, who was a neighbor of Kaczynski's family in the working-class Chicago suburb of Evergreen Park, Ill., said: "Teddy was unusually smart. I've never known anyone who had a brain like he. He made it through high school in three years. I didn't see much emotion, just quiet."

At Michigan, Professor Peter L. Duren, who served on Kaczynski's doctoral committee, described him as smart, independent and dedicated.

"He was unusually focused on math and spent all of his time doing it," Duren said. "I don't think he was political at that time. He was so busy, so involved in math, I don't think he did anything else."

At Berkeley, spokesman Jesus Mena said that records show Kaczynski submitted a letter of resignation in 1969. Department officials at the time filed a letter saying they tried to talk him out of leaving "but he was intent on resigning."

In yesterday's story about Nathan McCall, a DVP representative was misidentified as Michael Phillips. The person who introduced McCall was actually Paul Spatarella.

In Tuesday's article on the new class being offered about the life of Jackie Robinson, the article stated the class was four credits, when it actually was three credits.

Amherst elects 6 UM students

Former SGA candidates Plano, Collins voted into town meeting

By Joseph Fountain
Collegian Correspondent

AMHERST — On Tuesday, the town of Amherst turned out 2,931 people or 24 percent of the electorate to cast ballots for town meeting and vote on questions regarding the Town Charter. For five University of Massachusetts students it would be their election day.

Brian Tirrel, associate speaker of the Student Government Association (SGA), David Weaver, and Brian McCarthy, all of John Adams Residence Hall were elected by regular ballot vote while Neil Collins, former candidate for student trustee, and Gabriel Crocker, both of Johnson Residence Hall, were elected by write-in votes. Collins said Larry Plano, former SGA presidential candidate, also won a position to the town meeting.

Tirrel, a sophomore political science major, said, "The election is good for the students because they need to be involved in town government."

Tirrel said, "The students need to rally for a polling place on campus and part of the reason there isn't one is because of politics."

Collins, a sophomore industrial engineering major, who won by write-in votes, said, "Town politics is very important to students at this University because town meeting decisions directly affect the rights of students."

The town charter issue failed to win approval by a vote of 1,509 to 1,272. SGA was opposed to the charter changes which would have trimmed the number in town meeting from 240 to 150. It would have also started a seven member town council and a position for mayor. The school committee would have been expanded from five to seven seats and the position of town manager would have stayed the same.

Normal attendance at town meetings are 175 and the vacancy rate average is five per year. The meetings are open to the public but only members are allowed to vote.

Senator Pete Luongo, a senior psychology major said, "The charter change would have limited student empowerment and access to town government."

"The town meeting gives students the opportunity to be heard in town government," Luongo said.

Speaker of the SGA Senate, Dan Castellano, a senior marketing major said, "Through more student involvement in town government, better relations will evolve between the town and the University."

The other question that was on the ballot was an advisory question on whether or not to keep the town meeting. It won overwhelmingly 1,895 to 677.

Other seats that were up for election but were not contested were Harrison Gregg for town moderator, and for three-year selectman terms were Eva Schiffer and Homer Cowles. The three-year term for school committee was filled by Sandra Berkowitz with the Jones Library trustee three- year terms filled by Kent Forber and Nancy Gregg. The Smith Charities trustee one-year term was filled by David Fordham and the housing authority five-year term by Gwendeline Pawley. The five-year term representative to the redevelopment authority is John Curtis Shumway. The county commissioner two-year term went to Frieda Howards.

Churches unite to provide Easter service

By Beth McCarthy
Collegian Correspondent

The United Christian Foundation (UCF) Student Fellowship, in conjunction with the Goodwin Memorial African Methodist Episcopal (MAMA) Zion Church and Wesley United Methodist Church, will be sponsoring an Easter sunrise service on April 14 at 8 a.m.

"There's never been anything like this before," said Yuland Daley, president of the student fellowship group, a Registered Student Organization (RSO). "There are a lot of students who don't go to church all the time, but like to for the holidays, like Easter, and we wanted to have something for them."

The group was started last November. Its main concern is the spiritual uplifting aspect of the student body, along with recreational activities, Daley said.

"We are concerned about having something available for the students who can get out of bed that early," said Rev. Kent Higgins, a pastor at UCF.

This will be one of the first major gatherings for these organization in several years.

Higgins said, "We haven't been visible over the past five years."

The reason the group is beginning to hold more gatherings because "there's been more interest by mainstream Protestant students," Higgins said.

"We want to reach out more to the students and be directly involved with them," said Rev. John Ike, the pastor at Goodwin. "We want them to know we're here for them and also provide another form of support for them."

This devotional service is open to everyone. It will provide songs, including "This is the Day," prayer, lots of music and a meditation on the theme of new life and liberation.

"I'd like to attempt an all night vigil in the future if anyone was interested," Higgins said. "It's a lot easier to keep people up all night than to wake them up. Actually, it's part of the tradition to fast and keep vigil the night before Easter."

The gathering will be held on the west side of the UMass campus pond in front of the Old Chapel. There will be coffee and bagels available in the Old Chapel at 7:30 a.m. Easter morning.

In case of rain, the service will be held at the Wesley United Methodist Church at 365 N. Pleasant St. next to the University Motor Lodge.

Davila accused of conflict of interest

By Sarah Coffey
Collegian Correspondent

Personal feelings are influencing how the Ways and Means Committee allocates funding for student organizations, charges Juan Mejia, president of AHORA, the Latin American student organization.

According to Mejia, William Davila, a member of the Ways and Means Committee, president of the Puerto Rican student organization Boricuas Unidos and a member of AHORA, let personal feelings about AHORA influence his decision when voting for the recommended RSO budget in March.

"He doesn't like AHORA," said Mejia in a phone interview. "He told me two weeks prior to voting on the budget, in front of other members [of AHORA] that he personally doesn't like me, that AHORA was doing a shitty job this year, and that we were going to receive a cut [in funding]," said Mejia.

Davila denied the charges, and said he didn't vote.

"That's not true," said Davila in a phone interview. "I don't have a vote because I'm a member of AHORA. Any member of AHORA can't vote on AHORA's budget. That's a conflict of interest."

"That committee is supposed to be objective," Mejia said. "He went into the meeting with that set in mind."

At the preliminary RSO budget meeting held in March, AHORA was recommended for $6,000 for the '96-'97 school year, down from $10,000 for the '95-'96 school year. Boricuas Unidos was recommended for $2,000 for '96-'97, up from $700 received for the '95-'96 school year.

"Just because he has the power to do it he pulls our organization down to pull his up," said Mejia. "This is a personal attack from a position of power."

The 11 members of the Ways and Means committee, which is appointed by the Undergraduate Student Senator, cannot vote on their own group's funding, according to a source in the Student Government Organization.

Hearings for the RSO budget will be held April 13 and 14. At that time, members of several RSOs have the opportunity to come before the committee to plead their case for more funding.

AHORA hopes to restore its cut funding at that time. "If we receive a budget cut we won't be able to help the community," Mejia said.

"The Ways and Means Committee can do a good job but they have to take care of people like this in the committee," Mejia said. "These people are being brought into the committee for personal reasons. If it gets personal than everything gets ruined."

Countdown to the '96 Presidential Primaries

ELECTION '96

Editor's Note: As part of an effort to improve our coverage of the presidential primaries, the Collegian is running this feature everyday.

— WASHINGTON (AP) — And then there were two.

Breaking clear in a contest once crowded and tangled, Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole has secured the Republican presidential nomination and won the right to engage President Clinton in the fall.

Neither man at this point has a comprehensive platform. But what they do have, after Clinton's three years in the White House and Dole's 27 years in the Senate, are records. And since January they've answered questions on a variety of subjects put to them by The Associated Press.

Here are their answers, plus summaries of their words and actions on a variety of issues. Positions may change, and Ross Perot may yet jump in again to mix everything up.

But as of now, this is where they stand and what they've said.

BUREAUCRACY: Which federal government departments, if any, would you close?

Bill Clinton

"We now have the smallest government in 30 years. We are cutting agency administrative costs by 14 percent. We eliminated 300 programs, such as subsidies for mohair, wool and honey, and dismantled 16,000 pages of unnecessary government regulations. We have proposed the restructuring of all government agencies. We also plan to eliminate many more programs, such as the Tea Tasters' Board, Uniformed Services University of the Health Sciences, and the Naval Academy's own dairy farm. The era of big government is over."

Bob Dole

"Housing and Urban Development, Education, Commerce and Energy."

Charting the course of history

Now that the basketball season is finally over (I actually did root for Coach Cal and the Minutemen on Saturday night) it's about time that we turned our attention back to some of the more important issues facing our nation. Let's see if we can generate some dialogue about who will win the White House in November. Or better yet, let's talk about who will win the GOP nomination in August.

Because the first question will be totally affected by the outcome of the second question. I'll start with discussing the GOP nomination. You see, despite the fact that Bob Dole has won over 25 primary contests and earned more than the 996 delegates he needs to win the nomination in August at the GOP convention in San Diego, I am still adamantly insisting that Governor Weld will receive his party's nomination for president this year.

Martin F. Jones

What you are probably asking, have I been smoking? Actually, I don't smoke and I didn't inhale either. It just seems so totally obvious to me that Weld, and not Dole, will run against Clinton this November 5 on behalf of the Republican party.

Governor Weld is a much stronger candidate than the elderly Senator Dole. He and Clinton are both baby boomer-aged 50-and-l4 respectively. They are both Rhodes Scholars attending Oxford University in England in a special academic program reserved for foreign policy geniuses. They are both pro-choice, pro-environment and pro-affirmative action. They both support the AmeriCorp national service program. They both support full legal recognition of homosexual relationships. They both are staunch advocates of international free trade. And neither candidate served in the Vietnam War.

In fact, many people will wonder what difference the two men share other than their last names, or Weld's Cambridge accent versus Clinton's Arkansas country drawl. Well, there is the fact that Clinton gave America its biggest tax hike in history, versus Weld's 11 tax cuts during his five years as the Chief Executive of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Add to this equation the Whitewater scandal, a fiasco that has so far made Hillary Clinton the most investigated First Lady in U.S. history with hubby Bill not far behind. And we must not forget Paula Jones, another distraction that further inflates the character issue beyond normal reason.

All of these factors make Weld a potentially lethal weapon to use against Bill Clinton's re-election bid. You see, Weld, with his tax cuts and spotless character card, could easily siphon off more than a third of Clinton's base of support, as he and Clinton already surrespond on the major hot-button issues of abortion, affirmative action, and welfare, and NAFTA.

So why did Weld opt out of the race for president? Only the Governor can address that question with any credibility. I have my own theories, but I'll keep them under wraps for now. Nonetheless, as 1996 marks the last presidential election of the 20th century, and one that will determine the course for the next millennium, expect this election to be the most tumultuous and bitterly contested election ever. So far things have been pretty mild, and pretty predictable now that Bob Dole has wrapped up the nomination in a record six weeks. So when will the fireworks begin? Soon, real soon.

So, what should we expect? Well, for starters, we should expect some drastic turn of events to take Bob Dole out of the Presidential race, causing the GOP to launch a nationwide search for a new candidate.

We should expect a renewed Powell for President draft movement, one that ends with the retired general saying no to a White House bid for the second time in six months.

We should expect House Speaker Newt Gingrich to decline as well, but not without playing kingmaker and recommending a certain New England Governor who lives in Cambridge and works in a fairly large office on Beacon Hill in Boston.

We should expect California Governor Pete Wilson to back up the new prospective candidate, one who helped raise money for the GOP while working for Wilson's failed presidential bid one year ago.

We should expect Massachusetts Secretary of State William Galvin, who chairs a special commission on GOP primaries, to reschedule all of the states won by Senator Dole, setting the stage for a sensational primary battle between the new candidate and the sole remaining GOP candidate, Pat Buchanan.

And with all of these arrangements in place, we should expect Gov. William F. Weld of Massachusetts to formally announce his candidacy for President of the United States, after formally withdrawing from his Senate challenge to Sen. John Kerry.

We should expect Weld and Buchanan to face off in the biggest, baddest and nastiest primary competition ever held, with both men to win a number of states and with Weld winning the nomination with a narrow majority of the delegates available.

We should expect New Jersey Governor Christine Todd Whitman to renege on her pledge not to run for V.P. and join Weld in creating a total pro-choice GOP ticket.

We should expect Pat Buchanan to walk out of the GOP convention in San Diego, taking his delegates with him, and launching an independent bid.

We should expect Bill Clinton, in an attempt to maintain a strong northeast presence, to replace Al Gore with New Jersey Senator Bill Bradley as his running mate, setting the stage for a rematch of the 1990 New Jersey senate race between Whitman and Bradley. Gore will claim that his departure is "voluntary."

We should expect Ross Perot to a major factor in the race, as was the case in 1992. Look for former Connecticut Governor Lowell Weicker to get in the game somewhere along the line.

Expect the Whitewater scandal to grow more and more complex and sinister, causing Clinton to have to run like the devil as he struggles towards reelection.

Expect the biggest voter turnout in the history of the United States on November 5.

And now that we've heard all of these unbelievable predictions, who should we expect to win the White House in the end?

The answer to that question, my friends, remains to be seen.

Beware of "free" gifts

Appropriately, I received this letter on April Fool's Day.

"Dear Mr. Copeland."

Generally speaking, I am extremely skeptical of any letter that greets me as "Mr. Copeland." They usually come from lawyers, collection agencies or in this case, people making a shameless plea for money.

"Graduation is only a few months away and soon we will be UMass alums. Congratulations! As members of the Class of 1996 we are anticipating graduation with both excitement and trepidation. We have every reason to be confident that we have received a top-notch education preparing us for the future."

Dave Copeland

I'm sure you are well prepared for the future if you are using words like "trepidation." That is always a sign of a top-notch education: at Yale it is a graduation requirement to anticipate the future with trepidation.

"In appreciation, Giving something back has always been a noteworthy tradition among UMass alumni."

These are the same alumni who were ashamed to say where they graduated from until UMass made it into the Final Four.

"Now you have the chance to give back by supporting the Senior Campaign."

I will give the author of this letter. By putting "you" in bold face type, I realize just how cheesy, vain and desperate her organization is.

"Participation in the senior campaign represents the culmination of our years in Amherst."

As hard as I have tried, I really can't picture the end of my college career being accurately represented by the image of me writing a check out to the Senior Campaign. I think a more appropriate representation would be a tableau of me passed out in a corner with a flat gin and tonic in one hand and a burnt out cigarette in the other.

"When a fellow senior calls you within the next few weeks please consider a pledge of $250, $125 or a symbolic pledge of $96 to our Senior Campaign."

Does that mean if I were a member of the class of 2000 I could give a symbolic pledge of $00? As it stands now, I couldn't write a check for 96 cents without it bouncing.

The Campaign's slogan is "Unleash your potential!" but I honestly feel that all the members of the Senior Committee care about is me unleashing my checkbook.

After all, how much of a connection can you make with your graduating class when it numbers a few thousand? Many of us didn't even start out here as members of the class of '96. Many more of us have been able to get past this senior snobbery and accept people for who they are as opposed to an insignificant number on a transcript. I feel sorry for the people who have wandered through their four years here unable to get past the high school mentality where "seniors" are to be paid unlimited respect and nerds don't go to the prom.

"Your pledge will contribute to the enduring history of our Class and establish your own personal tradition of giving."

In reality, my gift will contribute to a plaque that will sit in the corner of the lobby of the Fine Arts Center, where it will become tarnished and unnoticed. Someday in the distant future it will fall off the wall with a loud clang, when it will then be thrown in the trash by my great-great grandson.

As for my own personal tradition of giving, I'd like to be able to give something back to UMass, but to hit me up for $250 after I spent eight semesters pouring money into this half-baked institution is not the right time. For me to make the "symbolic" gift of $96, I would have to work a full week at my crappy part time job and surrender my whole paycheck after taxes.

I'm sure there are people here at UMass who have a VISA Gold card that is paid off each month by Mom & Dad. I'm sure there are people who think of $250 as nothing but a good night out. But for the vast majority of us at this working class University, "Unleashing our potential" means driving fast and hard away from this place on Route 2, getting a job that we may or may not like and paying off our student loans.

P.S. Join us at the Campaign Kick-Off Party on April 2nd, 10th floor Campus Center from 9:00 pm to 12:30 am. The first 500 seniors to attend will receive free senior cups.

I should have gone. I could have used my "free" senior cup to pan handle for change for my contribution.

UMass B–ball team does sitcoms

It's finally over, the 1995-96 college basketball season. It was a tremendous year for the University of Massachusetts Minutemen, who finished at 35-2. They went farther than ever before in the NCAA Tournament and ended the season with a brilliant effort in the Final Four game against the Kentucky Wildcats.

Now that the season is over, people are discussing ways to celebrate. I've watched the news and heard the mayor of Springfield propose the idea of a ticker tape parade. I've heard rumors of a downtown celebration in Amherst, and I've even heard of a block party in Beantown.

Brad Davidson

Although those are all great ideas, I don't think that they would represent the proper ending to such a season. The way I see it, the only way to officially end the 1996 season would be to film a movie. Not a home movie, but a huge multi-million dollar, Steven Spielberg Directing, popcorn-eating, $8-ticket, superstar extravaganza.

The movie would be entitled, Final Four: The UMass Story. The storyline is simple, but there is one problem — casting. Which actors would get to play such key roles in the film. Possibly Denzel Washington, Wesley Snipes or maybe even Joe Pesci. No way, those guys are all wrong for the job. What we need are some of the elite superstars that Hollywood has to offer.

Jimmy Walker as Marcus Camby: Jimmy Walker gets the once in a lifetime chance to get back into acting by accepting the role of star center Camby. He'll need to reach back to his "Good Times" days when his acting abilities soared. Walker's key line in the movie would come at the end when he dunks over Tony Delk and screams, "Dyn-o mite!"

Tatoo as Edgar Padilla: I couldn't remember the actor's name who played Tatoo on the hit show "Fantasy Island," so I'll just refer to him as Tatoo. He finally escapes the role as the sidekick of Mr. Rourke and accepts the number one role as Padilla. Tatoo becomes a team leader and does a magnificent job portraying Padilla's quick hands.

Emanuel Lewis as Dana Dingle: Lewis breaks free of his cute little boy image from his days on "Webster." Lewis puts in a star role as the defensive warrior, Dana Dingle. Lewis also brings in fellow "Webster" star George Popadopalls who puts in a cameo as loud mouth Dick Vitale.

Gary Coleman as Donta Bright: After being released from jail, Coleman scores the role of co-captain Bright. Coleman needs to shed some of that baby fat before he can film the on court scenes. Coleman's key line in the movie is when Jimmy Walker's Camby is in the team huddle and he tells Coleman playing Bright that he needs to calm down. Bright looks up at Camby and says, "Whudchyou talkin' 'bout Marcus!"

Tony Danza as Coach John Calipari: Tony Danza who was a favorite on "Taxi," finally makes it known "Who's the Boss." Danza puts in an inspiring performance in the movie while displaying a perspiring act while filming deodorant commercials on the side.

George Wendt as the Robust "Noise" Sign Guy: Wendt's doctors are hoping his heart will be able to keep pace with the active cheering of the worldly inspiration of his role.

The casting would almost be complete with the exception of one star. Who would play the role of the tremendous starting guard, Carmello Travieso. After a long search we have come up empty because we could not find an actor who was born on the same day as Tatoo.

Brad Davidson is a Collegian columnist.

A little history for India Night

On Sunday, April 7, the Indian Student Association (ISA) will host the annual India Night at 5:30 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium. The event will be an opportunity for the Five College community to enjoy a cultural show, as well as experience the ISA's culinary expertise.

Shyamala Ivatury

Such events notwithstanding, an American's knowledge of India remains limited to "exotic philosophies," whether of con artists such as Deepak Chopra, Rajneesh and Maharishi Mahesh-yogi, or of the pacifist leader Mohandas Gandhi.

Western ignorance is particularly glaring when it comes to Indian history. Influenced by slick propaganda pieces such as Attenborough's Gandhi, The Jewel in the Crown and Freedom at Midnight, westerners have sought to characterize decolonization in India as a "peaceful transfer of power" from the British Raj to "home rule."

Unwilling to come to terms with the fundamental violence of British rule, the epic Independence battles waged by countless martyred Indians have been deliberately erased by western historians. The First War of Indian Independence in 1857 continues to be dismissed by them as a "mutiny."

In the words of Peter Fay, author of The Forgotten Army, "We have never wanted to be told that independence was something many Indians thought that they could obtain only by fighting. We have never been anxious to admit that it was reasonable of Indians to take up arms against the British." Fay argues that in the United States, it is a matter less, perhaps, of forgetting than preferring not to know.

Strategically, the battle for Indian independence was waged on two interdependent fronts. The non-violent civil disobedience movement on the one hand and the armed struggle of a number of militant freedom fighters.

Of particular importance are the contributions of the Indian National Army (INA), which was unorthodox in its strategy and tactics, the heroic battles of the INA, its inclusive and secular structure and the charisma of its brilliant leader Subhas Chandra Bose. The INA was born, during World War II, of expatriate Indians in Southeast Asia and POW's from the British India Army.

The Indian POWs, such as General Mohan Singh were brave "sepoys" of the British India Army captured when the Japanese Army defeated British forces during World War II. Singh and others were disgusted by the British imperialist's refusal to leave India and their exploitation of Indian soldiers in World War II, a dispute of no concern to Indians.

Both the POWs and expatriate groups felt that it was necessary to align the enemies of Britain, especially Japan, to oust them from India. Under the leadership of Netaji Subhas Chandra Bose, the INA was under the command of Indians on equal footing with the armies of Japan. The INA was used only in the fight for independence and was not to be employed for any other purpose. The Japanese were asked to supply ammunition, arms and equipment, while the INA arranged for recruitment and raising of funds.

Unlike the British India Army, which was sectioned into various "ethnic batallions," the INA was a secular and integrated organization including Indians of different religious, caste and linguistic backgrounds. This army was one of the first few modern armies to include an all women regiment, the Rani of Jhansi Regiment. The history of Indian women marching with arms or engaged in bayonet charges to liberate their nation is a Third World revolutionary feminist legacy none of the so-called "emancipated western feminist" traditions can match.

The INA reached the height of its popularity, with a membership estimated in the tens of thousands, as Bose fled India in 1941 after his bitter dispute with Gandhi over tactics and strategy. However, it is clear that the political and non-violent wings of the liberation struggle relied on the pressure brought about by both the INA and public unrest.

The INA launched a campaign to reach India by fighting the British in Malaya, including a number of notable victories. Fighting with limited resources, the Azad Hind Faud kept the British base camp in Burma under siege for over three months before the INA was defeated.

Following the defeat in Burma, their beloved leader Bose died in a plane crash. Millions of Indians and most of the Indian parties rallied around the remaining members of the INA (now POWs). The mass campaigns reached their height during the "INA Red Fort Trials" initiated by the British against INA leaders who were accused of "treason."

We must never forget the real history of Indian independence nor the sacrifices, even during the India Night festivities.

Spring concert schedule red hot

Musical talents set to play this month include Coolio & Dylan

COURTESY GUZMAN

Cowboy Junkies

Springtime is here and music is in the air. Without a doubt, April looks like the hottest month of music so far this school year. From Coolio to Bob Dylan, many all-star artists are passing through the area over the next few weeks.

Liner Notes by Mike Burke

• The Forth Annual Loud Music Festival takes place April 17–20. The line-up looks nearly the exact same as last year with bands like Helium, Scud Mountain Boys and Dambuilders but there are a few notable new acts that may make the festival worth the $40 or $50 it will cost you to see the four-day event. On Thursday, April 18, there will be a Knitting Factory showcase featuring John Zorn and the Naked City. Fans of the Jon Spencer Blues Explosion should get excited over Railroad Jerk's modern rock imitation of the blues as they also perform on Thursday, Boyracer, Leed's finest pop band since the Wedding Present, bring their frantic guitar tunes to the Iron Horse on Saturday, April 20.

• Hard to believe but the hottest ticket on April 19th is not the Loud Music Festival but the excellent double bill of Coolio and the Fugees at John M. Greene Hall at Smith College. Arguably hip-hop's two brightest acts will surely get the Noho crowd grooving to the hippest sounds of today. Tickets are on sale now.

• Punk rockers and riot grrrls get ready for Sleater Kinney's appearance at Hampshire College on April 9. Sleater Kinney features ex-members of Excuse Seventeen and Heavens To Betsy.

• Bob Dylan is back again (will he ever go away?) and is set to perform at Springfield Symphony Hall on April 16. Last fall Dylan performed in Boston with punk legend Patti Smith, unfortunately Smith will not be in attendance here, instead Alaskan generation X folkie Jewel will open up the show.

• Amherst College continues to bring world class talent to the area, why can't we? The Cowboy Junkies and Shawn Colvin perform in LeFrak Gym on April 20. By most accounts, the new junkies album is a standout so this show should be impressive.

• Have you recovered from all the excitement of the Grammy Awards yet? It was so much fun watching all the industry's favorite bands battle it out for prestigious awards such as Best Rock Song by a Duo or Group. One artist, nominated for many a Grammy, Joan Osborne brings her act to Smith College on April 15. Maybe the Grammys weren't that bad after all.

The good & bad in new music videos

Music Video by Mike MacLean

Now that MTV's Spring Break is over, videos are now back on the menu... for now. The re-runs of "Beauty and the Beach" are just down the road. In preparation for that dark day, hide behind some of the videos in heavy rotation and hope that the spirit of Ed Lover won't find you.

Alice in Chains

"Heaven Beside You"

More of the same stuff we've come to expect from the boys of gloom. Lots of washed out blue and repeated close-ups of their faces. Unfortunately they don't come off as sinister looking as they probably would have liked to. In the continuing string of people ripping off the Nine Inch Nails "Closer" video, the trick where the film is sped up at the beginning of a frame and then slowed to normal is used repeatedly. In the end just a safe and unassuming clip. C

Goldfinger

"Here in Your Bedroom"

Is MTV trying to damage the good name of Ska? By pushing stuff like this it appears so. This video is proof that you can take Green Day, some skinny ties, black and white duds and a checkered floor and try to pass it off as Ska, but it will still come off as a watered-down punk band. Take this one and the No Doubt video and file them under the "Where will they be in a year." D

Foo Fighters

"Big Me"

This is what videos should be all about. The actual Mentos commercials that this is based on are so lame to begin with that this video is funny just in its premise. Add to those technicolor stories of minty-fresh inspiration the exaggerated facial expressions of the characters and a song that doesn't stick around long enough to get old and you've got a winner. The look on guitarist Pat Smear's face alone is worthy of a view. If you haven't seen this one yet, find someplace with MTV and refuse to move until you do. A

Smashing Pumpkins

"1979"

Along with the previous clip, this one should go down as one of the top 10 videos of the year. From the first beat of the song when the kids are rolling in the tire, the camera angles are unique and interesting (look for the toilet paper shot). Kids doing rebellious things — driven by boredom and the stifling banality of the suburbs. What could be a more perfect theme for a music video? Billy Corgan's crooning in the back seat of the car is a little self-indulgent, but the scene where the Pumpkins play the house party more than makes up for it. A

French actress answers questions about film roles

By Patricia Bibbey
Associated Press

French actress Charlotte Gainsbourg makes her introduction to American audiences this month as Charlotte Bronte's heroine in the film Jane Eyre which also stars William Hurt. Gainsbourg, 24 and already well-known in France, is the daughter of British actress Jane Birkin and French singer-composer-filmmaker Serge Gainsbourg. Hers was hardly the struggling existence of Jane Eyre, an orphan who becomes a plain-speaking governess with startling courage and strength.

1. Had you read Jane Eyre when you were growing up? Gainsbourg: I hadn't read the book. I know it sounds really weird. As I'm French, a lot of French people have read it, but it's not a schoolbook that we would study. So I discovered the book when I heard about the project. I read it in French and then in English.

2. How much of you is in Jane Eyre?

Gainsbourg: Things I understood perfectly in the part was maybe the distance that she has towards people. I understand the way of protecting yourself toward other people. It's something I can relate to easily.

3. Have you ever been as penniless or as poor?

Gainsbourg: No, never. I was very lucky. My parents were — can you say? — wealthy. So, no, I never had those problems.

4. You became famous in France for recording a hit song with your Dad called "Lemon Incest." What was it about? Gainsbourg: It was a very simple song, but it shocked quite a lot of people. But it was done in a very innocent, truthful way. I can't translate the lyrics. It's just a song about the love between a father and a daughter. It's about feelings — people can be shocked about them. But we weren't.

5. If this whole acting thing doesn't work out, would you consider becoming a governess instead?

Gainsbourg: No, I think I'll have my own children!

Hardcore bands to hit Pearl St.

By Adam Dlugacz
Collegian Staff

Combining the hardcore influences of Gorilla Biscuits, 7 Seconds and Husker Du, Lifetime has had a profound effect on the hardcore scene. From their creation six years ago, Lifetime was quickly embraced by the hardcore scene. While many bands get bogged down playing emo, old school or new school, Lifetime has emerged from the pack with a sound all of their own.

After two releases on New Age Records, the self-titled EP and the Background LP showed the band to be particularly rooted in the emo scene. However, their self-released "Tinnitus showed their peak influences. It also marked lead singer, Ari's coming into his own with a vocal style that could be easily recognized. Lifetime's changing sound culminated with the release of Hello Bastard on Jade Tree Records. Hello Bastard showed Lifetime's speeding their sound up and giving it a more of a punk feeling. It is for that reason that Lifetime has been embraced by kids from all scenes.

What really sets Lifetime apart is their heartfelt lyrics. While too many hardcore bands preach or come across with testosterone induced idiocy, Lifetime shows off a more sensitive side. Therefore, it is easy for the listener to relate to the band. It also adds to their live presence as the kids can really sing along with conviction.

Cast Iron Hike has left their Massachusetts scene. Combining Quicksand-like groove with the crunch of a band like Helmut topped off with some truly demented lyrics. Walleye who has a full, length on Jade Tree Records called Familiar, Forgotten will connect with the listener on the emotional level. It's okay to cry during their sets.

Lifetime, Cast Iron Hike, Walleye and Bare will be playing Sunday night at Pearl Street. The show is open to all ages and doors open at 7:30 p.m. Tickets are $5 in advance and $6 at the door. Please call 584-7771 for more information.

Actress identifies with teen witch

By Frazier Moore
Associated Press

NEW YORK — When other girls went to Brownies, Melissa Joan Hart went to auditions, filmed TV commercials and landed stage roles alongside William Hurt and Martin Sheen.

A few years later, when she got the title role in "Sabrina the Teenage Witch," Hart found much to admire in both a youngster trying to fit in but feeling somehow ... different.

"I had a lot of frustration when I was a teen-ager," says Hart, who technically is still a teen-ager for three more weeks, but you know what she means.

"Everyone else was so cool and knew what to wear," she says, recalling life as an outsider in the Long Island town of Sayville. "I just had no clue. I didn't know what was wrong with me. I think a lot of that was also true of Sabrina."

Based on the Archie Comics character, this light-hearted and (literally) charming Showtime film finds Sabrina spending a year with her eccentric aunts in the fictional town of Riverdale. There she discovers her teen powers as a witch as she tries to make new friends at a new high school.

"Sabrina" may be back this fall as a weekly series on the ABC schedule.

It won't be Hart's first series, of course. For four years, she played the title character — a precocious teen — in Nickelodeon's "Clarissa Explains It All" (it's still seen in repeats every weekday).

As for her stage appearances, she was in "The Crucible" on Broadway with Sheen and in a Circle Repertory production of "Beside Herself" with Hurt.

So wonder Hart can play teens that other teens (and their parents) love. Turned out for her interview in a peasant dress and sweater, she is pretty and perky, says "cool" a lot, and has a dusting of freckles across her nose.

All the better, my dear, that she is playing a menace to society on her next project, a TV movie called "Twisted Desire," also starring Daniel Baldwin, that airs on NBC in May.

"It's my first evil role," she says with satisfaction. "I start out as a sweet, innocent teen-ager like I usually play, and then my boyfriend breaks up with me. I get another boyfriend, but my parents don't want us to be together. So we plot to kill them."

Hart seems exhilarated by this new twist in her career. After all, she's spent too many years serving double duty not only as an actress but also as a teen role-model.

"Everyone thinks they know you from TV," she notes, and then everyone's so shocked to learn that I have a belly ring and eight earrings."

Which, now that she mentions it, she sure does. Yet, make no mistake, even with a bit of discreet body jewelry, Hart is no Courtney Love.

"But people still criticize and judge you," Hart says, a bit bemused. "Someone called me 'Metallica'!"

Maybe it's just another part of growing up, which currently finds her torn between a number of paths most notably school and career.

Her enrollment at New York University has been on-again, off-again the past two years.

Much of that absence has been due to work. But not all. "I was having a tough time at school," she admits. "I was overwhelmed. I couldn't talk in class at all. I was just a mess. I wasn't ready for it."

Still, college is part of her plans.

"I'm still doing a lot of exploring, kind of figuring myself out," she says, and thinks back to those days when, a bit lonely, she was starting the process. "I'm glad I didn't conform then. If I had known how to, I probably would have. But I didn't."

A&E premieres tribute to songwriters

By Mary Campbell
Associated Press

NEW YORK — So what if Frank Sinatra had played Billy Bigelow in the movie of Carousel?

"It might have changed the whole motion picture," says Shirley Jones, who played Bigelow's star-crossed love, Julie Jordan. "Carousel was the least successful of Rodgers and Hammerstein's ventures on film. It's my favorite score and my favorite show. It didn't quite make it on film. I don't know whether Sinatra would have made the difference."

Jones presides over "Rodgers & Hammerstein: the Sound of Movies," a special about the seven films with Richard Rodgers-Oscar Hammerstein scores that debuts at 8 p.m. Eastern time Sunday on the Arts & Entertainment network.

The biggest surprise for many viewers in the two hours will be that Sinatra was originally signed for Carousel. The special has pictures of him in costume and a recording of him singing "If I Loved You.

In the special, Jones says she was thrilled to sing with Sinatra.

"We rehearsed for weeks," she said by telephone from her California home. "We did costumes and pre-recordings. He showed up at Boothbay Harbor, Maine, saw two cameras and got back in the car and left. I knew it was going to be two cameras. I don't understand why he didn't."

Jones explains that each scene was to be shot twice — one for regular screens and once in Cinemascope.

"Frank Sinatra is very famous for doing one take, and no way he was going to be able to do that," Jones says. "I've talked to him about it since. He claims he was not told."

Ironically, technicians figured how to convert the film and only one camera was used after the first two weeks.

"He looked right for the part," Jones says. "I think physically and maybe even as an actor he would have been probably better than Gordon MacRae." She adds, "I love the way Gordon sang the score."

Jones and MacRae had starred in Oklahoma!, filmed in 1954. It was her first film. She was under personal contract to Rodgers and Hammerstein so, she says, it was likely they would put her in Carousel, their next movie.

Rodgers was a stickler about the music, Jones says: "He would sit down and play every single melody for you and you had to sing it strictly, with no personal interpretation whatever.

"When I did South Pacific at the end of its run in New York, Richard would come once a week, have all chorus people and stars of the show there and play the score, to make sure we were still singing in time, the way it was written."

Jones went on to make seven more movies, including Elmer Gantry in 1960, for which she won an Academy Award, and The Music Man in 1962. She was the mother on TV's "The Partridge Family" from 1970 through 1974 and had a series, "Shirley," in the fall of 1979.

Now, she gives two or three concerts a month, in which she sings "If I Loved You" and closes with "You'll Never Walk Alone," both from Carousel.

Her favorite medium has been movies, Jones says. "I work for American Movie Classics now," she says. "I introduce films on Wednesday afternoons. I'm spokesperson for the preservation of film for AMC. I'm still fascinated by great pictures and I hope to do another one before my career is over."

"Rodgers and Hammerstein: the Sound of Movies" has clips from State Fair, The King and I, South Pacific, Flower Drum Song and The Sound of Music, as well as Oklahoma! and Carousel. Rita Moreno and Nancy Kwan host sections about the movies they were in and Julie Andrews is interviewed about The Sound of Music.

Without Rodgers and Hammerstein, Jones says, "I don't know if I'd have had a career. I did happen to come in when those movies were being made. It was as though fate was in my corner."

Three years ago, she played Anna in The King and I in St. Louis, Atlanta and Detroit.

"It's a beautiful score to sing and fun to do," she says.

"But the costumes were 40 pounds of hoop skirts. I was never off the stage and I had to get up and down on my knees. It nearly killed me."

Easter bunnies stolen in Palmer

PALMER (AP) — It was a classic case of hare today, gone tomorrow, and gone the next day.

It all started when homeowners in this area east of Springfield undertook the annual Easter ritual of adorning their homes with plastic and wooden bunnies and eggs.

Hare today.

One or vandals, in an apparent joke, filched more than a dozen of the Easter bunnies and some eggs from homes in at least three towns — Palmer, Warren and Wilbraham — overnight March 29, according to local officials.

Gone tomorrow.

The bunny bandit gang then set them in a makeshift display at a Palmer town park. Discovering them the next morning, a local official took them down for fear that the mostly plastic rabbits would blow away.

Gone again.

The vandal or vandals apparently returned to find the bunny booty, well, gone. Their problems had multiplied, local officials say, because they apparently intended to return the rabbits to their rightful owners. So they left notes late last weekend on the windshields or in the mailbox of at least some of the homeowners. "We borrowed your bunnies, but due to technical difficulties, we cannot return them as planned," the unsigned notes read. They told people to contact town officials to seek return of their rabbits.

The notes were signed: "Peter Cottontail and the Easter Bunny."

Dan Slowick, co-director of the Palmer Downtown Partnership, a community development group that helped plan the park, said the decorations were temporarily stored in a local business. Seven of the nearly 20 rabbits had been reclaimed by Thursday.

But Slowick said only the thieves know where all the decorations came from.

Feminist study approach discussed by UMass profs

By Maureen Rozanski
Collegian Staff

Wednesday April 3, University of Massachusetts school of management professors Marta Calas and Linda Smircich held a panel discussion entitled, "From a Woman's Point of View: Feminist Approaches to Organizational Study," in the Campus Center.

Three years ago, both Calas and Smircich were approached by the authors of the book entitled, Handbook of Organizational Studies — a compilation of research blending sociological, industrial and anthropological factors in the realm of organizational study.

Calas and Smircich were asked to contribute to the book by writing a chapter on the issue of gender roles in both business and management and how feminist theories intersect organizational studies.

Both women felt that "women's voices" are "segregated in terms of organizational studies." Apart from Smircich and Calas' chapter, the Handbook of Organizational Studies did not address the issue of gender. Justifying the lack of female voice, Calas said, "the issue of multiplicity of theory is beyond the grasp of most people." She later stressed an awareness of "feminist theories as political theories."

Smircich and Calas' chapter of the book focused on a "feminist theoretical perspective, talking about not only a problem of organizing, but also poses questions about how we produce knowledge."

Their research stressed a common theme that Smircich quoted as, "comparing women in a standard — a standard that is male." Their chapter included Socialist feminist theory and the gendering of organizations. Calas related these issues with "the concern of the reproduction of femininity and masculinity and how gender roles produce a sexual division of labor."

The main objective in their research was to focus on "the distinction among the school of thought that promotes enhanced reading of literature related to our references," Calas said they related their work to the question, "How can we, in fact, help people who want to do this kind of work?"

After three years of research, Calas and Smircich could not cover all of the material they wanted to. Their research primarily addressed a woman's struggle within the societal patriarchy, but not the struggle of women of color and minorities within societal prejudice.

Both Calas and Smircich noted this misrepresentation is always "a problem," and due to a restriction on the number of pages in their chapter, this issue "is a big missing chunk of the chapter."

Marta Calas and Linda Smircich are currently professors in the school of management. Their discussion was sponsored by the women's studies program as a part of their "Lunch- Time Lecture Series."

Curry & Carter speak on civil rights struggles, triumphs

By Mindy Scalzetti
Collegian Correspondent

Constance Curry and Mae Bertha Carter told their story of civil rights abuses in the Mississippi school system to a small gathering at the Campus Center yesterday.

Curry, author of the new book Silver Rights, spoke first about Carter's accomplishments during the 1960s civil rights movement.

Carter played a large role in integrating both an elementary and a high school in Sunflower, Miss. by insisting that her seven children attend all-white schools, despite the frequent hostility the family endured.

The parents were motivated to do their part to integrate schools after a chance offer to join the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP). After several meetings with members of the NAACP, the couple sought what they believed to be the best education possible for their children, Carter said.

Carter and her husband, who never went to school, were both sharecroppers in Mississippi. With five or six of their children working in the fields with them, their cumulative income was only $1,700 a year.

"You'll never be a sharecropper," Carter promised her oldest daughter.

To secure her children's future and keep her promise, Carter sent applications to the Drew school system in Mississippi, and her children were accepted.

However, there were many who did not want integrated schools in Mississippi. The Carters were plagued with violence directed towards their family.

Gun shots were aimed at their home in the middle of the night and their eldest daughter, Naomi, was arrested after marching for black civil rights, according to Carter.

These experiences are described in Silver Rights. The jails were too crowded to maintain all those arrested, so many were forced to stay for over one week in an elephant cage at the zoo, she explained.

Constance Curry later explained that her book was titled Silver Rights after a passage in Alice Walker's In Search of Our Mother's Garden.

"Although I value the civil rights movement deeply, I have never liked the term itself. It has no poetry," Walker begins. "Older black country people did their best to instill what accurate poetry they could into this essentially white civil servants' term... so that what one heard was 'silver'."

Since her struggle began in 1955, Carter has seen almost all of her 13 children graduate from college and begin careers in both accounting and health professions

Alumni stress importance of internships at forum

By Liz Anderson
Collegian Correspondent

Club Communications held its annual Edwin M. Rossman Alumni Career Forum on Wednesday. The career forum was sponsored by the University Career Center, the University of Massachusetts Alumni Association and the Department of Communications.

Bob Paquette, a reporter/producer at WFCR, the National Public Radio affiliate of Amherst, opened the forum at 8 p.m. Responsible for the production of morning and afternoon news programs, Paquette has interviewed an array of celebrities. Jesse Jackson, Charles Schultz and Mother Teresa are some of his most memorable interviews. Paquette graduated from UMass in 1977 with a bachelor of arts and science majoring in communication. While attending UMass, he was a DJ for the student-run radio station WMUA.

"Job opportunities in the radio industry are not decreasing, they are just changing. There is a growing demand for news program producers and reporters. Radio news is great for anyone who is curious about world events but has a short attention span. I encourage any UMass student interested in radio to do an internship with WFCR. We have openings and all of our interns have had 100 percent job placement," explained Paquette encouraging students to take advantage of summer internships.

Robert Branscombe continued the panel discussion, describing his success as the territory sales representative of Wisconsin Tissue. Branscombe is in charge of the sales and distribution of paper products to 99 restaurants throughout New England, including the Hard Rock Cafe.

"I entered UMass in the ROTC program aspiring for a career in the military. Eventually I became a "Gen-Fder" and declared my major communication. When I graduated in 1990, my sister gave me the book What Color is Your Parachute? One piece of advice it emphasize is "the most effective way to find a job is to go to your alumni career center," Branscombe said.

"I immediately sent my resume there and within two weeks I received 10 job offers. Go to Mather. Use your Career Center," said Branscombe, who offered summer internships with his company.

Nigel Smith, the senior account executive of Schwartz Communication was the next speaker. Schwartz Communication is a public relations firm. Smith is in charge of contacting the media directly with stories about new products and business interactions by his clients. Smith graduated in 1993 after an impressive career of internships including the Museum of Fine Arts in Boston and WBZ — a FOX affiliated television station.

"Internships are very important, especially for communication majors," Smith said. "They allow you to learn what you like and don't like. Once you are familiar with the egos of a career then you can determine if you want to pursue it after graduation."

Mary Ann Farren, a 1990 graduate, described her career as advertising production coordinator at Yankee Publishing. After working with several small agencies, Farren started working with Yankee Magazine, where she is in charge of the coordination and editing for all the advertisements.

"The period post-graduation is very humbling for college graduates. Many students graduate and believe they will get a job paying $75,000 a year with just a high grade point and a diploma. Not true," Farren said. "You need experience, and internships are where you will gain experience. I have gone through several different publishing jobs after graduation. Your first job is not your last."

The forum ended with Deborah Koller, a 1990 graduate, who described her job as the Promotions Manager at WNAC in Providence, R.I. WNAC is a FOX affiliate television station. Kollor is in charge of all of the FOX promotion through syndicates and graphics as well as scheduling daily programs and weekend movies. She worked as a summer intern at the Boston television station WLPI.

"Internships are very important while you are in college. A lot of graduates think they will volunteer after they graduate. They can't. That would be considered slave labor," explained Kollor.

After the discussion the audience had an opportunity to talk to the panelists one-on-one creating connections for future job possibilities. All of the panelists need summer interns and encourage students to apply. For more information call Mather Career Center 545-2224.

Offensively Duke has been led by John Fay, who has 29 goals and four assists in eight games, while Scott Diggs has also added nine goals on the year.

The Minutemen got some good news from another game Wednesday as unranked Yale upset No. 6 Brown. The Bears, who the Minutemen regularly batile for the New England Championship, now lag behind UMass in the quest for that title.

"I'm not surprised by anything anymore," Cannella said. "When you look around the lacrosse world, there have been a lot of upsets and a lot of surprises. There are a lot of good teams with three losses. It just proves that this year has a lot of parity. It just goes to prove that no matter how good you are, if you don't come, ready to play, someone is going to beat you. If you do come to play you can beat anybody."

Game Notes: The game will be broadcast live on WMUA 91.1 with Dan Welch calling the action and Matt Fillmore providing commentary. Former vice-president Dan Quayle's son Ben plays for the Blue Devils.

Celtics sting Magic with second home

By Fred Goodall
Associated Press

ORLANDO, Fla. — David Wesley's jumper with less than a second remaining Thursday night gave Boston a 100-98 victory over Orlando, which blew a 19-point second-half lead without Shaquille O'Neal and Anfernee Hardaway.

O'Neal missed his second straight game because of the death of his grandmother, and Hardaway was ejected late in the half after taunting Boston's Pervis Ellison and picking up a second technical foul for arguing the call.

The Magic have now lost two of their last three home games after winning 40 in a row at Orlando Arena.

Wesley scored 17 of his 22 points in the third quarter and his 16-foot game-winner over a fallen defender was his only basket of the fourth period. Rick Fox had 16 and Dee Brown 15 for the Celtics.

Horace Grant, who led Orlando with 24 points, made a jumper to tie the game for the last time with 12.1 seconds left. Nick Anderson, who fell while guarding Wesley on the final play, added 23.

Boston trailed 72-53 before beginning its come-back late in the third quarter. The Celtics tied the game four times down the stretch before Dana Barros made a layup for a 98-96 lead with 37.3 seconds to go.

Hardaway was ejected with 1:14 remaining in the opening half after he dunked over Ellison, hung on the rim briefly and then glared at the Boston center.

Official Gary Benson tossed the Magic point guard when he continued to protest the call.

"It was just anger," Hardaway said. "I'm just sorry that it happened, to have my teammates playing out there without myself and Shaquille. But things happen."

The crowd of 17,248 booed whenever the Celtics had the ball the rest of the quarter, and Boston coach M.L. Carr exchanged words with a fan while the team was walking to the locker room at halftime.

Hardaway scored 15 points and Orlando led 53-43 at the break. The Celtics fell behind by 19 before pulling within 10 again — 83-73 — late in the third quarter.

Wesley scored 13 straight for Boston during one stretch of the period and had 17 in the quarter to keep the Celtics in the game. Notes: O'Neal has missed 28 games, including the first 22 of the season with a broken thumb.

The Magic are 35-11 with him in the lineup and 20-8 without him... Boston snapped a six-game regular-season losing streak at Orlando Arena... The Magic and Florida Hospital have purchased land for a $40 million health and sports complex that will house, among other things, training facilities for the NBA team.

UMass senior guard Giddel Padilla was a force of the bench for the Minutemen in their National Semifinal game against Kentucky.

Denver McFadden proved this when UK made it to the national championship game.

McFadden, a high school principal from New Albany, Ind., a suburb of Louisville, promised himself that nothing would stop him from getting to the Meadowlands.

He took a red-eye from Louisville opting to land in Baltimore rather than New York to save money for a ticket. He then rented a car and drove the four hours to the Meadowlands, and bought a scalped ticket in a hotel lobby for $200.

After the game, McFadden jumped in his car and drove halfway back to Baltimore. He then checked into a hotel, slept for four hours, drove back to Baltimore and flew home to Louisville in order to be in his office by 10 a.m.

"I missed the championship game in '78 and I've never forgiven myself," McFadden said. "I knew I had to be there."

• In the unofficial national arrest watch: Arkansas hoop player Antwon Hall was arrested this week after violating a school judicial board that prohibited him from entering a co-ed dormitory.

The 21-year-old Hall was ordered by the judicial board to stay away from Pomfret Hall, a coed campus dorm. He was banned until May 1.

Hall entered the dorm believing the ban was over.

No charges will be filed against Ball State standout Bonzi Wells. Wells was arrested last week on a misdemeanor battery charge.

There was not enough evidence to file charges against Wells, who allegedly assaulted a girl after she refused to have sex with him.

• Mateen Cleaves, the runner-up for Mr. Basketball in Michigan, has made a verbal commitment to attend Michigan State.

Cleaves was recruited heavily by Michigan, but the Wolverines stopped their pursuit of Cleaves after a pre-dawn auto accident in February. Cleaves and four Michigan basketball players were returning from a party when the car they were in went off the road.

There was some question as to whether or not Cleaves' eligibility was jeopardized during the accident incident. Michigan officials said they stopped recruiting Cleaves as a punishment to themselves.

• A radio station and a talk show have filed suit against the University of Michigan Athletic Department in order to obtain ownership information about vehicles used by Wolverine athletes.

WFDF-AM and Dave Barber filed a motion Monday in Genesee County Circuit Court to get the info after an attempt to get it in February with the Freedom of Information Act failed.

Hmm... do you think they want to know about a certain Ford Explorer?

Bruins blow lead, tie Habs

BOSTON (AP) — Saku Koivu scored a short-handed goal with 25 seconds left in regulation on Thursday night to earn the Montreal Canadiens a 3-3 tie with the Boston Bruins.

The result moved Montreal into fourth place in the Eastern Conference, tied with idle Florida at 87 points apiece. Without Koivu's goal, the Bruins would have moved into a fifth place tie with the Canadiens at 86.

Boston, which beat Montreal 4-1 on Wednesday, had a 3-2 lead and a 5-on-3 advantage with 2:12 to go in the game after Mark Recchi drew a five-minute penalty for breaking his stick over Rick Tocchet's back.

But the Bruins couldn't score with two extra men and then, when they were one man up, they made a mistake that cost them a point. Vincent Damphousse, who scored his 37th goal in the second period, led Koivu perfectly as he broke over the red line. He caught up with the puck up inside the Bruins zone and needed one fake to get it past Craig Billington, who had stayed back in the net instead of challenging him.

That sent it into overtime. Boston still had 2:48 left on the power play, but they couldn't score, and neither could the Canadiens when they got a 39 second power play at the end of the game.

Pat Jablonski stopped 39 shots for Montreal, which has three games remaining — one fewer than the Bruins, who are tied with Washington for sixth place with 85 points.

Billington had not played in 14 games, last seeing action on March 4. He stopped 14 shots, to go with the 11 saves on 13 shots faced by Bill Ranford before he was injured.

Ranford needed to be helped from the ice after making an awkward save early in the second period. But the team said his injury, which could be devastating to the Bruins' playoff chances, did not appear to be serious.

Pierre Turgeon scored his 38th goal of the season for Montreal to make it 1-0 8:40 into the game. Ted Donato tied it for Boston. It was 2-1 Canadiens after Damphousse's goal and then Ron Sutter tied it for Boston 5:08 into the second. Tocchet gave the Bruins a 3-2 lead 11:11 into the second period.

Penguins 4, Capitals 2

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Mario Lemieux broke a tie with his second goal of the game, with 1:55 remaining, and the Pittsburgh Penguins beat Washington 4-2 Thursday night to halt the Capitals' seven-game unbeaten streak.

Lemieux raised his season total to 66 when he stationed himself at the left side of the net and banged in Corey Foster's pass from the right point.

The Capitals had been 4-0-3, their longest streak of the season that included a 3-0-1 stretch on the road.

Michal Pivonka and Calle Johansson wrapped Washington goals around Lemieux's first score, in the second period. Foster had Pittsburgh's first goal, and Chris Tamer hit an empty hit in the final minute to cap the scoring.

Peter Bondra assisted on both Washington goals, and stretched his point-scoring streak to eight games, while Pivonka extended his scoring streak to seven games.

Pivonka took a backhanded swipe at a loose puck in the crease for his 16th goal at 3:26. At 13:25, Johansson used his skate to knock down Pivonka's pass and put a 10-footer past Tom Barrasso. In between, Lemieux scored at 11:56. He broke down the right side and used Brad Lauer as a decoy on a 2-on-1. Despite Johnasson's desperate effort to block the shot, Lemieux put the puck over Jim Carey's glove.

Foster scored on a power play in the first period to end a 0-for-11 Pittsburgh streak with a man advantage. Bryan Smolinski's shot deflected off a Washington stick to Foster, who lifted a 15-footer past Carey for his second goal.

losing streak, has won her last eight starts, establishing herself as a top candidate for A-10 Rookie of the Year, and continuing the tradition of great Minutewoman pitchers.

Despite Henderson's early success, Sortino, who affectionately calls her freshman star 'Harry,' is reluctant to compare her to the most recent standout UMass pitcher Kelly Daut. "Kelly was able to locate her pitches; she could hit the corners — Harry's a blow-it-by-you pitcher," Sortino said.

In the first game, the Minutewomen took a 3-0 lead in the top of the fourth when Tracey Osier plated Amanda Galas with a single, but the Blue Devils got a pair in the bottom of the sixth to close the score to 3-2.

UMass exploded for four runs in the top of the seventh to secure the victory.

The second game saw Kelly Buckley and Sam Cardenas lead the UMass assault, both going three-for-three with a pair of RBIs, as the Minutewomen battered CCSU.

After finding herself in a rut during UMass' trip to Tallahassee in March, Cardenas is returning to the form that saw the Fullerton, California native hit .364 last year, third best on the team.

"Sam Cardenas really came out of [her slump]," Sortino said. "It's good to have her back."

The UMass defense was solid as well, making just one error in each game of the doubleheader, after making seven against Vermont on Tuesday in Burlington.

With a long plane flight tonight to Virginia to open their A-10 slate on the horizon, along with the team's long- awaited home opener coming up on Tuesday against Hartford, Sortino is happy with her team's outlook.

"We're 17-10 and cruising," she said.

has the highest batting average on the team, holding a .403. His 27 hits have earned him 10 RBI on the season. Dagliere has tallied four doubles, a triple and two homeruns.

Doug Clark, the freshman designated hitter, has collected 17 RBI on 20 hits, while first baseman Justin Kelly has 22 hits and 14 RBI.

"We have the capability to be a pretty good offensive team, we've shown that so far," Stone said.

Shortstop Brad Gorrie is batting .400, with 22 hits and 13 RBI. Lead off batter Ryan Jette, the left fielder, has collected 24 hits and 8 RBI.

In the field, UMass has been strong. The Minutemen have turned 17 double plays to the opposition's 10.

Ryan Thistle and Bryan Mazzaferro have both seen time at the third base this season, and will likely both see time there this weekend.

Stone is cautiously optimistic about the weekend's games.

"If we play like we can play, I feel pretty good about our chances," Stone said.

recently fired Brian Mahoney.

Manetta reportedly contacted Massachusetts athletic director Bob Marcum to ask permission to speak to Calipari. Marcum denied that request.

Calipari recently signed a contract worth $5 million over 10 years and a compensation package worth around $1 million annually. Manetta reportedly has been authorized to offer Calipari as much as $1.5 million.

Sorry Manetta, but as long as Calipari is doing commercials for every restaurant, car dealership and insurance agency in town and coaching the No. 1 team in the nation, I think that makes up the difference.

• Is it me or are a lot of professional sports athletes in trouble right now? First off, good ol' Michael Irvin, of the Dallas Cowboys was caught in a hotel room with two "self- employed models." Officers seized nearly three ounces of marijuana, almost two ounces of cocaine and drug paraphernalia, in what they said was a party in progress.

Angela Renee Beck, one of the models in the room with Irvin, claimed sole responsibility of all the drugs and under Texas law they arrested only her.

"Obviously she did take the rap for everyone involved," said police lieutenant Jimmy Perdue.

That's right Michael, not a problem. You just go back to catching passes and dancing in the endzone. We don't want you to get in trouble.

Quentin Coryatt of the Indianapolis Colts turned himself in yesterday to the Marion County Prosecutors office in Indiana, five days after pleading guilty to pointing a firearm at a motorist in a traffic dispute.

He is scheduled for a court hearing later this month, as he could face up to a maximum three years in prison for this Class D felony.

Rod Strickland of the Portland Trail Blazers also pleaded guilty yesterday to assault of his ex-girlfriend, punching her in the head last November.

Strickland was ordered to attend a therapy program for batterers by a Bronx Criminal Court.

Notice a little trend here, Mr. Irvin?

• The San Francisco Giants and Pacific Bell announced a $50 million alliance and sponsorship agreement Wednesday that calls for the team's new stadium at China Basin to be called Pacific Bell Park.

I can't help but talk about this kind of issue on how corporate sponsors are taking over pro sports, stadiums and how everything is such a marketing ploy.

I guess if the company is going to put up the money then then it's pretty tough to refuse, but I was one of those people who was not quick to refer to the Celtics new home as one named after a bank.

Disney now has reached a deal with Anaheim to renovate Anaheim stadium, home of the California Angels. This could clear the way for the company to purchase the club.

I can't wait for this one. Can you say, "Disney Angels," or how about "The Mickey and Donald Dome?" I've had it. What's next. Oscar Meyer Arena? Frito Lay Park?

• For all of you who are now saying, "I had Kentucky vs. Syracuse all along," you can forget it. Since I am not able to have the viewing pleasure of ESPN in my dorm room, I frequently tap in the ESPNET Sportszone on the Internet.

They had a contest for you to pick all the teams of the NCAA tourney with the winner heading to next year's Final Four. Seventeen people had the correct Final Four teams.

But only two people, including contest winner Nick LeRoy, out of 105,000 people who filled out the bracket in the tourney for this contest, had the final match-up. LeRoy's off to the 1997 Final Four. Congratulations. I wonder if he'll sell his tickets?

UMass track squads to host BC

■ Men hope depth enough to beat Eagles

By Jay Warner
Collegian Staff

This Saturday afternoon the Massachusetts men's track and field team will look to continue their early season success as they face-off with Boston College and University of Hartford in a tri-meet starting at noon on UMass' Llewelyn Derby Track.

After taking first place in last weeks quad-meet with Vermont, Maine and Hartford, the Minutemen will have their hands full with the Eagles, a team they faced twice during the indoor track and field season. The first meeting between these two teams this winter took place at the New England Challenge Cup where B.C. came up on the losing end, being outscored 91-73. The Eagles returned the favor at the New England Championships where they placed third in comparison to Massachusetts eighth place finish.

"The higher the level the meet, the better their front-end talent shows up," coach Ken O'Brien said. "Hopefully with just a tri-meet, just the three of us, our depth will shine through."

As could be seen in last weeks meet, the UMass squad counts on the whole team rather than just a few individuals. In last weeks quad-meet, nine Minutemen took home first place finishes, showing that there are a number of guys who can step up and deliver when the team needs it. In comparison, the Eagles will come at UMass with quality talent, especially in the field events, but lack the numbers to thoroughly dominate any single aspect of the match.

"I believe balance is the key, but on any given night a person or two might bubble up and have a larger impact," O'Brien said. "I think we'll have depth on them in the jumping events with Carlos Peralta and Andre Roach, but I hope that our numbers will be able to overcome them. On the track, we just have to hold it fairly even."

"Boston College has a lot of what I like to call top-end individuals who can score highly in any meet that they are involved in," O'Brien added. "They've got some very good individuals."

All in all, O'Brien believes the meet can be summed up in one simple sentence.

"It will all come down to the depth, balance, and numbers of our squad versus the quality of their squad."

The Hartford Hawks, a team that UMass face in last weeks quad-meet, will also be on the card this weekend. However, after last weekends dismal performance in which they managed to score a whopping total of four points, they would appear to be the least of the Minutemen's concerns.

"Is to keep everybody healthy."

UMass also hopes to have a lot of people qualify for the ECAC Championships and right now they are well on their way in doing that. The Minutewomen also hope to finish better than last year when they had only one loss. Overall the Minutewomen look strong in all their events.

They have an abundance of talent in the relays. Last week in the sprint relay the quartet of Bryan, Shelanda Irish, Emma Gardiner and Melanie Bell cruised to a victory in a time of 49.9. The closest competitor was Vermont with a time of 50.6.

The Minutewomen are also strong on the distance relay. The 4x400m team composed of Michelle Cooper, Yves Amazon, SilifaKenku and Donaghue cruised to victory in a time of 4:06.2.

In the jumping events UMass also looks very powerful. In the meet last week Bell won the long jump with a jump of 5.47m. Rosey Bryan should also contribute in this event. She had the school's second farthest long jump last season.

In the triple jump the Minutewomen have a lot of top-notch returnees. Their biggest loss is Janey Meeks, the school record holder in this event. Nicole Way, who took second in the triple last week, should be a force in this event throughout the season.

■ Minutewomen set to tangle with Boston

By Steve Clements
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts women's track and field team will face intrastate rival Boston College this Saturday at Llewelyn Derby Track behind the Williams D. Mullins Center at noon.

Rebecca Donaghue will be a key in helping UMass to a victory over BC. In a meet on March 30, Donaghue won the 1500m in a time of 4:36.

Another one the Minutewomen's top performers in the outdoor season should be Heather Brown, a junior javelin thrower. She is both an ECAC qualifier and an Olympic trial qualifier.

"The team is doing great so far," assistant coach Kelly Liljeblad said. "But it is still the beginning of the season, and the oudoor season is short."

In a meet last week, the Minutewomen were without the services of Anya Forest, the school record-holder in the 100m hurdles. Rosey Bryan picked up the slack by winning the event.

The team's goals for the season are to finish as one of the top two teams in New England Connecticut should also be a top contender this season. UConn is a very strong team with a lot of depth.

"Another goal," Liljeblad added.

Minutewomen tennis drills Stags, improve to 14–1

By Mike Corey
Collegian Staff

Chalk up another impressive victory for the Massachusetts women's tennis team. Yesterday afternoon in Connecticut, the Minutewomen won their fifth match in as many tries this spring, as they took care of Fairfield by the count of 7–2.

The match was scored using a nine point total as opposed to just seven, making all six singles and three doubles matches count.

UMass now ups their record to 14–1 overall this season and 5–0 this spring.

"This was a good win for us," coach Judy Dixon said. "Fairfield was a solid team, and they played a solid match."

UMass trailed the match early after the first three singles matches only coming up with one win. It was No. 1 singles player Liesl Sitton grabbing the victory which is becoming a trend for her, 6–2, 6–1 over Amy Hanson.

In the first of the next two contests, Noelle Orsini lost to Mary Fitzpatrick 6–3, 6–1. Following that match in the No. 3 singles battle, Jackie Braunstein was defeated by Maureen Caruso 6–3, 6–4.

The next match featured Liz Durant for the Minutewomen taking on Deidre Tindall. Durant won the first match 6–3, and was leading the second 4–1, before Tindall came back and tied it up.

That got coach Dixon thinking a little bit after it was tied.

"If we lose three singles matches, and we go into the doubles [at best] tied 3–3, I think that would have given the advantage to Fairfield," Dixon said.

Durant came back however to win the next two points and UMass cruised from there on to the victory.

"When we pulled that match out, I knew we had the match in hand," Dixon said.

The thing that has been plaguing the mind of coach Dixon though has been the play of the No. 2 and No. 3 singles, and No. 2 doubles play.

"There has to be an answer for every match," said Dixon. "Every match has to be contested. It's time for us to find an answer to our No. 2 position in the singles and doubles."

However, the Minutewomen were successful in every doubles match yesterday. Sitton and Caroline Steele got the victory at No. 1 6–2, 6–4. Durant and Jackie Braunstein at No. 2, 3–6, 6–4, 7–5 and Lana Goredetskaya and Marie-Christine Caron won at No. 3 by the tally of 6–1, 6–3.

"I'm really excited that we pulled out the No. 2 doubles match," Dixon said. "This match was more of a challenge for us, but we played very strong."

Overall Dixon felt like the team was well prepared and played a strong match.

"This is exactly what I expected, and exactly what we needed," Dixon said. "These kids are tougher than I thought. Their mentally tough, they can't wait for the Atlantic 10's, and they're really excited about the rest of the schedule. I mean, who would of thought women's tennis would be 14–1 right now."

Pitino coach to Celtics?; GT's Marbury makes move to NBA official

Darren Cohen on the NBA

Minutes after Monday's win over Syracuse, the question was asked as rumors started flying. Will Rick Pitino, head coach of the National Champion Kentucky Wildcats leave the Bluegrass State?

Reports indicate that Pitino would only consider leaving his dynasty in wasting if he was offered the same type of position that Pat Riley has with the Miami Heat. Of the many possible NBA coaching openings, two are the most intriguing for Coach Pitino, Boston and New Jersey.

While Pitino has stated that "total control" of an operation is a must, he has one primary aspiration — winning. There has never been a coach that has won both an NCAA title and an NBA title. With that in mind, this issue could heat up as the NBA streaks toward the playoffs.

The Celtics, a franchise in disarray, would roll out the red carpet for Pitino. Pitino, a UMass alumnus, has openly stated that he likes Boston and wouldn't mind being back on the east coast. Currently the Celtic operation, run by M.L. Carr, is on a fast track to nowhere. His signing of vastly overrated guard Dana Barros has tied up useful cap money and his leadership as coach has been questioned. Although, Pitino would be a great fit in Boston, it is unlikely (GM/Coach) Carr would relinquish both his titles.

Another possible destination for Pitino is New Jersey, to run the basketball team known as the Nets. When John McMullen, owner of the New Jersey Devils bid $90 million dollars for the Nets, he already has "his candidate" in mind, Pitino. Supposedly, if the team is in fact sold to McMullen, Lou Lamoriello, current GM of the Devils would become the Nets President.

For those who are unaware, Lamoriello was the AD when Pitino was the coach of the Providence Friars. The ballclub also might pursue a move to Nashville, Tennessee. Pitino would assume control of the operation as GM/Coach and the Nets would suddenly become a team worth watching. If the team is not sold, it is unlikely Pitino would leave Kentucky for the Nets in their current state.

Less than a year after graduating from high school, Stephon Marbury announced Wednesday he is renouncing his final three years eligibility and leaving Georgia Tech for the NBA. Marbury, a freshman, started slowly at Tech and then exploded as he led the Yellow Jackets to the Sweet 16. Reports state that Georgia Tech coach Bobby Cremins, is expected to speak with an agent soon to get some idea of what Marbury's first contract could look like.

Marbury has been adamant in saying that if he was not drafted within the top five picks, he would "most likely" return to Tech. Personally, although Marbury may be physically ready for the NBA, he may not be mature enough.

After all, what will he talk about with players that are 10-15 years older than he. Stephon, just to let you know, Vancouver is a long way from Coney Island.

With Marbury's name in the draft mix, the top five could look something like this: 1) Marcus Camby: Yes, a year at the small forward position would benefit Marcus's game. However, passing up the chance to be the first pick overall would not be easy for the Hartford native. 2) Ray Allen 3) John Wallace (only since Monday) 4) Marbury 5) Kerry Kittles (bet you thought Ross Burns could sneak in behind the Tech star.) Look for Wake Forest's Tim Duncan and Georgetown's Allen Iverson to stay in school.

Spanning the "Globe"

• The Chicago Bulls, on their quest to win 70 games only need to go 7–4 in their remaining eleven.

• Vancouver won, no really they did; Late Wednesday night the Grizzlies Blue Edwards hit a jumper with less than a second remaining to beat Minnesota. The win ended Vancouver's record setting 23-game losing streak.

• See if you recognize any of these last names: Mack, Recasner, Breaux, Jones and Booker. Give up? They are the Houston Rockets core these days. Injuries have torn apart Houston so badly this season, they should give Ralph Sampson a call.

Where are they now?
1) Mike Smrek
2) Terry Catledge
3) Rodney McCray
4) John Morton
5) Mark Alarie

Baltimore sweeps series with Kansas City; Cards error their way to a 10–9 loss

BALTIMORE (AP) — The Baltimore Orioles' overpowering lineup virtually guarantees quite a few comeback victories this season. Granted, that doesn't mean they'll win every game in which they trail by three runs after seven innings.

"Don't think it's going to be like this every day," said Rafael Palmeiro after the Orioles used a five-run eighth inning to beat the Kansas City Royals 5-3 Thursday.

"Of course," Palmeiro said, "we'll be glad to take this one."

Chris Haney took a five-hit shutout into the eighth, but he never got another out. The Orioles sent 10 men to the plate in the inning against three Kansas City pitchers, all of whom yielded at least one hit.

Brady Anderson led off with a single and scored on a double by Roberto Alomar. After Haney walked Rafael Palmeiro, Hipolito Pichardo (0-1) came in and threw a wild pitch, putting runners on second and third. Bobby Bonilla pulled out of an 0-2 hole to hit a sacrifice fly before and Cal Ripken doubled to left, tying the score.

B.J. Surhoff was given an intentional walk and Chris Hoiles followed with an infield single, loading the bases. Terry Clark relieved and got Tony Tarasco to hit a grounder to second base, but the relay throw after the force play at second was too late for the double play. Jeffrey Hammonds capped the uprising with an RBI single.

"You've got to give them credit," Haney said. "They've got a lot of high-paid players who earn their money, and they're all on one team. To get one out after another is a battle."

Haney made it through the potent lineup twice without suffering any damage, but the Orioles caught up to him the third time around. "Chris pitched a marvelous, marvelous game, but we were finally able to get him out of there, thank goodness," Bonilla said. "Believe me, I was happy to see him gone."

Arthur Rhodes (1-0) pitched two scoreless innings and Randy Myers worked the ninth for his second save, completing the Orioles' first three-game sweep of the Royals since 1992.

Baltimore hasn't started a season with three straight wins since 1985.

"This was a great come-from-behind win," Orioles manager Davey Johnson said. "You've got to have those if you're going to win the pennant."

Kansas City put together five straight hits against Scott Erickson in the fifth to take a 3-0 lead. After Joe Vitiello was thrown out at the plate on a single by David Howard, Bip Roberts hit a two-run double off the right-field scoreboard and Tom Goodwin singled in a run.

But the 3-0 lead didn't really feel secure. In fact, the Royals almost felt as if the three-run cushion was merely good enough to put them in position for a win.

"We were in the game until the eighth inning," Haney said. The Royals next host Boston for three games, then play the New York Yankees.

"It's a little adversity right now," manager Bob Boone said. "We're going to see what we're made of. You develop character through adversity, but if I had my druthers I wouldn't schedule Baltimore, Boston and the Yankees."

Notes: Including the 1983 AL playoffs and World Series, Ripken played in his 2,165th consecutive game — passing the 2,164 successive regular and post-season starts made by Lou Gehrig. His double gave him 818 extra-base hits for his career, tying him with Brooks Robinson atop the Orioles' career list... The Royals stole two bases and went 6-for-6 in the series... Hammonds hit his third double — one-third his total of all last season... Bonilla went 0-for-3, ending his career-best hitting streak at 22 games.

NEW YORK (AP) — One out from a St. Louis victory, Gary Gaetti couldn't find his gold glove.

Gaetti, the four-time Gold Glove third baseman, committed the eighth error of the game Thursday, and his miscplay in the ninth inning resulted in a two-run rally that cost the Cardinals a 10-9 loss to the New York Mets.

"It's the difference in the ballgame," Gaetti said.

New York tied a team record by making four errors during a five-run Cardinals eighth, spoiling a successful major league debut by the Mets' highly regarded right-hander Paul Wilson. And Willie McGee's ninth-inning RBI single off John Franco put St. Louis ahead 9-8.

But all that was forgotten when Gaetti allowed Chris Jones' routine grounder through his legs with two outs, enabling Edgardo Alfonzo to score the tying run.

Brent Mayne followed by singling home the winning run off Dennis Eckersley (0-1).

"I didn't get over to the ball in time, and it didn't come up," Gaetti said. "Late in the game, you try to position yourself strategically, and I just got caught in between."

Franco (1-0), the Mets' fifth pitcher, earned the win despite allowing McGee's tiebreaking single.

"It was one of those crazy games," Franco said.

Mayne was 1-for-9 lifetime against Eckersley in the American League, but liked his chances in the ninth.

"I know how he throws. I know what he features," Mayne said. "I did go into the situation feeling very comfortable at the very least."

St. Louis tied the game by converting four errors into a five-run eighth, making it 8-all. McGee and Ron Gant had RBI singles and Ray Lankford drove in a run with a grounder.

New York took advantage of three Cardinals errors that generated four unearned runs off Alan Benes. He was charged with seven runs on seven hits in 3 1-3 innings.

John Mabry's RBI single gave the Cardinals a 1-0 lead in the second but the Mets tied the score when Cardinals shortstop Royce Clayton's fielding error allowed Todd Hundley to score the tying run in the home second.

Bernard Gilkey's RBI single and Benes' wild pitch that allowed Gilkey to score gave the Mets a 3-1 lead in the third.

Luis Alicea's fielding error and a dropped throw at the plate by catcher Pat Borders for another error gave the Mets two runs in the fourth. Rico Brogna's double down the right field line drove in the final two runs of the inning to put the Mets in front 7-1 and finish Benes.

I think I've found a cure for some of these deadly infectious diseases. Follow me closely on this.
When germs go into our bodies they are not reading books. They are eating.
They're eating us. Maybe on Wednesday they all gather 'round the liver, then on the following Monday they start on the lungs...
What if we offered them something else to eat?...free. We lure them out of the body with an offer of... let's say.....hamburgers... teeny weeny hamburgers..... with infitesimally small pickles.
When they come out, we throw 'em on the floor and step on 'em. I haven't worked out all the details yet, but I feel very good about the basic concept.

Minutemen to host No. 10 Duke

By Matt Vautour
Collegian Staff

In search of its first victory against a ranked team, the No. 18 Massachusetts men's lacrosse team will battle No. 10 Duke Saturday at 12:30 p.m. at Richard F. Garber Field.

At 3-3, the Minutemen are two goals away from being 5-1, with heartbreaking losses against Hofstra (15-14) and Army (9-8). With three losses under their belts, the Minutemen are hoping that potential success against Duke could be a jump start for the rest of their season.

Massachusetts coach Greg Cannella has made practice "tough" on his team this week and stresses a full team effort is necessary.

"Anytime you have a chance to beat a ranked team, especially a team ranked above [you], is a great one," he said. "We need a great effort, and it can't be just 10 guys he stressed." he said. "We need it to be all 35 guys. We need to be hitting all on all of the cylinders, to have everything going."

Duke enters the game at 5-3, and will be looking to atone for a 15-13 upstate at the hands of Harvard.

One player looking to step up his play is All-America Candidate Brendan Glass. After a scoreless performance against Army and a self-described "disappointing" game against Boston College, Glass is taking steps to keep that from happening again. The junior attackman was one of a handful of UMass players that were on Richard F. Garber Field well before practice started yesterday hoping to improve for Saturday's game.

"No more goose-eggs," he shouted.

The game will be the fourth ever meeting between the Minutemen and Blue Devils, but the first ever time that the teams will battle in the Pioneer Valley.

"Just the fact that we can get Duke to play on our campus, at Garber field is great," Cannella said. "Because of the type of University that they are academically and athletically, it is great to have them here. It shows me a lot about the stature of our program that they will come here."

Even with those points aside, Cannella is happy to be playing at home.

"It's great to be home, hopefully we can use it to our advantage," he said.

The Minutemen are especially familiar with Duke goalkeeper Joe Kirmser, who played brilliantly in Duke's narrow victory (9-8) over the Minutemen in Durham a year ago. Cannella has lauded the Blue Devil defense as well

"Duke is a real good, solid defensive team." Cannella said. "They are probably the biggest, size wise, college lacrosse team I have ever seen. There are probably only two guys on their entire roster that are under 200 pounds. You hope that you can use your quickness, your speed and your smarts. Lacrosse is a game that you don't have to be big."

THANG VO / COLLEGIAN

Brendan Glass, who was shutout last week against Army, pledged not to let that happen again as UMass take on Duke at Garber Field tomorrow at 12:30 p.m.

Softball pummels CCSU Set to open A–10 slate

By Fred Hurlbrink, Jr. & Leigh Torbin
Collegian Staff

Defense.

The Massachusetts softball team's defense of it's Atlantic-10 crown starts and ends with just that — defense.

The Minutewomen's poor fielding is the only aspect of their game that is lagging behind as both Liz Wagner and Danielle Henderson are hitting their collective strides on the mound and the UMass offense is beginning to click on all cylinders.

Winners of eight of the last 10 A-10 titles, Massachusetts will travel to Blacksburg, Va. this weekend to face new conference rival Virginia Tech for a pair of games that will commence the Minutewomen's intra-conference schedule. The Lady Hokies are a perfect 6-0 in their new conference having swept double headers with Fordham, Dayton and St. Bonaventure.

The Va. Tech offense so far this season has pumped out a .288 team batting average led by senior shortstop, Melissa Sanderson. Sanderson, hitting a robust .397 on the spring, also leads the team with five doubles, three triples, a home run and 22 runs batted in.

Sanderson is the cornerstone of a fairly solid Lady Hokie infield that employs three 300+ hitters while Christine Trunnell is the strongest of the Tech outfielders hitting at a .373 clip with 12 RBI.

Rebecca Aase, pitching coach for the Lady Hokies, has a three-woman rotation going early on, with senior Tina Diamond and impressive freshman hurler Heather McKenzie leading the way. Diamond has struck out 60 in as many innings while posting a 2.57 ERA in her first 11 starts. McKenzie, in mostly a relief role, has won five games, walking just 11 in 40 innings of work. Junior Jennie Kallio has also logged time on the hill.

The few slumping Minutewomen are slowly emerging and should provide a tough weekend for a very average Virginia Tech squad.

With their conference opener lurking on the horizon, the Minutewomen needed to play solidly in all aspects of their game yesterday when they faced off against Central Connecticut State in a doubleheader in New Britain.

The Minutewomen entered the contests with a 31-5 all- time mark against the Blue Devils (3-17), whose only wins this season came against Lambuth College, Cumberland College and the University of North Alabama, in Pensacola, Florida.

"We needed to have a solid performance going into conference play," UMass head coach Elaine Sortino said.

Sortino, and her club, got just that as the Minutewomen pummelled the overmatched Blue Devils 7-2 and 11-0, to improve their record to 17-10 on the year.

The UMass pitching corps continued its dominance, as both Wagner and Henderson had spectacular outings.

Wagner went the distance in the first game allowing just one earned run and striking out three. Wagner's team-low ERA dipped to 1.33 with her mastery of the Blue Devils.

The second game saw freshman Danielle Henderson extend her scoreless inning streak to 29.1 innings, dating back to the deuce posted by Florida Atlantic in the third inning of a game on March 16 at the Lady Seminole Invitational. Henderson's ERA dipped to 1.57.

Henderson threw the first four innings, scattered three hits and struck out five, before giving way to Dani Ortega, who threw a perfect fifth. The game was called after the fifth due to the mercy rule.

St. Francis' scores 71 in Div. II record blowout

Around the Horn with Mike Corey

71. No, we're not talking about my personal best in the round of golf I just shot and this wasn't the most amount of points the Minutemen basketball team gave up this year. Nor is it the best score I've ever got on an exam this year in any class (close though).

71 is the amount of runs that the College of St. Francis scored in pummeling Robert Morris in a Chicagoland Collegiate Athletic Conference NCAA Div. II baseball game. Yes, 71 I was the final score.

In front of a screaming crowd of 50 fans this past Tuesday, the Fighting Saints had 30 batters go to the plate in the first inning alone in scoring 26 runs on 13 hits. They then followed that record-setting inning with 22 runs in the second, four in the third, and 19 in the final inning. The Joliet, Illinois-based school broke 12 NCAA Div. II team records and tied four others.

"I didn't tell the guys to stop swinging," first year St. Francis coach Tony Delgado said. "In a situation like this, you just keep playing baseball." Or how bout' keep kicking the other teams ass, right Tony?

St. Francis had 44 hits, 12 went for doubles, 10 for triples and one home run. Only 19 of the 71 runs were earned as the Robert Morris defense committed 16 errors.

St. Francis, which also coaxed 22 walks in the two-hour 34-minute game, saw its team batting average climb from .233 to .273. The contest was finally surrendered after four innings by Robert Morris coach Gerald McNamara.

He will be pleased to know that, "Upon further review," the league has issued an immediate mandate that, from this point on, any conference game in which a team holds a 25- run advantage without regard to what inning the game is in, will be halted and called an official game.

• Robert Parrish tonight will play in his 1,560th Career game tying Kareem Abdul-Jabbar for most games played in NBA history. Tomorrow night against Cleveland he will break the record in this his 20th season. Parrish has never had a major injury in his 20 years in the league.

I'm sure the Celtics wished that he was still in a green uniform and doing for Boston what he has been doing for the Hornets the past few games.

He's started the past 13 games for Charlotte, the team going 8-5 and on Tuesday against the Lakers he played 33 minutes scoring four points, grabbing 14 boards and seven blocked shots. The Chief continues to live on.

• What's up with the Red Sox already, and the new Channel 68 that the games are televised on? That is ridiculous. I want my TV-38 back. Channel 68 is Boston University's TV station. Somehow they compiled a 6.1 rating, compared to the Red Sox opener last year with a 5.7 rating on TV-38.

Nobody can watch the games. This station is not a network. Are we going to have to rely on our local stations to pick up a few games every once in a while so we can see it on cable.

Both 68, and NESN which also covers games are two stations that are not available on basic cable. NESN is a premium. Sorry to say, but as big as a fan that I am, I don't think that watching the Red Sox should have to come at a premium to anyone.

UM hosts 2 double-headers with Fordham

By Casey Kane
Collegian Staff

After playing 17 games, only one of which was at home, the University of Massachusetts baseball team will have ample opportunity to showcase its talents in front of a home crowd. The Minutemen will play Fordham today and tomorrow in back-to-back double-headers. Games both days start at noon.

UMass comes into the game with an impressive win over Connecticut and a 11-6 record, 2-2 in Atlantic 10 play. Fordham sits at 10-12-3, 2-1-1 in league play.

Fordham, new to the A-10, is an unfamiliar opponent for the Minutemen.

"We've never played them before, since I've been here," coach Mike Stone said. "From what I've heard they are a good team. They took the series from St. Joe's last weekend, so it'll be tough to win."

Starting on the mound in the opener for UMass will be junior right-hander Chad Paronto. Paronto has an ERA of 6.35, and has recorded 10 K's this season.

In Friday's second game, Jason Bennett will be the scheduled hurler. Bennett, a junior righty, currently boasts a 4.58 ERA and has struck out 15 batters on the year.

"Bennett pitched well last weekend [at Temple]," Stone said. "And Paronto pitched well even though we lost 3-0."

The pitchers for Saturday's contests have not yet been determined, but Stone is not lacking for possible starters.

"We have everybody ready," Stone said.

The Minuteman pitchers will be backed by a solid UMass effort at the plate. Currently, UMass has 10 players with batting averages over .300, including two over .400.

Centerfielder Nate Murphy leads the team with a .698 slugging percentage and 19 RBI. Murphy has recorded 25 hits, including seven doubles and three triples. He has taken pitchers out of the park twice.

Casey Kane on College Basketball

So Kentucky won the National Championship. Who cares?

Apparently nobody. The game drew the worst ratings for a NCAA Championship in prime time ever for CBS. The 18.3 it received was down a full five percent from last year's UCLA-Arkansas title game.

The previous low for a championship game was the 18.8 that 1988's Oklahoma-Kansas game drew.

The game was the second highest rated television event on CBS this year, second only to the Fiesta Bowl, which drew a 18.9.

CBS officials said that the game was still a success in their books, as the rating was 55 percent higher than CBS' average rating for prime time.

Somebody alert David Letterman, we have info here that just screams monologue.

• The tournament did have its share of memorable moments however.

Perhaps the fan favorite of the tourney was Princeton coach Pete Carrill and his curtain call. Carrill has been the coach of the Tigers since about 1843, and he announced his retirement before this year's NCAAs.

Princeton faced defending champ UCLA in the first round and defeated them, keeping Carrill's coaching career alive for one more game.

Before the game Carrill had said he didn't expect to win the tournament, but he wanted to go out with at least one more tourney win.

Congratulations, Coach. We'll miss you.

Another favorite (and my obvious UMass bias has no part in this) was Giddel Padilla. The senior Minuteman guard saw quality minutes in the national semifinal game against Kentucky.

A perennial bench-warmer, Padilla has played his UMass career in the shadows of his younger brother, star point guard Edgar Padilla.

When Giddel was put in the UK game, the approximately 5,000 UMass fans in the William D. Mullins Center didn't know what was going on.

"Giddel? Is Coach Cal really sending Giddel in?"

The elder Padilla did not disappoint, though, scoring four points in an effort that was anything but a get-the-scrubs-in- for-the-last-few-seconds show. He also dished out an incredible assist to Marcus Camby, which left the Minuteman fans in Mullins speechless.

Seeing Giddel play alongside Edgar in what was to be Giddel's last college game nearly brought a tears to my eyes. For me, that made the tournament.

Thank you, Giddel.

• And what about memorable plays?

Darvin Ham's back-board shattering dunk against North Carolina was prime footage for the video nuts who splice and edit the highlight films.

When Camby connected on his dunk against Georgetown, you could tell that the Minutemen knew there was no looking back.

Which dunk, you ask? The one that made all the highlight films, of course (as if that narrows it down).

Allen Iverson was also spectacular in the tourney, just not spectacular enough to get the job done for the Hoyas. Iverson's play was incredible though, with some dunks here, some three-pointers there. Ho-hum.

• After the NCAAs were narrowed down to four, Syracuse, UMass, Kentucky, and Mississippi State all complained about getting no respect.

Now that all is said and done, the Bulldogs are the only ones who have any right to whine.

After they won the Southeast Regional, the Bulldogs were given Final Four t-shirts and caps. The caps said "Mississippi."

When the official scorecards were distributed at the championship game, the schedules for both Kentucky and Syracuse were listed. Under the 'Cuse schedule, the Orangemen's national semifinal opponent was listed as "Mississippi."

• Kentucky fans are well... nuts, willing to do anything to see their beloved (ugh) Wildcats.

Altered social policy proposed for Greeks

By Anastasia Kudrez
Collegian Staff

The Greek community at the University of Massachusetts is in the process of implementing a new risk management policy for social events.

Greeks have been working to lift the ban placed on their social events, which has been in effect since early February. The GAMMA Committee (Greeks Advocating the Mature Management of Alcohol) prepared a social policy to present to the Dean of Students. If the new policy is approved by the dean, the ban will be lifted. Interfraternity Council President Jason Rose said the report will be presented to the dean by April 12.

"The last few weeks I've been doing a lot of research on what's been going on in the campus," he said.

Rose attributed many of the problems of the Greek system to a post-Vietnam era emphasis on alcohol-based social events. Fraternities around the country were rebuilding after the decline of membership during the war. The need for members and the temporary lowering of the legal drinking age to 18 attracted many who joined for social events and access to alcohol.

The original intent of Greek life, which was to provide an "extended family" and to share with a community, was neglected, according to Rose.

"Because of this historical trend, we're caught in a difficult transition back to the original purpose of the Greek system," he said.

The proposed policy was approved by the Interfraternity Council last Thursday. Some new regulations include specific time frames for daytime functions, happy hours and list parties. Parties must end at 1:00 a.m. in compliance with Amherst's noise ordinance.

All events must be registered at the Greek Affairs Office two weeks in advance. Finalized guest lists must be submitted three days before the event. The Amherst Police Department will also have a copies of event registration forms.

Chapters are limited to one party each week, and the event must be scheduled on either Friday or Saturday night. Chapters can host parties on Thursday nights if their average GPA exceeds the University's "all men's" or "all women's" average. Michael Wiseman, director of Greek Affairs, said the all-men's average is 2.58, and the all-women's is about 2.8.

The new policy requires parties to be "bring your own beer" or third party vended. Alcohol will be allowed outdoors only during daytime functions and happy hours. Wiseman cautioned the council to monitor these events carefully.

"It doesn't matter if you're registered for happy hours or not," he said. "As soon as someone steps onto the sidewalk with an open can of beer and an Amherst policeman sees it, it doesn't matter."

The Greek area is also attempting to clean up its physical appearance. In a March 25 memorandum from Wiseman, chapters were reminded to clean and maintain their properties.

"The ban on special events also includes a ban on 'alteration of physical property' i.e. — the vandalism of houses and yards with toiletry products," the memorandum read. "Although such actions are never appropriate, they are definitely not appropriate now."

Rose said he hopes the new policy will be a positive step toward restructuring the Greek community at UMass. He said many Greek leaders recognize the need for change and are working to bring repute back to the system.

"We have to change the mentality of a culture, and it's really hard," he said.

Penn State points protest at PepsiCo

STATE COLLEGE, Pa. (AP) — Snacking on Pizza Hut or Doritos chips may be the norm for many college students around the country. But a growing group of collegians are following in the footsteps of their baby boomer parents and protesting corporations for their operations in Burma, calling for the military regime in this southeast Asian nation to step aside and allow the elected government to take over.

From Harvard to Virginia Tech to the University of Washington, students are avoiding Unocal gas stations and PepsiCo Inc. products, including Pizza Hut, Taco Bell and KFC restaurants and Doritos and Lays chips.

"We can draw a relationship between our behavior here at Penn State and a situation on the other side of the world," said Andrew Miller, a Penn State senior majoring in political science. "A lot of people think the situation is very distant and has nothing to do with us. But our behavior here has ramifications everywhere."

Lollapalooza loses in Northampton

NORTHAMPTON (AP) — The permit application said promoters wanted to bring some big bands to Northampton Airport and the city apparently thought they meant polka or swing.

As it turned out, the city unknowingly granted a permit for a Northampton stop on this summer's Lollapalooza tour, featuring the big bands of Metallica, the Ramones and other heavy-metal and punk rock acts.

Now city councilors, at the urging of Mayor Mary Ford, have voted unanimously to yank the permit for the July concert. City Councilor Mary Tymoczko, who lives near the airport, said at the council's Thursday night meeting that city ordinances require that set-up and dismantling time be included in the 12-hour special permit for the concert.

However, she said, Lollapalooza promoters told her that they would need up to a week to erect the stages, fencing and a field hospital for the concert and another 36 hours, at least, to dismantle the structures.

City Solicitor Janet Sheppard said the councilors approved the permit in March after they were told about 10,000 people were expected to listen to polka music. Instead, she said, the rock concert is expected to draw 35,000 to 50,000 people.

Soup kitchen struggles to dish out

By Anastasia Kudrez
Collegian Staff

To continue serving free hot meals to people in need the only operating soup kitchen in the Amherst area, Not Bread Alone, needs its own bread — $10,000 worth.

According to Not Bread Alone coordinator Vicky Wanner Stosz, the program depends upon contributions for its $24,000 annual budget. Amherst donates about $5,000 a year, and Hampshire County usually donates $1,000, but it is uncertain whether the county will have money to give this year.

"The program is in jeopardy because of Governor Weld's cuts," Stosz said. "In Boston they sort of forget that Western Massachusetts exists."

Stosz, who has been coordinator for the last three months, said she hopes the needed funds will appear before the fiscal deadline.

"That's my biggest worry, just to stay afloat," she said. "We need to raise $10,000, and we need it by June."

Not Bread Alone is located in the First Congregational Church on Main Street. The program's mission is to provide nourishment and a network of friendship and support for people in need. Stosz works with various groups of volunteers, preparing family style meals and grocery packages on Saturday and Sunday mornings.

A University of Massachusetts graduate, Stosz has a bachelor's degree in Environmental Design with a concentration in urban studies. Pushing back her sleeves and pounding a five pound roll of USDA hamburger, she explained why she got involved in the seven-year-old program.

"I took a few jobs in sales, and it was so unfulfilling," she said. "I wanted to help people. Now I feel like I'm doing good, and I can get creative with the food."

As Stosz rolled meatballs onto oversized baking pans, carloads of volunteers arrived. Over 25 volunteers prepared lunch for the 40 guests expected at noon. Under Stosz's delegation, the kitchen soon resembled an assembly line. Fifth graders from St. Francis Church in Belchertown snapped green beans as chaperons chopped broccoli. Volunteers from UMass' Chi Omega sorority prepared a stew and chocolate chip cookies.

Washington Tower targeted by vandals

By Daniel Sullivan
Collegian Staff

Thursday night, a flood in a ninth floor stairwell of Washington Residence Hall culminated a week of illegal activity.

"We have had three malicious activations of fire alarms and sprinklers in the past week," said Craig Alimo, residence director of Washington Residence Hall. "Numerous rooms were affected."

The sprinklers were activated for about 10 to 15 minutes until Environment, Health and Safety arrived, said Norman Hiza, area director of Southwest-South residential area.

"Many gallons per second come out of the sprinklers," Hiza said. "On some levels, two to three inches of water was on the floor."

Residents were ordered out of the building for two hours during the clean-up process, Hiza said. Dry vacuum cleaners mopped up the water.

"Even a half an inch of water is a problem," Hiza said. "The process of drying takes a long time."

Computers, stereos, clothes and carpets were damaged because of the flood, Hiza said.

"After awhile, the smell is hard to get rid of," Hiza said. "They have taken a lot of abuse lately. It is the fourth time in six days [flooding has occurred.]"

Damages to students' belongings are not insured by the school, Hiza said. Most students are covered by their parent's home-owners policies, he added.

The water seeped past the ninth floor and affected all the floors below, Hiza said. Elevator use was cut off for more than five to six hours, while the water dried, he added.

The tide of water was stopped from rooms by a few quick thinking students, said Eleanor Nunn, a sophomore biology student. Her room avoided water damage when she plugged up a door after seeing the water com-

Live bomb discovered in suspect's tiny cabin

By Nicholas K. Geranios
Associated Press

HELENA, Mont. — Investigators discovered and defused a live bomb in the cabin of Theodore Kaczynski, the former math professor suspected of being the elusive Unabomber, a federal law officer said Saturday.

Agents who have been warily searching Kaczynski's cabin since he was taken into custody Wednesday believe the bomb they defused Friday was intended for someone in particular, said the official. Authorities now have little doubt that they have apprehended the man responsible for placing or mailing bombs that have killed three people and injured 23 others over the past 18 years.

"I've been working this case since 1985," said the official, who spoke on condition of anonymity. "If it isn't him, I don't know who it is."

Agents have been X-raying about 40 boxes found in the loft of the 10-by-12-foot cabin where Kaczynski has lived for more than a decade. The X-rays were expected to conclude by early Sunday, the official said.

Reporters on Saturday got their first look at Kaczynski's remote home, a sparse hut without plumbing or electricity more than five miles from the town of Lincoln, Mont. They weren't allowed inside. The structure, made of dark-stained wood, is hidden in a wooded setting near the Continental Divide, about 300 yards from the nearest neighbor. It has two windows and a closed door with three locks.

There was a bicycle parked outside, a creek nearby and two gardens, where Kaczynski apparently raised vegetables. There was no sign of an outhouse.

The FBI had set up a table outside the cabin, but there was no sign of anything that looked like evidence, and agents refused to answer questions about their search.

Kaczynski, 53, was charged with possession of bomb-making materials and jailed without bail. The charge doesn't mention the Unabomber investigation and is intended to keep him in custody while investigators build a case.

A partially completed pipe bomb, bomb-making chemicals and components and notes on making bombs were in the cabin, and one law enforcement official said a typewriter found there appears to be the one the Unabomber used to type his 35,000-word manifesto and letters.

Kaczynski apparently had no car and no steady work in Montana. His cramped shack has no electricity or plumbing, which would appear to coincide with the Unabomber's aversion to modern society and technology described in the manifesto.

The search may be over after 18 long hard years

By Michelle Locke
Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — He was out there somewhere, just a twisted thought and a postage stamp away from his next victim.

Investigators didn't know where to look. So they looked everywhere — through tons of documents and acres of computer data — always hoping for one more lead to the terrorist known as the Unabomber.

In the end, the break in the 18-year chase came not from law officers toiling in file rooms and computer labs but from one family rummaging in a cluttered attic.

Those who hunted the Unabomber have no problem with that. "Not at all," said Don Davis, the No. 2 postal inspector in San Francisco and a member of the San Francisco-based task force of agents from the FBI, Treasury Department and Postal Service formed two years ago to accelerate efforts to find the bomber.

"We felt (a tip) would probably be our key all along. One of the first things we did... was to put together the reward ($1 million) and the reward poster and put out the 1-800 number," he said.

The tip that led to last week's arrest of Theodore John Kaczynski, 53, came from Kaczynski's younger brother, whose suspicions were aroused after he found some old writings of Ted's that seemed similar to the Unabomber's published "Manifesto."

For Davis, the break meant "relief and elation" and "pride for the folks that worked so long and hard on this case." The years of seemingly fruitless labor were not wasted, of course. The case now being built against Kaczynski rests on details amassed in countless days of legwork as well as the new information provided by the suspect's family.

Brother to release statement

SCHENECTADY, N.Y. (AP) — The man who tipped off federal officials that his brother might be the Unabomber is ready to release a statement, his lawyer said Saturday.

David Kaczynski, 46, led authorities to his brother, Theodore Kaczynski, after he found old writings of Theodore's that resembled the Unabomber's 35,000-word manifesto in the family house in suburban Chicago.

Kaczynski initially tried to get prosecutors to agree not to seek the death penalty against his brother. The Sacramento Bee reported in Sunday's editions, citing two federal sources. Prosecutors refused and he eventually turned over his brother's writings, the paper said.

"The family felt bad about what they were going to do," a federal source, speaking on condition of anonymity, told the newspaper. "But they shouldn't, because they saved lives." In the past 18 years, the Unabomber has placed or mailed bombs that killed three people and injured 23 others.

Rebecca Wiggins, the sorority's philanthropy coordinator, continuously stirred the stew.

"I never imagined myself cooking. I thought I'd just be serving the food," she said. "This is so much better, making the meal and working in the kitchen."

All the food prepared by the volunteers was donated from local merchants including Atkins Farm, Bread & Circus, Stop & Shop, Antonio's and Henion's Bakery. Other supplies were purchased from the Western Massachusetts Food Bank, which sells food and "salvage products," like band–aids and toothpaste, for 14 cents a pound.

In the dining room, volunteers pulled donuts, danishes and pastry from boxes, arranging the dessert table. Other volunteers brought out tablecloths, plates and silverware.

Nicholas Grabbe and his 13–year–old son Ben set up the tables, a job they've done together every weekend for two– and–a–half years. Pushing chairs to his son, Grabbe discussed the unique patrons of Not Bread Alone.

"You see all kinds of people you wouldn't normally expect to see in a soup kitchen, people hanging out reading their Shakespeare," he said.

"There are a lot of people in need in Amherst. Many are highly educated, as you'd expect in this community."

One guest proudly displayed his 1922 first edition of On the Edge of the Primeval Forest by Albert Schweitzer. As he ate the vegetables brought to the table, he described Schweitzer's history of philanthropy.

"Schweitzer had a reverence for life," he said. "Even if a mosquito was biting him, he'd gently push it aside."

Other guests socialized with the volunteers, and Lynne McMillan chaperoned the children as they carried plates of steamed vegetables to the tables.

"I hope the kids come back with a new outlook," she said.

Despite the communal spirit of the meal, the adult volunteers were aware of the financial burden shadowing the soup kitchen. Many said they hoped Not Bread Alone would find the funds to stay in operation. Tom Soja, the children's CCD teacher, watched his students talk with guests and play around the tables. Shaking his head slowly, he said Governor Weld is cutting funding in the wrong places.

"His cutbacks are putting even more people in the soup kitchen," he said.

Victims remembered by Clinton & Gore

By Harry F. Rosenthal
Associated Press

DOVER AIR FORCE BASE, Del. — As 33 flag-draped caskets were solemnly brought home on Saturday, a sorrowful President Clinton said that the lives of Commerce Secretary Ron Brown and 32 other victims of a plane crash reflected the best of America. "They are a stern rebuke to the cynicism that is all too familiar today." The president, his voice cracking with emotion on a raw, cloudy day, declared that "what they did while the sun was out will last with us forever."

The caskets were delivered to grieving, still-shocked families as the Air Force Band played hymns and "My Country 'Tis of Thee." Clinton, along with his wife and Vice President Al Gore, consoled each family in private, one-on-one. The emotion of the moment clearly showed in the president's face.

"Today we come to a place that has seen too many sad homecomings, because this is where we in America bring home our own, those who have given their lives in the service of their country," Clinton told the crowd.

He voice often near breaking, the president talked about his visits with the families. "Their loved ones were proud of what they were doing," he said. "They believed in what they were doing. They believed in their country and they believed they could make a difference."

Each of the victims of the airplane crash on a Croatian hillside was represented here by relatives wearing red-white-and-blue ribbons.

The president said the crash victims "carried with them America's spirit — what our great martyr, Abraham Lincoln, called the last best hope of earth."

"The sun is going down on this day," Clinton said. "The next time it rises it will be Easter, a day that more than any other reminds us that life is more than what we know... sometimes more than what we can bear. But life is also eternal. What they did while the sun was, out will last with us forever."

The Clintons and Gore led a large delegation of government officials to be here as the aluminum coffins were brought from a transport plane into hearses beside an open hangar by eight uniformed pall bearers each. Four howitzers on the tarmac fired a 19-gun salute.

Brig. Gen. William Dendinger, deputy chief of chaplains for the Air Force, offered a prayer. "Help us always to remember these public servants, ever mindful of their willingness to share their talents and their wisdom," he said.

Resident assistants held floor meetings Thursday to discuss the problems in the past week, Nunn said.

"They could tell by the methods of the person that he is a resident of the building," Nunn said. "The person is seriously ill."

Staff are asking residents to be more observant of people in the building and people are encouraged to report unusual individuals, Hiza said.

"We were told to take precautions," Nunn said. "They told us to keep our doors open to watch out for suspicious people."

"There is a lot of negative energy lately," Hiza said. "Large windows on the fourth floor were broken and bottles and tables were thrown from the building."

Additional security has been allotted to the building, said Hiza. Resident assistants will make more rounds and ensure a more visible presence, said Hiza.

There have been reports of furniture being thrown from Washington Residence Hall and a fire detector was ripped out of a wall on Saturday.

Also, police reports noted that a sprinkler was activated on the 13th floor on Tuesday. On Wednesday, a sprinkler was activated after a cloth was set on fire. The next day, a person damaged the resident director's door after taping an M–80 firecracker to the door.

People live in cardboard boxes

People live in alleys. People live on streets and people live in cardboard boxes.

Virtually everywhere you look, there they are. Homeless people. I'm not going to use this space to suggest ways that the government can solve this problem, or lay blame on any institutions who might be held responsible. While those are worthy ideas, what I would like to talk about is something much more basic than government appropriation of funds.

I think most people who walk down the street wish they could do something about the problem. Unfortunately, there are a lot of morons out there who like to mindlessly shuffle past these people with their heads down, muttering "Why don't they get a job?" These same individuals are quick to label the unfortunate people living on the streets as "lazy."

It is the absolute lack of respect that so many people show towards their fellow Human Beings that makes me want to retch.

But I think on some level these people who would just as soon harangue these people as help them are acting, at least partly, out of fear and ignorance. I think to all of us the prospect of someday losing everything we have is frightening. There is a desire to distance ourselves in some way from these people, to somehow make them seem less human. It's certainly easier to ignore someone if you don't think of them as your equal. Their reasoning appears to be this: All of these people on the streets are lazy, drug using, alcoholics. I, on the other hand am an intelligent person with a job. This will never happen to me because I am not like them.

And once, in their minds, they have put up that wall of separation between "us" and "them," then it makes a lot of sense to these people to look down on the homeless. They're seen as different and therefore somehow foreign; and consequently, in some convoluted, misanthropic way, less than human.

There is also something unnervingly classist about the whole attitude. The idea one person is better than another based on economic condition is an ignorant concept to carry around in your head.

Dan Levenson

Over spring break I found myself in a city. It was Montreal, and I'll admit, I liked this city (as much as I am capable of liking a city). Just like any other place, there are homeless people there, people who have to beg for change on the street just to survive from day to day. It was there I had something of an epiphany.

It occurred to me that very few people look the homeless in the eye when they talk to them. Even when we do drop change in their plastic cups or outreached hands, we rarely take the time to look at these people. You should try it sometime, most likely you'll find that all illusions melt away and what you are left with is a person who is no less human than you are.

I know it's far from reasonable to assume that we should give money to every person we pass on the street. If we did, we would be left with no money ourselves. So I'm not here to say you should walk around the streets giving away your life savings, because in the end, that really would not do anyone any good. But on the other hand I don't necessarily buy the argument that giving someone, who can't afford to buy a box of Cheezits, fifty cents is supporting that individual's alcoholism or drug addiction.

Well, maybe it is — but I don't know that for a fact. And who am I to judge anyway?

A message to our community

Let us, African men, who are living here in the United States of America, today, honor our ancestors through our celebration of African history and its untold contributions to world civilization. One of the most efficient ways for us to achieve this end is to stop calling the African woman — who rocks the cradle of civilization — bitch, trick, slut, hoe, skeezer, hootchie, tramp and whatever else.

Who must we stop calling our sisters the aforementioned names? We must do so because words are powerful. For example, Nommo, a concept from the Dogon people of Mali in West Africa, is "The life force is the fluid of such, a unity of spiritual-physical fluidity, giving life to everything, penetrating everything, causing everything... and since [humans] have power over the word, it is they who direct the life force. Through the word they receive it, share it with other beings, and so fulfill the meaning of life" (Muntu).

Lumumba Fernandes

Since humans have power over the word, we can direct the life force or energy, thus giving meaning to life. Also, another example of Nommo, the life force "the power of the word," whether written or spoken is illustrated in the Bible. John 1: 1-3 "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. All things were made by him (the Word) and without him (the Word) was not any thing made that was made."

Basically, the Word gives life and sustain life. However, we have been taught the opposite; that words do not hurt us. Remember: "sticks and stones may break my bones but words will never hurt me." Primarily, this was told to us by white (European) people. Finally, "white" people are starting to realize "the power of the word" — Nommo. That is why there is a TV commercial now with a white, young male child in a playground, in which he hears constant negative words in his mind that were told to him. The TV commercial ends with: "Stop child abuse, words do hurt."

Ultimately, words not only hurt us, but they break our spirit. Our spirit is inseparable from our being. In addition, the Bible says that the tongue is one of the smallest organs in our body, but it can cause death. If the tongue which symbolizes the Word, the life force, can cause death, then we know it is powerful. A similar proverb is "the tongue of a [human] is her sword." As a wise person said: our tongue is our sword of power. Certainly, we must "use it wisely" if we do not want to hurt or cause spiritual, physical, mental or emotional death to our sisters. Our word must be bond, that which gives unity instead of rendering antagonistic opposition or splitting us apart.

Furthermore, we must stop calling the African woman these vicious and poisonous names. If we do not, then we are perpetuating and contributing to our own oppression. Back in slavery, the slavemaster used to call the African woman "wench" or "wrench." This word was meant to degrade, humiliate and dehumanize her. Apparently, the slave master knew that words create images and images inform us of who we are. Negative images are due to low or no self esteem or self worth, they are easily caused by name calling. Today, we are doing the same thing because the words we use, whether or not we know it, degrades, humiliates, dehumanizes and even infuriates African women. So, in actuality, today, we are substituting the place of the slavemaster. We, the African man, have internalized, subconsciously or consciously, these vicious lies into our mind and lies are poison. This has thus poisoned our mind which affects the body and spirit.

We must remember that the African woman was not born a bitch, slut, hoe, skeezer, hootchie, trick or tramp and whatever else. It is not in her nature "to be," that is not her being. Western influence and white supremacy through slavery, colonialism, neo-colonialism, capitalism and in the guise of Christianity, taught and attempted to make her a wench or bitch and so on. An African proverb says, "If you teach a man, you teach an individual. If you teach a woman, you teach a village."

This simple but profound truth illustrates the importance of the woman. Therefore, if we teach and treat her (by calling her vicious names and disrespecting her) to become a bitch — like the slavemaster and white men tried to do — then we teach and treat the community to become a bitch. If she is not respected, then we, African men, will not be respected. She is our reflection and vice-versa. If she is a bitch, then we are dogs. So if we, as a people, are ever to be free from oppression, we must combat this vigorously; until then, we will never be free from oppression whether vertical, horizontal or internalized.

Therefore, if we fail to vigorously combat and eradicate this despiritualized mentality — that which keeps us from attaining harmony — then we are the ones to blame, not the Western influence, the slavemaster or the white men. Also, by labeling her as a bitch we have stamped her, permanently, for self-destruction. She becomes incorrigible. Even if she changes her lifestyle, she is usually reminded of what she did in the past. Getting rid of the old images is frustrating and debilitating.

In conclusion, we must stop calling each other vicious names and stop telling lies and gossiping. We must not misuse Nommo. As a wise man said, "there is nothing higher than the truth." Amilcar Cabral once stated, "You can't hide nothing from the people... it is the only way." Therefore, we must speak the truth. We must use the concept of Nommo, in any mode such as the verbal, written or artistic, in order to give meaning to life or awaken us to our humanity.

The blues

I transferred here, last year, as a sophomore and when I arrived here, I had been put in Southwest. I knew one other person, a girl, and she too lived in Southwest.

That first night was hard. I laid there in the dark, sweating, trying to sleep until about 1 or 2 a.m. when I heard a knock on my door and girlish laughter. I let in Allison and her blonde friend and they laughed at me in my boxer-shorts and disheveled hair. I got fired up, "Let's get some beer!"

Jeremy Herewitz

So we jumped in my car and drove down to Cumberland Farms on Route 9 because I had passed it on the way to campus and it looked like one of the places I buy beer at in New York.

We got there and I ran to the back cooler running back and forth looking for beer like a hungry, slobbering dog. I didn't find any.

I walked up to the cashier who was deeply engrossed in the latest issue of Hustler magazine, and asked, "Hey man, what gives? Where's the beer?" He laughed. "No, seriously." "Seriously?" "Yah, man I just transferred here, it's my first night, and I got a couple of chicks in my car and we want to get drunk."

Then he put his hand on my shoulder and explained it all. Beer and liquor only at package stores. "What the hell are package stores?" He told me. No liquor sold after 11 p.m., last call at 12:30 a.m.

I was turning white. What did I get myself into? Why did I leave my nice, warm school in Florida where I could get booze seemingly anywhere at anytime? Yah, to get a better education, but what kind of puritanical nightmare was I now in?

The clerk looked at me. Then he put a newly opened fifth of Wild Turkey on the counter and said, "Here man, you need this more than me." I looked at him. "Are you serious?" He picked it up, took a long belt off it, and said, "Yah, just take it and get lost. I don't want a whole lot of thank yous." I'd like to thank that guy now.

Since then I've managed to get drunk often and get that better education I had in mind, but still — what gives with these laws? Is it not a direct violation of church and state that we can't buy booze on Sunday? What's the rationale?

Most people tell me, "Leave it alone," when I get serious in my ranting and raving over this. Why?

I finally wrote this after a conversation with my friend Jarrod who goes to school at Cornell in Central New York. He told me how one morning he and his fraternity brothers were going to paint some school or something and he was horribly hung over. What's the saying, a little nip of the dog that bit you? So he went to buy a six-pack of relief and he found out that you can't buy booze until noon in the Empire State on Sunday and he freaked out. He writes for his school paper and he told me how he was going to write a scathing article. "I got you beat," I told him.

So here it is. I'm too lazy to organize any sort of rally for change and I generally beat the system by stocking up on Saturday, but still these blue laws are crap.

You can have your God, I have mine. He understands and accepts my friends Jack Daniels, Jim Beam and so forth. If you want to spend your Sundays weeping over your sins go ahead. I'll be drunk on my couch listening to the Pixies — real loud.

Baked

"If apples were peaches would you eat them all the same?"

I asked my father as he bit into the peanut butter and banana sandwich I had just whipped up for him. He furrowed his eyebrows and the only thing he could muster up in response was something to the effect of, "Remind me again, why am I paying $18,000 a year for your education? I think that muscle between your ears is turning into fat."

Stacey Shackford

I do believe Natalie Goldberg summed it up nicely. "When you bake a cake, you have ingredients (such as) sugar, flour, butter, baking soda, eggs, milk. You put them in a bowl and mix them up, but this does not make a cake. This makes goop. You have to put them in the oven and add heat or energy to transform it into a cake, and the cake looks nothing like its original ingredients." It's a lot like parents unable to claim their hippie kids... Milk and eggs look at their pound cake and say, "Not ours." Not egg, not milk, but activist daughter of middle class parents — "a refugee in her own home."

Going away to college has been well known to change a person. In fact, it's almost expected. Having just returned from a quite memorable Easter weekend with the folks, memories of other journeys back home are shooting darts back in forth, lodging themselves in my mind.

I must admit, I could feel my own mind slipping during those delirious long five weeks of JanTerm. Perhaps getting approximately 11 hours of sleep only to roll out of bed at two o'clock to catch the Love Boat, eat, shower and plan out some strange elaborate dinner every single day had an adverse effect on me, but I wouldn't want to rack my brain too much trying to come to any conclusions about that. My brain is wont to stimulation and if it receives none, it is wont to decay I'm afraid. Which is not to say I learned absolutely nothing over break. On the contrary, I learned how my cake was baked.

Allow me to elaborate. While at University of Massachusetts I believe myself to be quite the average college student (perhaps a bit more involved than most but pshaw). At "home," however, I seemed to have been transformed into this "highly intellectual underachiever" who was destined to fail in my career, whatever it might end up being. My sister was convinced I had taken drugs, and I do believe other members of my family contributed to my vegetarianism and other supposedly new facets of my personality to the same. Both my mother and my father openly wondered how they could be spending so much money on my education when it was obvious to them that I was learning not a thing. My father was beginning to wonder about everything at this point and I think my grandmother was convinced I was now homosexual because I didn't bring home any guy for her to meet.

Of course, being "home" itself was pretty scary. I had (almost) forgotten what it was like to live there and the reminder was quite harsh. First of all, I was thankful I still had my house key because no one was home to greet me. Then I realized that perhaps it was better that way as I wandered around and discovered that things were different around the house. My room was no longer my room but rather my sister's. Her old room was now turned into a guest room, sparsely furnished. This soon was the place I lived for the proceeding few weeks. There was a new sliding glass door in the dining room. The house had new siding. There was new furniture, a new TV and a new bathroom setup. The house even smelled differently.

My first meal was lovely as well. I was forced to make my own separate meal as my mother prepared steak extravaganza. Even though I told her beforehand that I had become a vegetarian while I was away, she somehow did not believe me. While I sat eating rice and beans and peas with my chopsticks my family munched away at their cow carcasses and stared at me in all my glitteryness.

Then the speaking began. My mother and sister began fighting over the most trivial things. It drove me up the wall. I refused to partake in such silliness. Instead, I became a peacekeeper throughout the meal. My sister turned on me and my dad said something about my "new Asian outlook on life" and about my new philosophy or something mundane like that. My mother tormented me about how she was positive I was about to fall out of school because she knew of two classes which I had missed because I went to a rally in Boston.

The rest of my vacation was far from chipper. A few nights later I was rescued from the waking nightmare by a few of my friends, while other nights I was stuck home being a subject for my sister's art project or science project or whatever other project of the week. In addition, I have never watched so much bad TV in my life.

Needless to say, I was overjoyed when the time came for me to pack my things once again and return to my new, lovely, happy dappy home at Butterfield. Of course, I was forced to put up with countless, "Soooo where did you go during break?" only to reply, "From the bathroom to the kitchen to the bedroom," while others recounted stories of travel abroad and bus trips across the entire United States, it was so worth it to be back.

Recounting such stories makes me truly believe that Goldberg was right. My cake has been baked, and I'm glad at the way it is has come out of the oven. My parents were not entirely out of the process since they gave me my first cookbook. But I think that maybe the ingredients they had originally planned have somewhat changed, not only in form but in content as well. They wanted chocolate, they got banana creme. Rather than a sweet, they got a fruitcake. Hey, the latter is healthier anyhow.

Duvall, Jones create a Family

Film tackles issues of racism; Irma P. Hall steals the show

A FAMILY THING
Directed by Richard Pearce with Robert Duvall, James Earl Jones
Playing at Hampshire Six

COURTESY ASSOCIATED PRESS

James Earl Jones stars in A Family Thing with Robert Duvall.

Lives get turned upside down in A Family Thing — a film about a man's struggle for identity when he finds out his life has been a lie and he has an incredibly difficult time accepting the truth.

Robert Duvall stars as this man, named Earl Pilcher. Earl is a born and bred Arkansas native. He has a wife and daughter, a white picket-fence farmhouse and owns a local equipment rental shop. Earl, somewhere in his sixties, has just laid his mother to rest when he receives a letter that leaves him in a state of shock.

Intending for the letter to be read after her death, his mother wrote that Earl was not her birth child. Her husband (his father) had slept with one of the servant girls on their farm, and hence Earl was born. Earl's mother had raised him since birth as if he was her own.

Earl's anguish over discovering his mother was not his biological mother pales in comparison to his ashamed fury to find out that he is half black. A blatant racist, who has carelessly tossed around the word "nigger" all of his life has just found out that he, a fair-skinned Southerner, is of African-American descent.

Earl takes a step in the right direction by performing his mother's last wish — that he visit his half-brother, Ray Murdock (James Earl Jones). He journeys out to Chicago and finds Ray, who is polite to him, but would rather not associate with him because of Ray's lifelong hatred of Earl's father.

Various roadblocks keep preventing Earl's departure from Chicago: he gets carjacked and winds up in the hospital with only Ray's name in his pocket. Forced to stay in Ray's tiny apartment, the two brothers begin to talk and discover they have a lot more similarities then they imagined.

Duvall and Jones have a quirky kind of chemistry that works on film — they capture that distant brotherly emotion and bring it out on screen. Duvall is not afraid to take risks, as his racist character slowly becomes exposed to inner city crime, poverty and what it means to be a black man. It's hard to hate Earl, because we know that his racist beliefs stem more from ignorance than vehemence, and he will soon become enlightened.

Jones portrays a strong man who occasionally exposes his weak side. Working as a security guard at City Hall, this widower lives in a tiny apartment with his son (Michael Beach), who is going through a divorce, and his elderly, blind Aunt T.

Aunt T. (Irma P. Hall) absolutely steals the show as the sturdy, yet comical old woman. Furious that Ray does not want to associate with his newfound brother, his blind aunt reminds him that she does not have the luxury of judging people by how they look anymore. Her immediate acceptance of Earl and lectures to Ray help expedite their friendship and finally acknowledged brotherhood.

While the film spends the majority of the time in Ray's urban environment, director Richard Pearce is adept at juxtaposing the worlds of the two men. Though one is rural and one urban, their environments have interesting little coincidences, like train tracks running through both of their yards — a symbol that the two, no matter how different, are connected.

A Family Thing is laden with humor, well-scripted and at times emotional. The drama, however, attempts more to make you wince at little flashes of reality than to weep, as well as prove that there is a warm light of hope at the end of the tunnel — and it succeeds. B+

N.Y.C. artist brings cut-outs, pigeons

By Seema Gangatirkar

Artist Anton van Dalen poses in a cardboard replica of his home in Avenue A Cut-Out Theatre.

In an upcoming art exhibit, Anton van Dalen brings his dramatic observations of life in New York City's Lower East Side to Herter Gallery. Using handmade stencils, paintings and drawings, van Dalen has captured the essence of the changing socio-political conditions in his neighborhood.

Not only does he preserve the flavor of his community in his artwork, but van Dalen also brings the community where he lives alive in Avenue A Cut-Out Theatre. In a statement, van Dalen said, "The concept for the project centers around the house and the neighborhood that I have lived in with my family since 1972. The Theatre itself, is a cardboard replica of my house which is located on New York City's Lower East Side, on Avenue A between East 10th and 11th streets." Van Dalen created Avenue A Cut-Out Theatre in 1975 after observing life and people on the streets.

While the neighborhood and its residents provided inspiration for van Dalen, he also stated that, "The concept for the Avenue A Cut-Out Theatre grew out of my struggle to free my artmaking from its traditional confines."

He begins the performance by carrying out a cardboard box that represents his home. As the performance proceeds, he removes the lids and takes out about 50 cardboard cutouts which help illustrate the different stories he tells.

Regarding the cut-outs, van Dalen mentioned, "I think of this theatre as part history art, part storytelling, part lecture, park entertainment about a neighborhood whose cultural wealth profoundly effected my sense of place and role in the world. It has been that diverse cultural wealth that has given me the parts that I assembled into this story."

Another interesting and charming piece of work is "The Pigeon Car" which features live pigeons. Van Dalen created "The Pigeon Car" for a New York City exhibit at Exit Art in 1987. However, the idea for putting live pigeons in the car originated in 1972, around the same time van Dalen moved to Avenue A.

Van Dalen discussed his feeling on the birds, "As a youngster, the pigeons I kept crowned my respect for domestic nature. My pigeon coop was a childhood shrine to domestic nature; its architecture and daily ceremony of flying an act of relationship with nature." Van Dalen's love of the birds continues to this day. On the roof of his apartment, van Dalen keeps a pigeon coop where he cares for and flies about 50 birds.

Van Dalen was born in 1938 and grew up around Amsterdam, Holland. He noted in his biography that, "My childhood memories are of war and nature." In later years, those memories became conflicting themes in his art.

The art exhibit, titled "Eye Speak," was organized and curated by undergraduate and graduate students in the New York Professional Outreach Program (NYPOP). The NYPOP program helps students bridge the gap between academic and professional art and includes weekend trip to New York City. Students were also able to meet with artists, art editors and gallery directors to learn about the curating aspect of art.

According to Carol Struve, Herter Gallery director, University of Massachusetts students drove to New York City and met with van Dalen. They then drove back with all the artwork and set it up together. The students were also involved with all aspects of publicity. Students designed the posters, table tents and advertisements.

Anton van Dalen will perform Wednesday, April 10 in Herter Auditorium, Room 227 at 4 p.m. The performance is free.

Godson of Soul soars in concert

COURTESY VERVE

Christian McBride and his quartet played at Bowker Auditorium Thursday night.

By Matt Wexler
Collegian Staff

CHRISTIAN MCBRIDE QUARTET
Bowker Auditorium
April 4

The Christian McBride Quartet rocketed through an entertaining night of jazz last Thursday night at Bowker Auditorium. The quartet played a full set of unique jazz, delving into the realms of swing, bop and funk.

The show started off with a quick introduction, leading to McBride's entrance amidst a round of applause. The quartet, consisting of tenor saxophonist Tim Warfield, percussionist Carl Allen and pianist Anthony Wonsey, ripped directly into an original blues composition by McBride, featuring solos for the three melodic instruments. This initial upbeat tune was greeted warmly by the crowd, who applauded and eagerly shouted as the song grew in intensity.

This initial burst of music set the stage for the next tune, a composition by pianist Chick Corea called "Tones for Jones' Bones," written for McBride's upcoming album A laid back Latin piece, this song was an interesting contrast to the quartet's straightforward opening blues tune. Again, Wonsey, Warfield and McBride demonstrated their prowess on their instruments with flawless solos.

McBride introduced the next tune with a little chatter to the audience, then showed of his James Brown imitation with some funky moves and a spin, finally picking up his bass to play the title groovy track from his first album, "Gettin' to It." The song was dedicated to Brown, McBride's chief influence.

Soon trumpet player Nicholas Payton appeared on-stage to join the trio in original compositions such as "Shade of the Ceder Tree" and a rendition of "Blue Moon" which featured a special cadenza for Warfield to demonstrate his saxophone technique. Payton's solos were ripe with interesting musical ideas and his bright trumpet tone flared brilliantly as the rhythm section backed him up.

McBride's solos were absolutely astounding, whether they were played pizzicato in the traditional jazz bass style or arco, with the bow, to provide a smoother sound to his jazz melodies. McBride's ideas were fresh and unique, his technique impeccable, which added up to intense solos which let the audience witness his true talent.

The quartet, along with Payton, finished their set to thunderous applause from the audience, and returned after a short while for an encore. In another tribute to James Brown, the quartet performed a Brown original titled "Go On And Get Funky," complete with another funky spin from McBride as he showed off his moves.

McBride took the entire night in stride, playing with an ease and fluidity, yet an emotion and intensity that proved why he is sometimes referred to as the Godson of Soul. With such flawless technique, flavor for jazz and emotion in his soul which let him create the music, one would be hard pressed to come up with a better name for him.

'Jim Profit' to hit TV jackpot

By Frazier Moore
Associated Press

NEW YORK —There has never been a hero of series TV like Jim Profit.

He is polished, soft-spoken, self-assured. Expensively dressed. A crack young executive who, even in the age of downsizing, is clearly on the way up.

And he's quite mad.

Indeed, he is a man who might be fairly described as a sociopath. No wonder he is on the fast track at Gracen & Gracen, a deliciously soulless conglomerate that Profit terms "not just a company— not to me, at least. It's a family."

Thus is this sinister and irresistible brand of family values celebrated on "Profit," which premieres tonight on Fox.

As Jim Profit mobilizes his personal demons in the service of career advancement—and, hey, the greater glory of Gracen & Gracen, too— he emerges as the most entertaining villain since J.R. Ewing. And a lot more dangerous than that 10-gallon oilman.

The two-hour pilot for "Profit," which begins at 8 p.m. EDT, is by turns chilling, subversive and wickedly funny. Then, at the end, it fades out on an image as jarring as anything TV dares dish out.

All in all, this is an utterly engrossing piece of entertainment.

And, lest they worry, viewers who return next week will find the one-hour, episodic "Profit" (airing at 9 p.m. EDT) continuing in strong, diabolical fashion. "Profit" truly takes care of business.

Played by Adrian Pasdar, Profit has a square jaw, a smooth, prominent brow, a narcotic smile... and eyes that, on full beam, can sear straight through you.

He is a villain (or, if you will, hero) of the Internet age. He knows information is power. In his bare apartment with his PC's on-line connection, and with the data resources available to him from his executive suite, he learns more about his quarries than they know about themselves.

Of course, even with his world-class weaseling and brown-nosing, Profit isn't without resisters. He is stalked by his yahoo of a stepmother, who's itching to expose his demented past (and itching to get him in the sack). The head of Gracen's corporate security, Joanne Meltzer, is hell-bent on unmasking him.

But Profit, himself never agitated, presses on in the finest tradition of a Zen master by using the power of his predators against them.

"That's how he operates," says one of the exasperated good guys. "He makes you lose control."

How he does that is part of what makes "Profit" so much fun. Over and over, Profit is never quite as twisted as you think he's going to be, yet reliably more twisted than you could ever imagine.

No wonder he keeps you off-balance.

And as he corkscrews his way through the corporate structure, you can love him and hate him, cheer for him and root against him, all in one sitting.

Yet another delight is in how he takes the viewer into his confidence with tongue-in-cheek comments whether addressed to the camera or spoken over the action — that place his devious ways into skewed perspective.

If the show catches on, expect a book compiling these observations voiced in Profit's fibrous purr. Words of wisdom such as:

- "It's the challenges that define us best... and the obstacles that illuminate what we're truly capable of."
- "When you want someone to love you, open your heart. When you want someone obsessed with you... close it."
- "You can't expect everything to work out exactly the way you plan it. Because life is full of surprises."

Look for "Jim Profit" to enter the language alongside "J.R. Ewing" as a term of high praise and towering contempt for business shenanigans. Adrian Pasdar, his hair slicked back and his gaze menacing, may soon become an enduring icon of wiliness.

And if you don't take a look tonight as the plotting thickens, it's your Profit loss.

'Sabrina' slipper makes come–back

By Francine Parnes
Associated Press

"Chunky" and "skinny" aren't flattering words for the bod, but when referring to heels on spring's shoes, they mean you're stylishly shod.

"Chunky" is the block heel with the square toe. "Skinny" is the 1950s Sabrina slipper reprised, a slender mid-heel with a narrow toe. Both work well with the spring chemise and are a dress-up alternative to flats.

From mainstream designers such as DKNY, Anne Klein II, Enzo Angiolini, Bandolino and Nickels, the heels are up to about 2 1/2 inches high. There's a whole range of fanciful fat-heeled footwear: lavender leather loafers at Kenneth Cole, $135; faux lizard-print strappy sandals at Calico, $54; baby blue leather square-toed slingbacks from Calvin Klein, $260; lime or fuchsia suede mules by Via Spiga, $130; and leather python-print slides from Charles David, $122.

"I myself am a 'chunky' wearer," said Joan Helpern, owner and designer of Joan & David footwear. "If you want to feel more stable as you run through airports, I would suggest the square heel over the Sabrina heel.

"The Sabrina is a very slim, scooped-out heel, which I would never describe as being the easiest way to walk. It comes under the center point of your foot, and you mince along, even though it's down low. It's like a little exclamation point set under your foot."

Still, the footwear industry is all about options. Helpern said, and that's why she offers both.

"There are those who pirouette through life and are happy with Sabrina heels," said Helpern. "I remember how Audrey Hepburn as the original Sabrina looked so very beautiful in them."

Joan & David's best-selling Sabrina heel is a slingback in stone, silver or black patent leather with a silvertone link chain on the toe and a 1 1/2-inch heel, about $225.

For those who want to stand on firmer ground, Helpern designed a black and white spectator oxford with chunky 1 1/2-inch heel, about $225.

Helpern and other high-end designers revived the Sabrina heel: Manolo Blahnik, Chanel, Robert Clergerie, Patrick Cox, Salvatore Ferragamo, Donna Karan, Isaac Mizrahi, Walter Steiger and Stuart Weitzman among them.

"Now they're filtering down to the mainstream," said Christine Cherry, fashion director for Nine West, manufacturer and national retailer headquartered in Stamford, Conn. "The Sabrina has a lightweight, feminine ladylike kind of allure, and it's a great partner for simple sheath dresses and narrow capri pants."

Cherry said Nine West calls its chunky heels a "big attitude" silhouette. "The shoes have a more dramatic, stronger profile, and it takes a more contemporary, progressive customer to select that kind of footwear."

Likewise, Helpern said chunky is a matter of degree.

"It's still very chunky for the very young, but for the woman of any age, it's slightly more refined and understated," she said. "It's not SoHo or junior chunky, it's sophisticated sport."

Fashion police issue citations for stars' fashion crimes

By Patricia Bibby
Associated Press

Call it fashion fascism. The glammiest crowd in the rag trade, those who are the trendiest on the Seventh Avenue food chain, now have their own enforcement arm— the fashion police.

The self-appointed fashion police have taken it upon themselves to issue citations for various fashion crimes that occurred during the recent fall collection shows in New York.

The first raid was on a group of people outside a Todd Oldham show, where Ivana Trump was cited for "hair violations," actor Steven Dorff for being "a general mess," actress Uma Thurman for "reckless mismanagement of funds spent on Prada" and Vogue editor Anna Wintour for "repeatedly displaying sunglasses after 6 p.m."

Actress Mary Louise Parker and Harper's Bazaar editor Liz Tiberis both were given commendations for good taste.

The fashion cops were courtesy of the company Spiewak, makers of the uniforms worn by FBI agents and police departments across the country. The durable Spiewak coats, made in no-nonsense designs, also have become popular among civilians.

But one look at the drab, industrial look of the Spiewak coats and one wonders, who is policing the fashion police?

Scituate student's body found

By David Tirrell-Wysocki
Associated Press

HENNIKER, N.H. — New England College will try to get back to normal this week after holding a gathering in memory of P.J. Steverman, the freshman whose body was found in a swamp this week, more than four months after he left an off-campus party.

An autopsy performed Saturday determined, as expected, that Steverman died of hypothermia due to the icy swamp water he wandered into.

Ripples from the death, which apparently was alcohol-related, may be lasting at the small school.

Friday night, college President William Ellis said the incident will be on the minds of college administrators when they conduct their annual review of college policies.

"Unfortunately, [Steverman] made some bad decisions," he said. "Each year [the college] reviews all of its policies and I'm sure that when we sit down this summer to review our policies, we won't do it without thinking of P.J."

Ellis did not elaborate, and after choking back tears describing how the incident brought the college and the town together, reporters did not ask what specifically he had in mind.

A witness saw Steverman, 20, of Scituate, walking away from the party between 12:30 a.m. and 1:30 a.m., on Nov. 19. He reportedly had been drinking and had had a brief argument with someone over spilled beer.

College spokeswoman Patti Osgood said Saturday that because Steverman was at an off-campus party, there probably isn't much that can be changed policy-wise, however she said perhaps the school will look at ways to impress on students to look out for each other.

"Perhaps we can add more programming... where we make it as clear as possible that you need to help people out or remind people that off- or on-campus, you owe it to yourself and your friends, as a citizen of the world, to conduct yourself so that you are safe and your friends are safe," she said.

She said the school already has alcohol awareness programs and programs to help students who might be having problems with alcohol or drugs.

Police Chief Tim Russell said the incident should be a wake up call, not only to New England College students, but to everyone. "I think the fact that we found Mr. Steverman... the lesson speaks for itself as far as going to parties and maybe drinking a little bit more than you should," he said.

"If there is a message to take to New England College students or any of us as individuals, it's to take care of each other, make sure that nobody is alone; make sure if you're at a party with somebody that you can account for everybody," the chief said. Ellis said the college will remember Steverman officially sometime this week at an all-college gathering, "not a memorial service, but, I hope, a celebration of his life."

Police believe Steverman wandered through icy, chest-deep water before curling up beneath a log and dying.

"He probably just laid down and went to sleep," said State Police Cpl. Dale St. Laurent, who helped recover Steverman's remains.

Hundreds of people searched for him last fall, but found no trace. He was found in an area where underbrush would have obscured him from the air and where searchers would have had to wear cold-water survival gear to search last fall, St. Laurent said. They donned the suits Friday to recover the remains.

St. Laurent and Russell said it was "highly unlikely" someone killed Steverman and dumped his body.

St. Laurent said anyone who might have carried Steverman's body into the marsh would have had to wade through chest deep water and probably would have died from the elements.

Steverman family reacts over son's icy drowning

SCITUATE (AP) — The mother of a college student found dead four months after wandering away from a party says she wishes someone there had helped him get back to the safety of his dormitory.

"Whether you love them or hate them, make sure they get to where they should be," Lynda Steverman, the mother of New England College freshman P.J. Steverman Jr., said tearfully Saturday. Steverman's body was found Friday in a swamp a quarter-mile from where he walked away from a party during a snowstorm more than four months ago, police said. They believe he wandered through chest-deep icy water before seeking shelter beneath a log and dying.

An autopsy performed Saturday determined, as expected, that Steverman died of hypothermia due to the icy swamp water he wandered into.

"There was just no need for it," his mother said. "He was 4 miles away from his college."

Searchers had been looking for Steverman since he disappeared Nov. 19 in this small, college town about 70 miles northwest of Boston. Steverman, 20, was last seen leaving a party after an argument over spilled beer. Witnesses said he had been drinking. "P.J. was typical of a lot of 20-year-old college kids," Lynda Steverman said at a news conference at Scituate High School. "I just wish someone had taken the time to grab him and put him in the car and take him back to his dorm. That bothers me, it bothers me a lot."

Steverman's blue jacket was spotted by a state police helicopter Friday after a search dog indicated there was something in the area of Middle Pond. The body was found under a log, where investigators said Steverman appeared to have sought shelter.

Relatives said Steverman didn't like the water and didn't like the dark. Lynda Steverman said her son would not go near the family's swimming pool at night, even in hot weather.

"From the first day my fear was they were going to find P.J. in the water," she said.

Flanked by daughters Kristin, 24, and Anna, 15, Lynda Steverman thanked police, the media and people who had volunteered to search for Steverman. Money donated for the search will be donated to organizations that help find missing children, she said.

"I can say after four and a half months, I know where my son is now," she said.

Police save girl; two teens die in suicide pact

By James Jefferson
Associated Press

BRINKLEY, Ark. — A pair of runaway boys who made a suicide pact with a 12-year-old girl killed themselves Saturday after a state trooper pulled over their stolen car.

The trooper grabbed the girl from the car before she could reach the gun to complete the pact, police said. Both boys were infatuated with the girl and all three vowed to kill themselves if they were stopped by police, authorities said.

Kevin L. Hyde, 15; Joshua G. Rogers, 15; and the 12-year-old, whose identity was not released, stole a car Wednesday after getting in trouble in school earlier in the week in their hometown of Robbinsville, N.C., police said.

Hyde left his father a note reading, "Dad, I'm sorry, I got into some trouble and I had to leave. I've gone south."

Police found notes written by the three stating their intention to die if caught by authorities. The youths did not give a reason for the suicide pact.

The girl's note said Rogers was supposed to shoot her, then himself. Hyde was to shoot himself. The girl told police that "one of the boys was supposed to shoot her but neither one of the boys had the nerve to do it," state police Sgt. Jackie Speer said. The trio stole gas and food as they trekked through Georgia and Tennessee and brought a .22-caliber revolver along in case they had to commit suicide, said Arkansas State Police spokesman Wayne Jordan, paraphrasing comments made by the girl.

About 1:30 a.m. Saturday, a trucker notified police that a car was harassing him on Interstate 40 in eastern Arkansas, pulling in front of him and slowing down, Jordan said.

The truck pulled ahead, and eventually Trooper Freddie Hudson chased the stolen Pontiac Grand Am at speeds of up to 100 mph. The chase came to an end when the road narrowed to one westbound lane in a construction zone. The car had to slow down behind the truck that made the initial call, Jordan said.

Using a citizens band radio, the trooper instructed the trucker to stop, trapping the teen-agers on the highway.

Hudson got out of his police car and heard two gunshots about five seconds apart, Jordan said.

Rogers, who was sitting in the back seat, killed himself with a shot to the head and fell across the girl, Jordan said. Hyde, who was driving, went next, shooting himself in the mouth. The gun dropped onto the floorboard and the girl could not reach it before the trooper got to her.

"She was screaming and yelling. She said she would have killed herself if she could have reached the gun before the trooper got her out of the car," Jordan said.

The girl was being kept Saturday at a juvenile detention center in West Helena. Her parents were driving from North Carolina to get her. She will not be charged with any crime in Arkansas, Jordan said.

Authorities in North Carolina said they had not decided if the girl would face any charges there.

7-year-old flies for record from California to Mass.

By Martha Irvine
Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — She's 4-foot-2 and needs aluminum extensions to help her reach the rudder pedals.

But size isn't slowing pint-sized pilot Jessica Dubroff, a 7-year-old girl from a tiny coastal town south of here who hopes to make history by flying a four-seater Cessna 177B Cardinal airplane across the country and back.

"I can't wait," said Jessica, a former Cape Cod girl and a student pilot for just four months.

She plans to take off April 10 from Half Moon Bay Airport with her father, Lloyd Dubroff, in the back seat and her flight instructor, Joe Reid, as co-pilot.

"Joe said, 'I'll sleep, you'll fly,'" said Jessica, who will keep a log book to track her hours. In order to set the record, she must do all the flying — about 40 to 50 hours during the 6,500 mile trip.

"She wouldn't let Joe get within two inches of the controls unless she really has to," her mother, Lisa Blair Hathaway said from their Pescadero home.

The record holder is Tony Aliengena of San Juan Capistrano. He flew cross country and back with his flight instructor in 1988 when he was 9 years old.

Jessica, who will turn 8 May 5, is hoping that, if she completes the flight, she'll be able to hang on to the record.

"We don't believe that someone would ever let a 6-year-old break the record," said Jessica, whose pilot lessons are part of her home schooling.

"She's a pretty sharp young lady," Reid said of the youngest student he's taught in five years as an instructor.

Jessica first became interested in flying after visiting the Palo Alto Airport to watch the planes on her 6th birthday. She and her parents chose Reid because he didn't talk down to her. "He does it like I'm a real person, not a child," Jessica said.

Jessica, who has racked up about 30 hours of flying time, will fly three to four hours at a time with one to two stops a day in such cities as Cheyenne, Wyo.; Fort Wayne, Ind., and Falmouth, on Cape Cod where she has relatives and where she spent the first years of her life.

She and her passengers also plan a trip to Washington, where Jessica would like to visit the White House. She has written to President Clinton to invite him on a 15-minute plane ride. "My purpose in writing all this is to bring you clarity about who I am and to have you say yes to going for an airplane ride with me," Jessica wrote to the president.

Asked what she would tell the president if he were nervous, she said, "It's just like flying in a commercial airplane, but it's a small one."

Jessica's parents completely behind their daughter's latest adventure.

"I guess Jess is getting her 15 minutes of fame early," said her father, Lloyd Dubroff. "I'm actually more nervous about her riding horses."

Bruins simply getting the job done

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The Boston Bruins were smaller, but this time smarter than the Philadelphia Flyers.

"We kept it pretty simple," said Bruins coach Steve Kasper following a 4-2 victory over the Flyers on Sunday.

The Bruins felt the best way to beat the bigger Flyers was to keep the puck out of their own end. So the Bruins kept the puck from getting deep in their defensive zone by rushing the puck out at every opportunity. The effect was that the Flyers didn't get a chance to cycle and set up their offense.

"We felt going in that Philadelphia's strength was below the goal line," said Kasper after the Bruins extended their unbeaten streak to five games (3-0-2). "For the most part, we kept them out of there. And, once it was in there, we weren't being fancy with it. It's a frustrating thing when a team is coming into forecheck and the puck is going out."

Philadelphia was without leading scorer and captain Eric Lindros, who was scratched right before the game with a bruised right calf. Lindros suffered the injury in Friday's 3-1 loss to the New York Rangers and is listed as day-to-day.

Adam Oates collected a goal early in the third period that snapped a 2-2 tie. Kyle McLaren, who also had two assists, notched an empty-netter with 12 seconds remaining in a preview of what could be a first-round Eastern Conference playoff matchup.

"The old saying is to play a simple game on the road," said Oates, who also added an assist. "We're not a fancy team. We don't have as much talent as a lot of teams, so this is the way we have to play."

Oates took a pass from Shawn McEachern in front of the net and slid a shot just inside the far post, past goalie Ron Hextall 42 seconds into the third period for his 25th goal.

Philadelphia's Shjon Podein appeared to have tied the game with 1:54 remaining when his dump-in from outside the blue line ticked off the skate of linesman Ron Asselstine and into the net, but the carom was ruled no goal. The Flyers managed just two shots in the third period.

"Certainly, it's the best third period we've played all season," Boston defenseman Don Sweeney said. "We didn't sit back and we took it to them. We were smothering them. When you look at their lineup, with their size, they'll out- muscle you if you spend too much time in your own end."

Rick Tocchet, who also assisted on Oates' goal, scored a power-play goal in the first period and Dave Reid added a shorthanded goal in the second for the Bruins. Pat Falloon and Dale Hawerchuk had power-play goals for Philadelphia. The Flyers are currently the second seed in the playoffs, while Boston is in a three-way tie for fifth with 87 points.

Tocchet's 28th goal, off a feed from Oates 6:20 into the game, gave the Bruins a 1-0 lead. Falloon tied the game at 9:14 of the first when his wrist shot from the right circle ticked off the inside of goalie Bill Ranford's pads.

Reid took advantage of a Flyer mistake at the blue line on a power play and skated the length of the ice for a breakaway. Reid deposited a wrist shot into the top corner of the net for his 23rd at 9:56 of the second. But, on the same power play, Hawerchuk redirected defenseman Eric Desjardins' point drive past Ranford for a 2-2 tie. The assist gave Desjardins a career-high 46 points this season.

"The played much better than we did," Philadelphia coach Terry Murray said. "They shut us down in the neutral zone. We made a lot of bad decisions through the neutral zone to turn the puck over. We looked physically and emotionally tired."

The Flyers dropped their second straight after a seven-game winning streak.

Greenwell leads Red Sox to their first win of season

By Craig Horst
Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Mike Greenwell can remember batting leadoff only once before. He'll remember the second time — it helped the Boston Red Sox avoid their worst start in 69 years. Greenwell had three hits Sunday as the Red Sox became the last major league team to win this season, ending a five-game losing streak by stopping the Kansas City Royals 3-1.

"I think it was a great move by [manager] Kevin [Kennedy]. I think it got everybody jumping around, got everybody teased up. It loosened everybody up," Greenwell said after leading off for the first time in four years.

"The only unfortunate thing is now I'll probably have to bat leadoff on opening day [in Boston]."

Kennedy said he put Greenwell at the top of the batting order for a couple of reasons.

"Something finally worked out," Kennedy said. "It was a combination of things. He's had some success against Gubicza, but that was the other thing — to shake things up."

Jose Canseco homered for the second time in three games, and Jamie Moyer pitched well into the eighth inning. Boston hadn't lost its first six games since 1927.

"I was of the opinion we had to win this game," Greenwell said. "We needed to win a close game, not one where we blow someone out. Those kind will come later. We needed to win one where we got good work from the bullpen, we got good starting pitching, we got clutch hitting. We got all of that today."

Heathcliff Slocumb got the last three outs for his first save for the Red Sox since being traded by Philadelphia in the offseason.

Home plate umpire Dave Phillips left the game at the start of the eighth inning because of a sore back.

Moyer (1-0) retired 12 straight batters after Johnny Damon's single in the second. He shut out the Royals on three hits through seven innings, and left after David Howard homered with one out in the eighth.

"I wasn't thinking about [losing streak]," Moyer said. "What has happened has happened. If you dwell on that stuff, then you start to expect it to happen and then it does happen. Today is a new day. We have to put what's happened behind us."

Moyer struck out six and walked one. Mike Stanton relieved Moyer, and Slocumb took over after a lead-off walk in the ninth. "We had some scoring opportunities, but not too many," Royals manager Bob Boone said. "We were weak. Moyer was just too tough on us. I think it was good for our young guys to experience a pitcher who can speeds on you like that."

Gubicza (0-2) gave up three runs on six hits in 6 1-3 innings. He struck out two and walked three.

Boston took a 2-0 lead in the second with the help of an error. Singles by Wil Cordero, Troy O'Leary and Mike Stanley made it 1-0, and left fielder Patrick Lennon lost Tim Naehring's short fly in the sun and dropped the ball for an error. Canseco hit his second homer leading off the third.

Notes: Greenwell is batting .417 in his career against Gubicza in 36 career at-bats. ... Naehring was back in the lineup after missing a game with a stiff neck sustained Friday when he fell down the dugout steps while chasing a foul ball. ... Royals second baseman Bip Roberts started after being limited to pinch-hitting duty Saturday because of a sinus infection.

Orioles 4, Twins 2,

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — When Mike Mussina and Randy Myers are both at their best, the Baltimore Orioles are tough to beat.

Mussina pitched eight effective innings and Myers closed for his fourth save of the season Sunday as the Orioles defeated the Minnesota Twins 4-2.

Mussina (2-0), who led the American League with 19 wins last year, allowed seven hits, including Paul Molitor's leadoff homer in the seventh inning. He struck out eight and walked one.

"I had a midseason fastball, much better than it's been all spring," Mussina said. "I don't have any explanation why." Mussina got 11 ground-ball outs as the Orioles won for the fifth time in six games.

"I think he'll win the Cy Young award this year," teammate Rafael Palmeiro said. "Usually he's better in the second half, and he's a slow starter, but he's off to a great start."

So are the Orioles, helped by Myers. Signed as a free agent to be the stopper, he has allowed only one hit in four scoreless innings. He pitched a perfect ninth to close out the Twins. Palmeiro ended an 0-for-14 slump with an RBI double in the Baltimore ninth. Tony Tarasco singled and scored on Palmeiro's hit off Dave Stevens.

Bonilla hit his first home run of the season, a solo shot in the eighth inning off reliever Eddie Guardado for a 3-1 lead.

The Twins scored an unearned run in their eighth on Pat Meares' double and an error by Palmeiro, who made a poor throw to Mussina covering first base on Matt Lawton's grounder.

After Molitor singled, Mussina struck out Greg Myers to end the inning.

Molitor led off the seventh with his first home run since signing as a free agent with his hometown Twins.

Jordan hits in the clutch as Bulls knock off Magic

By Fred Goodall
Associated Press

ORLANDO, Fla. — If Sunday was a preview of the Eastern Conference finals, the NBA is in for a treat.

Michael Jordan hit a turnaround jumper with just under a minute to go, Anfernee Hardaway and Shaquille O'Neal missed shots in the final 10 seconds and Chicago and Orlando battled down to the last possession before the Bulls escaped with a 90-86 victory.

O'Neal, who returned to Orlando's lineup after missing two games because of the death of his grandmother, shot an airball after Hardaway missed on a drive. Both shots would have tied the game, but the Bulls rebounded and Kukoc sealed the outcome on two foul shots with less than a second remaining.

Jordan had 27 points despite a subpar 10-for-30 shooting performance. Kukoc hit five 3-pointers and scored 20 for the Bulls, who won their sixth straight game and moved within four victories of becoming the first NBA team to win 70 games.

Hardaway led Orlando with 25 points. O'Neal had 21 points and nine rebounds despite missing the first quarter after arriving at Orlando Arena as the game was starting.

The Magic battled back from a 79-70 deficit to tie the game, 86-86, on Horace Grant's jumper with 1:09 left. Jordan scored over Brian Shaw 13 seconds later, but then gave Orlando one more chance to tie or take the lead.

The Bulls held on despite shooting only 41 percent from the floor and scoring 15 points in the fourth quarter. Jordan was 2-for-10 in the period.

The Los Angeles Lakers took some of the luster off the last meeting of the regular season between the top contenders for the Eastern Conference title by snapping Orlando's 40-game home winning streak on March 26.

The Bulls and Magic were both trying to become the first team in NBA history to go an entire season without losing at home. Chicago, which lost in its only other appearance at Orlando Arena, can accomplish the feat by winning its last four games at the United Center.

O'Neal arrived at the arena shortly before tipoff and received a standing ovation when he trotted out of the tunnel from the locker room and took a seat on the bench with just under four minutes remaining in the opening period.

Team officials who attended the funeral of O'Neal's maternal grandmother in Jersey City, N.J., said they had not spoken with the player since the services Saturday afternoon.

He entered the game at the start of the second quarter and scored 11 consecutive points for the Magic before Joe Wolf broke a seven-minute drought for the rest of the team with a jumper to trim Chicago's lead to 39-32.

Orlando closed within 42-40 before the Bulls pulled away again. Jordan capped an 8-0 period-ending spurt, giving him 17 points and Chicago a 50-42 advantage at the half.

Lakers 107, Spurs 97

INGLEWOOD, Calif. — Vlade Divac had 19 points and 11 rebounds and Eddie Jones scored 13 of his 19 points in the third quarter Sunday as the Los Angeles Lakers beat the suddenly cold San Antonio Spurs 107-97.

San Antonio's David Robinson had 40 points and 11 rebounds in a losing cause, the third time he's scored 40 or more points in a game this season.

After being held to three points in the first half — all on foul shots — Jones came alive as the Lakers outscored the Spurs 29-23 in the third period to go ahead for good.

After Jones scored five straight points to give the Lakers a 78-69 lead — their largest of the game to that stage — the Spurs scored six consecutive points.

The Lakers finished the third quarter with an 8-3 run to lead 86-78, and the Spurs weren't closer than six points after that. It was 92-86 when Anthony Peeler made a 3-point shot with 5:32 remaining and Divac made a layup 25 seconds later to extend the Lakers lead to 11.

After winning a franchise-record 17 straight games and going 16-0 in March, the Spurs have lost three of four in April. Magic Johnson, who sat out the Lakers' previous game because of tendinitis in his left Achilles tendon, returned to action and had 15 points, nine rebounds and seven assists in 41 minutes. Cedric Ceballos added 13 points for the Lakers.

Sean Elliott scored 17 points, Chuck Person added 13, Vinny Del Negro had 12 and Avery Johnson had 10 points and 13 assists for the Spurs.

The Lakers won despite being outscored 24-11 in the game's first nine minutes. Los Angeles then outscored the Spurs 12-2 as the first period finished, trimming San Antonio's lead to 26-23. The Lakers scored the first five points of the second quarter to take their first lead of the game. The Spurs tied it at 28 before Los Angeles scored six more points in a row to complete a 23-4 run. Los Angeles led 55-47 before being outscored 8-2 to end the first half, cutting its lead to 57-55, and the Spurs scored the first five points of the second half to finish a 13-2 spurt. The Lakers went ahead for good shortly later.

Suns 112, Grizzlies 92

VANCOUVER, British Columbia (AP) — Kevin Johnson scored 26 points and Wesley Person made six 3-pointers Sunday as the Phoenix Suns broke their four-game road losing streak with a 112-92 victory over Vancouver.

The Suns swept the four-game season series. Wayman Tisdale added 20 points and Charles Barkley had 13 points and 15 rebounds in 28 minutes.

The loss was the 31st in 32 games for Vancouver, which drew its 10th sellout crowd of the season.

Rockets starting to get reinforcements

By Rob Gloster
Associated Press

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — Clyde Drexler and Mario Elie are back. Hakeem Olajuwon and Sam Cassell are on the way.

The Houston Rockets are starting to get healthy again. But that doesn't mean they're even close to the form that has led them to two straight NBA titles.

"It's just not easy to bring guys back and play smoothly," said coach Rudy Tomjanovich. "It's going to be an unbelievable challenge to get back and be competitive, because just getting back healthy is not going to do it."

Despite the return of Drexler and Elie from long stays on the injured list, the Rockets lost 96-91 Friday night to the Sacramento Kings — Houston's ninth loss in 10 games.

The Rockets already have slipped from fourth to fifth in the Western Conference, which would cost them home-court advantage in the first round of the playoffs. They are 4 1/2 games ahead of sixth-place Portland, which has won six straight.

Drexler, playing for the first time since Feb. 26 arthroscopic surgery on his right knee, had 23 points in 29 minutes against Sacramento.

"There was a little game rust, but for the most part I felt good. It was a lot of fun being back on the floor," said the eight-time all-star. "I wasn't expecting to play any more than a 12-minute stretch. I played the last 18 minutes and that was a test."

Kings forward Brian Grant said Sacramento was fortunate that Drexler, who added seven rebounds and four assists, was just coming off the injured list.

"I'm glad this is his first game back and he can gradually work his way back to his 35 points a game against other teams," Grant said with a laugh.

Elie, who fractured a bone in his right arm on Jan. 17, had a less auspicious return. He missed all four of his shots and went scoreless in 24 minutes.

"The arm is sore. It can't get any worse, so I just have to go out and play hard, and hopefully in the next week or so it will be real comfortable," Elie said. "By playoff time I should be feeling really good."

The whole team hopes to be feeling good by playoff time. Olajuwon is expected back Tuesday at home against Vancouver after missing eight of the last nine games with tendinitis in both knees. Cassell, out since March 5 after having arthroscopic surgery on his right elbow, could return Tuesday or later in the week. Their returns, along with those of Drexler and Elie, should help Houston revive a struggling offense. The Rockets hit just 38 percent of their shots against Sacramento, missing their first nine 3-pointers and finishing 3-for-18 from behind the 3-point line. "Clyde played hard," Tomjanovich said. "He was one of our threats, creating shots for other guys. But we weren't making them."

spectacular goal of the game. Glass took a pass at his ankles from Ken Sussi and in one motion flipped it to Eric Bailey in front of the Duke cage. Bailey caught the ball with a defender on his tail and his back to the net and just flipped a shot under the crossbar that Kirmser never even saw.

"I've played with Eric Bailey for two years," Kasselakis said. "He's the smartest player I've ever played with. He just does the right thing and steps up everytime. The goalie didn't even see it until it was in the goal and Bailey was just sitting there like it was routine. An unbelievable play."

In the second half, the scoring slowed down considerably as only three goals were scored in the third quarter. Duke's Alex Whitten notched his third of the game and Joe Donavan scored to clip the UMass lead in half before, Kennedy scored his second EMO goal of the day to end the third with a 10-7 Minutemen advantage. The Minutemen were two-of-three with the man advantage on the day and that brought a smile to their coaches face.

"We made a change this week. We put [Assistant coach] Jim Strub on the EMO, put in a couple of new plays and it worked out. I have confidence in it and am really happy about it."

UMass came out in the final 15 minutes determined to put away the Blue Devils as Bailey made a perfect behind the back feed to Hoffman who had half the net to shoot at made made no mistake at 4:58. But as Duke continued to pepper Kasselakis the game came down to which team wanted it more, and Grande showed exactly which team that was.

After an errand UMass shot went to the right of the Duke cage, a Blue Devil defender appeared to have no competition being closest the ball before it rolled over the endline. Seemingly out of nowhere the Minuteman midfielder beat the Duke to the ball retaining UMass possession. Grande inbounded the ball to Costello who let fly a rocket that Kirmser ducked out of the way from for UMass' largest lead of the game at five.

The Blue Devils had one more push and were given their fifth EMO after already tallying once to cut the UMass lead to four. The Minutemen had held Duke scoreless on EMO's for the day and added insult to injury when Bailey split two Blue Devil defenders and slipped UMass' final goal of the day with his team a man down.

UMass returns concludes their three-game homestand against New Hampshire Saturday at 3 p.m.

Player of the Game
John Kasselakis – 18 saves, nine goals against

Highlights...
UMass avenged last year's 9-8 loss to Duke with the 13-9 victory. John Kasselakis stopped 18 shots including fourth leading goal scorer in the country John Fay to just two just two goals on the day... UMass' extra man unit was four-30 on the year before yesterday's 2-3 performance against the Blue Devils and their man down unit helped the Blue Devils 0-5 on EMOs.

"I was feeling good," he said. "I saw the ball real well. At 3–3, you can't make any mistakes."

"When you make saves in a game like this," Cannella said. "It jump starts your team. It sets the tone when you make those saves. At the end of the game, they took outside shots, but John just gobbled them up."

The Minutemen offense showered praise on the goalie as well.

"John Kasselakis, in goal, was unbelievable," said Brendan Glass.

Senior midfielder Eric Bailey agreed.

"Kas played unbelievable," Bailey said. "When you have a goalie as hot as John Kasselakis was today, you can just feed off that on offense. When you have confidence in your goalie, you have confidence offensively."

"I try to set the tempo every game," Kasselakis said. "If I can control what the opponent is doing on offense, it gives us more confidence to take a shot, that they wouldn't want to normally take."

Celtics keep winning; down Detroit

By Jimmy Golen
Associated Press

BOSTON — Playoffs or no playoffs, the Boston Celtics are in a stretch drive.

Todd Day scored 11 of his 16 points during a 19-5 fourth-quarter run that gave Boston the lead for good Sunday as the Celtics held off the Detroit Pistons 98-97. It was the lottery-bound Celtics' second consecutive victory over a team in the playoff hunt. "A lot of teams, when they're out of playoff contention, they shut it down and prepare for the summer," forward Rick Fox said. "That's not just an insult to the game, it's an insult to each other to go out there and slop it around."

Boston beat the Magic 100-98 Thursday night in Orlando, the first Eastern Conference team to win there in two years. Boston coach M.L. Carr called Sunday's game a reaffirmation of the Orlando victory, his enthusiasm not at all diminished by the fact that Shaquille O'Neal was absent and Anfernee Hardaway was ejected in the second quarter.

"We never complained about whom we were without," Carr said, adding later that leading scorer and rebounder Dino Radja, out since March 1 with a sprained ankle, is done for the season. "It was said early on that this team would fall apart. But we will not fall apart," Carr said. "There is a plan in place and we'll let you know the plan at the appropriate time."

Pervis Ellison scored a season-high 18 points and pulled down 12 rebounds for the Celtics, who were mathematically eliminated from playoff contention with Charlotte's victory on Saturday night. "It has nothing to do with wins and losses right now," Celtics captain Dee Brown said.

Allan Houston scored 26 — including two 3-pointers after the game was essentially out of reach — to lead the Pistons, who dropped from sixth to seventh in the Eastern Conference playoff hunt. They also missed a chance to clinch their first winning season since 1991-92.

"If we get a chance to play in the post-season, we've got to play at an upper level," said Grant Hill, who scored 16 with 10 rebounds and 10 assists but shot 6-of-20 from the floor. "The energy is not there."

Detroit scored the first seven points of the fourth quarter to take a 73-70 lead before Day dunked and drew a foul. He missed the free throw, but made a layup on Boston's next possession to give the Celtics a 74-73 lead.

Williams made it 76-73 before Houston hit two free throws to pull the Pistons within one. Then, Day was fouled making a jumper — again missing the free throw.

After Brown and Day each hit two free throws to give Boston an 82-75 lead, Terry Mills made a 3-pointer. But, Boston pulled away again when Day blocked Otis Thorpe's shot, Williams dove for the loose ball and fed Brown from the floor, setting up Day's 3-pointer to make it 85-78 with 3:59 left.

After a Pistons timeout, Boston extended its lead to 89-78 with just over two minutes to play. Detroit closed the gap thanks to missed Boston free throws, but still trailed by four when Houston's 3-pointer as time expired made it 98-97.

Notes: Radja is still leading the team in points and rebounds despite missing 21 games. ... Detroit has lost its last five in Boston and 26 of the last 31. ... Houston has led Detroit in scoring in 14 of their last 24 games. ... The Celtics played a video of Hornets center Robert Parish during the first timeout to honor him for setting the NBA record for games played. The biggest cheer was for a knockdown of former Pistons center Bill Lambeer. Parish played 1,106 of his 1,561 games with Boston.

two-run single down third to score Murphy and Clark to give the Minutemen an early 5-0 lead.

Fordham notched a run in the top of the third and two in the fourth, but couldn't turn the tide. Junior righthander Jason Bennett was responsible for controlling the Rams at the plate throwing a complete game, striking out five and not walking a single Fordham batter.

Fordham 7, Massachusetts 5

Sophomore pinch-hitter Adrian Muys lined a double down the third base line to score two, giving Fordham the win in Friday's opener, 7–5.

With the score tied at 4 and only one out in the top of the ninth, starting UMass pitcher Chad Paronto walked Ram centerfielder Mike Marchiano, hit rightfielder Mitch Tejera with a pitch, and walked third baseman Tom Stein to load the bases for Muys. Leading in the count 2–1, Muys nailed reliever Steve Levy's pitch down the line to score Marchiano and Tejera, giving the Ram's a lead they would not relinquish.

Fordham added another insurance run in the next at bat when second baseman Tony Martelli laid down a sacrifice bunt to bring Stein home.

UMass countered in the bottom of the inning, but the Minutemen could not muster enough offensive power. Second baseman Muchie Dagliere walked to open the frame. Fordham relief pitcher Tom Nielsen came on to work the rest of the ninth, and first baseman Justin Kelly immediately hit for a single to send Dagliere to third. Two batters later, pinch-hitter Ryan Thistle grounded to the second baseman, which scored Dagliere, but UMass would get no other scoring.

Fordham was down 2–1 heading into the second inning, but tallied three runs to take a 4–2 lead. Kelly and catcher Andy Kiah had RBI singles in the fifth and sixth innings, respectively, to tie the game at 4.

The right-hander Paronto took the loss, which dropped his record to 0–3. Junior righty Bryan Couch picked up the win for Fordham, which brought his record to 2–3.

"The first game I thought we didn't play as well as we should have," Jette said. "We realized this is a good team and we have to play our best to beat them."

UMass returns to action this afternoon as they travel to Rhode Island to face the Friars of Providence College at 3 p.m. The Minutemen embark on a 14-game road trip and do not return to Lorden Field until April 25 when they face Central Connecticut.

UMass puts it all together to upset No. 10 Duke

Kasselakis shines bright in Minutemen victory

By Matt Voutour
Collegian Staff

In any lacrosse upset, the play of the goaltender is critical, and in No. 18 Massachusetts' 13–9 upset of No. 10 Duke, sophomore goalie John Kasselakis was brilliant.

The UMass defense did a stellar job, keeping the Blue Devil snipers from getting an abundance of shots on him. The unit held top gun John Fay, who came in ranked fourth nationally with almost four goals a game to only two. When the shots were there, Kasselakis almost always had an answer.

"We haven't played defense this well since the first three quarters at Yale," said senior captain Dennis Kelly. "We were just one. John Kasselakis inspired us with all those saves. It allowed us to be aggressive. It picked us up when we had a little lapse there."

A year ago, when the Minutemen fell to Duke 9–8 in Durham N.C., it was Blue Devil goalie Joe Kirmser that made the difference in the game, while Kasselakis, a freshman then, gave up one goal in a short time period in relief of then starter Tom LoPresti. This year the Minutemen jumped on Kirmser early and the spotlight fell on Kasselakis.

"He played great," said Minuteman coach Greg Cannella. "He made some outstanding saves. He's been very consistent the whole year."

Trailing 10–7, going into the final period, Duke became urgent attacking the UMass cage in full force trying to cut into the lead, but Kasselakis saved his best stuff for crunch time.

After making 11 saves in the first three quarters, the Manhasset, N.Y. native made seven more in the final 15 minutes, many of the spectacular variety, to help preserve the Minuteman victory.

The performance didn't come against just anyone either. The Blue Devils entered the game ranked fifth nationally in scoring offense, averaging 14.50 goals per game.

"We hadn't really had a quality win coming in here," Kasselakis said. "Beating a team like Duke, an ACC school is big."

The performance marked his second consecutive 18-save outing, which is a career mark. Unlike the heartbreaking loss against Army, Kasselakis left the field Saturday with a smile.

THANG VO / COLLEGIAN

Senior tri-captain Buddy Hoffman had two goals and an assist Saturday in UMass' 13–9 defeat of the No. 10 Duke Blue Devils.

An all around effort by UMass keys 13–9 win over Blue Devils

By Justin C. Smith
Collegian Staff

In order to score an upset over a higher ranked opponent, it takes a total team effort where everyone comes to play. The No. 18 Massachusetts men's lacrosse team got that on Saturday versus the No. 10 Duke Blue Devils.

A balanced scoring attack, tenacious defense and a white hot goaltender were all in evidence for UMass on Richard F. Garber field, as the Minutemen thoroughly dismantled Duke 13–9 and raised their record to 4–3.

Massachusetts	13
Duke	9

"Everyone came to play today, that's the bottom line" Brendan Glass said of his teams effort. "Duke is a good team, they have a good goalie and we got to them early unlike the Army game."

There was nothing average about Glass' goaltender today. After surrendering a goal on the first Blue Devil shot, UMass netminder John Kasselakis was simply spectacular stopping a total of 18 Duke shots on the day, many quality scoring chances for Duke.

"John was unbelievable today," Glass added. "The last one he let in from 20 yards out I said 'What he saves the hard ones and misses the easy ones?' But he played great today."

UMass fell behind early as a Chris Grande goal was sandwiched between two Duke strikes in the opening five minutes of the contest before the Minutemen scored four times to close the first period. Tallies by Casey Costello and Buddy Hoffman gave the Minutemen a lead they would never relinquish. Mike Delpercio, in his first game back from mononucleosis gave UMass a two–goal lead and Jim Kennedy converted on an extra man opportunity (EMO) as Cannella's squad led 5–2 after one.

It could have been closer though. Duke had the last offensive possession of the quarter and could have gained some momentum but Harold Drumm knocked the ball away from Julian Flannery and it was the Minutemen riding high into the first intermission.

"We do that it practice everyday," Kasselakis said. "You start practice then you gotta keep getting stronger and stronger and it takes part in the game. It just carried over even when the ball was out of bounds and during timeouts you could see in everyone's eyes we weren't going to lose today."

The Blue Devils came out fast to start the second stanza as they scored three of the first four goals in the period before UMass leading scorer junior Brendan Glass got on track.

With the Minutemen leading 6–5, Glass took a feed form Costello and let go a blast from 15 feet that beat Joe Kirmser to the far side at 9:38 of the second. Duke won the ensuing face–off, but senior tri–captain Dennis Kelly stripped the ball from and took off in transition. Kelly drew Glass' defender then passed off to the wide–open Glass as he found twine for the second time in 30 seconds to push the Minutemen lead back to three.

"It felt good, especially after the second one," Glass said of his quick scoring outburst. "I said to myself the goals feeling pretty wide because of the two quick ones and I had more scoring chances but just couldn't find the cage."

Though the junior All–America candidate does lead the team in goals with 28, he also has continued to improve his passing as well, setting up the most

UMass drills Va. Tech with 26-run onslaught in away doubleheader

By Leigh Torbin
Collegian Staff

The Virginia Tech softball team had already played six Atlantic 10 conference games this year, but on the day before Easter the Hokies received their real conference baptism, from the team that won eight of their last ten A-10 titles.

Massachusetts	10
Virginia Tech	1

The Massachusetts Minutewomen demolished Virginia Tech 10–1 and 16–0 in a doubleheader on Saturday in Blacksburg, Va. Both games were called after the fifth inning due to the mercy rule.

UMass (19–10, 2–0 in the A–10) has now won its last 10 games after sweeping the Hokies (13–17, 6–2).

Massachusetts	16
Virginia	0

Freshman phenom Danielle Henderson continued her hot streak on the mound, extending her consecutive shutout inning streak to 32.33. Henderson, who has won her last nine starts, threw the first three innings of UMass' 16–0 shellacking of Virginia Tech, allowing two hits and striking out three, before giving way to Dani Ortega.

Henderson has not allowed a run since March 16, when Florida Atlantic put up a pair in the third inning of a game at the Lady Seminole Invitational.

The whole team produced a tremendous effort at the plate this weekend, pushing across 26 runs on 19 hits in 10 innings of play. In its past three games, UMass has outscored its opposition 37–1, posting a .390 batting average, versus the .154 that its opponents are hitting.

Also, the Minutewomen stole six bases on Saturday, giving them 67 on the season. This broke the school record of 63 set last year.

In the first game on Saturday, the Minutewomen scored seven times in the top of the first to quickly put the Hokies away. Offensively UMass was led by Sam Cardenas who went 2–for–3 with two runs and two RBIs, and Amy Powell, who scored three runs.

Liz Wagner was solid on the mound, striking out five and allowing just one run in four innings of work. Wagner leads the team with a 1.33 ERA and 37 strikeouts on the season.

The second game of the twin–bill saw UMass score in every inning, as the Hokies shot themselves in the foot by making six errors. On the day, Virginia Tech had 11 errors, while UMass was perfect in the field.

Freshmen Octavia Brown and Becky George both came off of the bench and scored two runs for UMass, while Kim Guridge went 2–for–3 with three RBIs. Brown was 2–for–2 with an RBI, while George went 1–for–2 and drove in a pair of runs. The hits were the first of Brown's career.

After playing their first 29 games on the road, 24 of them south of the Mason–Dixon line, the Minutewomen will return to Totman Field for their home opener tomorrow at 3 p.m., a doubleheader against Hartford.

UM wins three-of-four over Rams

By Chris Stamm and Casey Kane
Collegian Staff

The Fordham Rams came, saw and were conquered, winning just one game of two double headers as the Massachusetts baseball team went 3–4 in its first substantial home stand at Earl E. Lorden field. The weekend's three wins improves the Minutemen's mark to 14–7, (5–3 in the Atlantic 10) while the Rams fall to 11–15–1, (3–4–1 in the A–10).

Massachusetts 4, Fordham 2

Dagliere's drive to left field in the bottom of the third inning scored leftfielder Ryan Jette, putting UMass up for good in the final game of its weekend series with the Rams.

In the top of the third, down 2–0, Marchiano stepped up to the plate for the Rams and knocked UMass pitcher David Dart's delivery out of the park, for a two–run homer. The dinger scored Marchiano and Ram catcher Vincent Lumia, who was aboard after he grounded to short but beat the throw.

UMass retaliated when Jette led off with a single past the shortstop. Brad Gorrie, the UMass shortstop, drove the ball to the fence in right field for a double, sending Jette to third. Dagliere lined the ball into left to bring Jette in, putting the Minutemen up 3–2.

UMass would need no other scoring, but in the bottom of the fourth the designated hitter, Doug Clark, would add an insurance run when Thistle singled the ball through the gap between second and short. Clark beat the throw to first, after grounding to the shortstop, to get on base. He then advanced to scoring position after Kiah laid down a sacrifice bunt.

Dart, a senior southpaw, threw the full seven innings for the Minutemen to pick up the win. The victory brought Dart's record to 2–1. Neilsen took the loss for the Rams.

"I felt real good, I was hitting my spots which is the most important thing," Dart said. "The most important thing is that we took two games today [Saturday], and really took it to them today. They're a solid team, they want to win as much as anyone else."

"Nothing was easy for us [this weekend]," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "We scrapped and things ended up alright."

Massachusetts 7, Fordham 4

The Fordham offense got going in the top of the third off some sloppy play by the UMass infield. Fordham's Vincent Lumia led off the inning laying down a grounder to second, and made the base only after Minuteman firstbaseman Justin Kelly dropped the toss from Dagliere. After sophomore right right hander Scott Barnsby walked the next batter, the Rams' Dan Moletti squeezed off an easy bunt down the third baseline, where UMass short stop Brad Gorrie dropped the ball, allowing for the single. With bases loaded, Fordham's third baseman Tom Stein cranked one out of the park for the grand slam to put the Rams up early 4–0.

The Minutemen countered in the bottom of the inning when Gorrie singled to right scoring Jette, who led off with a double of his own. Clark was good for a single which sent Gorrie home as Dagliere scored the third run of the inning after running out a grounder to the mound, placing the Minutemen within a run of Fordham.

UMass cinched the win in the bottom of the fourth, when Jette blasted a three–run homer to left center, putting the Minutemen ahead for the first time 6–4. Gorrie walked and then scored on a double by Dagliere to give UMass its seventh and final run of the game.

Sophomore right hander Jeff Puleri improved his record to 2–2 after throwing 4–2/3 innings of scoreless relief and allowing only two hits after stepping onto the mound for Barnsby in the third.

"What was big was Puleri coming in," Stone said. "He shut the door and gave us the chance to hold them and come back."

Massachusetts 6, Fordham 3

UMass came out to avenge its opening loss and succeeded in its second game scoring five runs on five hits in the first inning, as all nine batters stepped to the plate. Dagliere was good for a RBI when he singled to drive home Jette who made his way on base by singling to third and stealing home. Murphy tallied a RBI of his own on a single which scored Dagliere. The final two runs of the inning came when senior catcher Andy Kiah ripped a

Weld, Kerry spar in TV debate; death penalty question looms

By Glen Johnson
Associated Press

BOSTON — Republican Gov. William F. Weld, touting his record as a slasher of government spending, and Sen. John Kerry, calling for greater help for the poor, faced off Monday in a fiery first debate of their Senate campaign.

The first of seven debates, uncommonly early in a campaign, stunned many observers because of its intensity.

Kerry turned the debate quickly to spending, saying cuts in Massachusetts had been achieved at the expense of welfare recipients, the elderly and other needy citizens.

Kerry, a Democrat, drew applause when he said he was against "a guillotine that cuts off women and children who haven't seen a father in 15 years."

Weld characterized Kerry as a big spender who was opposed to the death penalty. He called for cracking down on urban crime.

He said drug dealers cannot be caught with sizable amounts of cocaine, only to be told, "You're a bad boy. I'm going to send you home to your mom."

Weld then startled the crowd by telling Kerry that he wanted him to tell a woman in the audience, whose son was a murdered police officer, that his killer was more important than the life of her son.

Kerry did not flinch. He drew the longest applause of the evening by saying that he did not think the killer's life was more important, that he was "scum" who should be put away forever. But he said he had seen killing in Vietnam, and he had no stomach for it.

Kerry said later that Weld had promised to take away prisoners' televisions and put them to work crushing stones.

"I haven't noticed any crushed pebbles around the streets of Massachusetts," Kerry said.

"If you had your way, [criminals] would be watching TV in their living rooms and not in prison," Weld said.

In an exchange that drew gasps from the audience, Kerry said Weld and his friends in Washington believed everything is for free.

"I don't have friends in Washington," Weld responded, producing the audience reaction.

Kerry said that House Speaker Newt Gingrich had said he and the governor were remarkably alike.

"Hey," Weld responded. "There are only two podiums in here. I know you want to run against 'Newtie' but he's not here."

"Governor, I'm running against you and your fiscal policies," Kerry responded.

Weld made strong points early by calling for legalization of casino gambling in New Bedford, a move Kerry has been reluctant to seize upon as a panacea for an ailing economy.

"I see this as a jobs issue," an unusually animated Weld said.

He said southeastern Massachusetts has had 5 percent more unemployment than the rest of the state in recent years. Faneuil Hall, scene of various Revolutionary War meetings, hosted the debate, with C-SPAN on hand to film for national television viewing. The men are scheduled to debate six more times before Election Day.

Making a wry note on what will be a long campaign season, Kerry said at the beginning, "We're very glad to be here, seven months before election day."

Weld, a moderate, second-term Republican governor, says government "should do less with less." Kerry, a liberal Democrat seeking his third Senate term, believes government remains an agent for social change.

When he announced his candidacy for Kerry's seat in November, Weld said he planned to focus on the same three issues that carried him so well during his 1994 re-election campaign: crime, welfare and taxes.

Although he has presided over 11 tax cuts, Weld may be most closely identified with his welfare reform measures. One law, which took effect Nov. 1, requires all able-bodied recipients to begin working or else lose their benefits.

Kerry has focused attention on the alliance Weld would form with congressional Republicans, saying proposed GOP budget cuts already could cost up to 165,000 jobs in Massachusetts.

Liberian civil war prompts U.S. citizen exodus to embassy

MONROVIA, Liberia — Shelling and gunfire raged in the capital yesterday, sending at least 15,000 civilians fleeing to a U.S. Embassy compound. The Clinton administration is considering evacuating Americans from Liberia as early as today.

The fighting between government troops and warring rebel factions that broke out Saturday in Monrovia is the worst in three years.

"We hear rocket-propelled-grenade fire, mortar fire, heavy-arms fire," Dudley Sims, a spokesman for the U.S. Embassy, said by telephone. "It's pretty bad."

The conflict between seven rebel factions fighting mainly along ethnic lines has killed more than 150,000 people and left at least half the country's 2.3 million residents homeless in the six-year civil war.

A peace accord was supposed to clear the way for elections this year but renewed unrest in the country, founded in 1847 by freed American slaves, has caused the collapse of civil order.

Clinton's signature gives next president line-item veto power

WASHINGTON (AP) — With a stroke of his pen, President Clinton today will give the next president — perhaps himself — the authority to cut specific items from spending bills.

The so-called line-item veto, sought by presidents since Ulysses S. Grant in the 1870s, goes into effect Jan. 1 because Clinton and Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, his all-but certain presidential opponent, decided the law should not become a campaign issue. The line-item veto fulfills a GOP "Contract With America" promise, but Democratic presidents have wanted that power as well. Clinton maintained that it served him well when he was governor of Arkansas.

It does away with a requirement, in place since the nation's founding, that a president must approve or reject legislation in its entirety.

Opponents characterized it as a dangerous ceding to the executive branch of Congress' power of the purse.

But Congress decided the president needed a new tool to combat the federal deficit. He will be able to strike out individual items from spending bills and kill low-priority or pork-barrel projects.

Privatization threat angers University union

By Jacob Adelman
Collegian Correspondent

During most of the week, Hampden Snack Bar doesn't seem to be serving anyone. A few bored workers stand behind counters while students recline on plastic benches, sipping on soda and reading textbooks.

This all changes on Thursday, Friday and Saturday evenings, when Antonio's sells pizza from a counter in the snack bar. The place swarms with students. In fact, the pizzeria has been so successful that it will expand its service to six nights a week next semester.

"This pizza's good," sophomore Ryan Belly said. "It's not quite as good as the pizza I get at home, but it's better than the food here."

Not everyone is happy to find Antonio's in the snack bar, though.

Members of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employee (AFSCME) local 1776, which represents all the campus' trades workers including Food Services employees, has been picketing Antonio's downtown store in reaction to their arrival on campus.

The protest is on behalf of the campus' unionized Food Services employees, who fear the pizzeria's presence represents the beginning of a trend that could cost them their jobs.

Does pizza displace workers?

Ashoke Ganguli, director of Auxiliary Services, said it is a national trend to contract private companies to provide on- campus services. For example, he noted, all services on Boston University's campus have been privatized. Private companies provide, and have always provided, services to the University's three other campuses.

Ganguli also said that there already is limited privatization on the campus. Besides the pizza counter being run by Antonio's, the Ogden Corporation, a private company, operates the Mullins Center and private vendors service the campus' laundry and snack machines.

"The question is, what level of privatization will be the university move ahead to?" Ganguli said. "Every service that Auxiliary Services provides — food, lodging, the book store — is also provided by the public industry. We have to be as competitive as the private sector. And we are. What we lack is capital."

Union officials claim workers have lost their jobs because of Antonio's and that if more private, non-unionized businesses move onto campus, more jobs will be lost.

Robert Joyce, local 1776's treasurer, said the picketing is a response to Antonio's Hampden operations hav-

Suicide, Brown crash unlinked

By Tony Smith
Associated Press

DUBROVNIK, Croatia — A U.S. team investigating the plane crash that killed Commerce Secretary Ron Brown focused on the Dubrovnik airport's navigation system yesterday, and ruled out any link between the crash and the suicide of the system's maintenance chief.

Niko Jerkic shot himself in the chest at his home Saturday, three days after Brown's plane slammed into a hilltop near Dubrovnik in a windy rainstorm, killing all 35 people aboard. Brown and a group of U.S. business leaders were looking into business and investment opportunities in the Balkans.

The Croatian Interior Ministry issued a statement yesterday saying Jerkic was not working Wednesday, the day of the crash.

He "neither had any connection with the operational service of the control tower, nor did his death have any connections with the tragic crash of the U.S. aircraft," it said.

U.S. Air Force Lt. Col. Ray Shepherd, spokesman for Brig. Gen. Charles Coolidge who is investigating the crash, said the U.S. team had received the statement and was satisfied Jerkic was not responsible.

"That's enough for us," he said

Profs address black feminism

Stereotypes, lack of community support hurt movement

By Michelle Hillman
Collegian Staff

Delayed by late March storms, a discussion about black women and feminism was held last Tuesday night in Gorman dormitory. The discussion was led by Alex Deschamps, professor of women's studies, and Deidre Royster, professor of sociology.

Deschamps began the discussion talking about race solidarity and using the Anita Hill/Clarence Thomas hearings as an example. Deschamps said that the main question was not only if Hill should have testified against another black person, but if should she have testified against a black man.

"When do we stop covering up for black men and take care of ourselves? We need to find space to talk about issues that ail us," Deschamps said.

Deschamps also noted that black feminists are feared by black men and white women alike, and are often thought of as lesbians.

"When will black male scholars stop dismissing black feminists as lesbians?" she asked.

Royster opened her part of the discussion by stating why she prefers the word womanism to feminism.

"Feminism, as a word and movement, has never been big enough to include everyone," she said.

Royster said that she "could not think of any people that are doing things to empower black women, so why do white women expect black women to be the grunt workers of the movement?"

Royster discussed the fact that "acting womanish," a term she picked up from author Alice Walker, is not an attempt to become authoritative or exclusive to anyone. She cited Louis Farrakhan as an example of this because of his effort to exclude women from his Million Man March.

Royster criticized Farrakhan not only for excluding women from the march, but also for instructing black men "to take care of their property" instead of instructing them to share power and decisions with black women.

Deschamps agreed on this point and added that Farrakhan also excluded women by instructing black men to return to the position of head of the household.

The fact that black women did not take a stance against the Million Man March was another example of race solidarity, several members of the audience said. Black women feel that to oppress black men further would only hinder his progress, they added.

Deschamps said black women "have to make excuses for black males in community because we cannot endanger the race anymore."

She added that black women must realize their responsibility to their own oppression.

"Feminism must confront our own complicity in oppression," Deschamps said, citing rap videos as an example.

Royster also questioned where black girls were developing a sense of self.

Deschamps added to this remark by stating "people always talk about endangered black males all the time, but when do you hear about the woman who are raped, without education, etc."

Royster and Deschamps both commented on the lack of black women in the audience, and Deschamps noted "young black women do not want to be called feminists." According to Royster, some of the reasons for the trend were that "black women do not want to be seen as abandoning black men" and also "that feminism has been trivialized into white women being pinched at work."

Flaherty opts to step down today

By Robert W. Troff
Associated Press

BOSTON — Despite his vow to stay on as speaker until the end of June, House Speaker Charles F. Flaherty, convicted last week of cheating on his taxes, said yesterday he would step down today. The Cambridge Democrat, who fabricated documents in an Internal Revenue Service audit, said he was leaving immediately — instead of June 30, as he originally planned — not because of his legal woes, but to spare House members further turmoil.

"For the sake of me staying here for a couple of more months, to subject them to that would be inconsiderate on my part, quite frankly," Flaherty told reporters after his announcement. Flaherty said he would keep his House seat until his term runs out this year. He already announced he would not seek re-election in November.

Defiant to the end, the Cambridge Democrat brushed off questions about whether public pressure had prompted him to alter his resignation timetable. And he scoffed at Republican Leader Edward Teague's plans to force him out if he didn't step down, saying Democrats wanted him to stay on.

"The stupid and stubborn, Irish-kid-from-the-neighborhood-in-Cambridge part of me wanted to do that just to teach the minority leader another lesson," Flaherty said.

After his announcement, Flaherty, who pleaded guilty last week to federal tax evasion and violating state ethics law, adjourned the House until 3 p.m. today. The body had been scheduled to begin debate on the state's $17.4 billion, fiscal 1997 state budget.

Both Democratic and Republican lawmakers said that while they still liked Flaherty personally, they were apprehensive about having a felon serve as their leader.

"I am glad the speaker decided to do the right thing," Teague said. "The public absolutely demanded his resignation."

Flaherty insisted yesterday that he was leaving the speaker's office on his own terms. Yet ever since U.S. Attorney Donald Stern began investigating him more than three years ago, the speaker has backtracked.

For months Flaherty maintained that he had done nothing wrong, would not be convicted of anything and would not be forced from office. Yet two weeks ago he admitted to the felony tax evasion charge; then, after saying he would remain speaker until the end of June, he reversed course and announced his resignation, which is effective at noon today.

Although public pressure had mounted for Flaherty to step down, many of his colleagues were surprised at his announcement yesterday. Rep. Gus Serra, a member of Flaherty's leadership team, said the speaker did not mention his resignation during a 45-minute telephone conversation late Sunday night.

"He's an honorable man and he did the honorable thing in his own way," said Serra (D-Boston).

ing displaced five AFSCME workers.

"Five years ago, Hampden snack-bar employed eight workers," Joyce said. "But for certain reasons — lousy menu, bad hours — business was slow. So the staff was reduced to three union people."

But since they arrived on campus last semester, Antonio's has employed four private wage-workers at their counter to do a job that Joyce believes belongs to union members. He said he sees it as unjust for outside workers to be brought in where AFSCME members had recently been removed. He said he considers this tantamount to their being displaced.

"Five workers were directly displaced," Joyce said.

The administration, however, denied this. "No one lost a job over it," said Paul Paige, assistant vice-chancellor for finance and administration.

Joyce said this isn't the only case of workers losing their jobs through the University's dealings with private firms. As an example, he mentioned the placement of automated ovens that make Stone Willy's pizza in Hampshire and Worcester Dining Halls. Workers have been displaced there, too.

Joyce said the administration intended to install these machines and assign part-time, non-union workers to operate them.

He said that when threatened with the request for an injunction, Food Services backed the machine out of Worcester Dining Hall but allowed the other to remain in Hampshire. A lawyer contracted by the Boston-based Counsel 93, AFSCME's umbrella organization, is currently working to remove this oven as well, according to Joyce.

"It looks bad because we haven't stopped it yet," he said.

However, Richard Rossi, director of Food Services, denied that the administration employed non-union workers to operate these machines.

"The major work is being done by AFSCME employees," he said. "But they need some extra help. They're there to assist them."

Joyce said the problems they are having with Antonio's and the pizza machines are just the beginning of more to come.

Food Court fears

What worries the union most, he said, are the plans the University administration has to build a food court operated by private businesses in the area of the Campus Center now occupied by the Hatch.

"They have spent thousands of dollars to hire consultants to design this food court," he said.

The administration does not deny this. "Consultants have been hired to look at auxiliary operations," Paige said.

Although he said these investigations have not led to any direct initiatives, Paige admits privatization is something that may happen in the future.

"It's something that comes up periodically that we have to put into the mix," he said. "We are always considering how to provide services to the community in the most economical way possible. In that respect, it's an issue."

Paige said that the administration is considering student's wishes.

Students' wish lists

In a series of focus group surveys that Auxiliary Services sponsored last semester, students suggested changes they thought should be made to the existing restaurant selections on campus.

The responses were varied, although members of the different groups repeatedly voiced the desire to find name- brand businesses on campus. Surveyed students expressed some dissatisfaction with existing places to eat on campus. Some said they would like to have restaurant chains, such as Pizza Hut, McDonald's or Taco Bell, on campus.

"Branded products have appeal as the result of millions of dollars of advertising," Paige said. "If students want it, we have to consider how we can give it to them. We have to ask ourselves, would students — our customers — be pleased with what currently exists as to what could exist within the current framework?"

Working it out

Yet Joyce believes the administration is intentionally misleading AFSCME about this issue. He alleged that the University is taking privatization initiatives without first consulting the union.

Under the two-year-old Pacheco-Menard act, he said, state agencies seeking to privatize their services must first prove that it's more economical to do so. The administration must first bargain with the existing work force before private workers may take their places.

"We're in these negotiations and have been," Joyce said.

But, Joyce said, throughout these negotiations, the administration has not been forthcoming with information he believes necessary for fair discussion.

"They have consistently refused to provide the information that we request," he said. As a result, Joyce said the union's attorney is in the process of filing a suit under the Freedom of Information Act.

Joyce said he believes firmly that the placement of a food court where the Hatch now stands would result in the displacement of workers.

"They keep telling us it's not privatization because they're going to staff it with our workers," he said. "But we know better. Because of the economics of that type of operation, there's no way they would ever use union workers in that type of situation."

Paige said he's familiar with the union's anxieties. "They always have their concerns," he said. "What are the concerns of the student body as a whole in terms of what they want?"

David Williams, communications director for AFSCME Counsel 93, said he's not as worried as the local division about moves to privatize the campus. He said he was unaware of the legal threats to the University that Joyce had mentioned.

The hiring of the consulting firm to make recommendations on the food court construction need not be seen as cause for alarm, according to Williams. In fact, he said, it's consistent with what he considers the University's responsibility to investigate ways to provide more attractive services to students.

"This is part of what the University should be doing. The issue for us is, who is going to do the work?" Williams said. "We want everybody's desires to be met — the desire to bring in food the students want and our desire to be the ones serving it.

"The mere fact that the University is looking into privatization is, in and of itself, not something for us to worry about until we find out who's going to do the work. There is a reasonable expectation that all these things can be worked out."

Throughout the discussion there was one audience member who continuously linked racism with sexism, and Deschamps responded directly to her at the end of the evening.

"What I would like to pass on to black women is to see beyond racism and take the movement somewhere else. Black women take your own power, decolonize your mind, and educate yourselves. As a black women, I insist, I demand you do more," she said.

yesterday.

Jerkic, whose duties included keeping the navigation system working properly, died before the U.S. team got a chance to question him in an interview Shepherd has described as routine. The team will probably spend two days examining the navigation equipment, Shepherd said. The system relied on technology that is about 50 years old, but both U.S. and Croatian officials have described it as reliable. The Yugoslav army stripped the airport of a more sophisticated landing system in 1992 and the equipment never was replaced.

Police, who originally reported the maintenance chief's name as Niko Junik, have refused to release any details of the suicide. Jerkic's family refused to talk to reporters yesterday.

Airport officials also declined to be interviewed about Jerkic, but neighbors described him as serious and somewhat reclusive and said they hadn't seen him since the crash.

Jerkic shot himself about an hour after the bodies of the 35 Americans were flown out of the airport back to the United States. The 46-year-old bachelor lived on the ground floor of his parents' three-story home overlooking Dubrovnik's harbor. He almost always used a private garage exit rather than the main house entrance to come and go, said the neighbors, who would not give their names.

The T-43, the military version of a Boeing 737, veered off course on its final approach, raising questions about whether the airport is equipped for safe landing in bad weather.

Visibility was poor and the pilot was using the plane's instruments to land when air traffic controllers lost contact. Dubrovnik does not have an Instrumental Landing System, which is standard at most busy European airports. The device sends signals to approaching aircraft from the ground, so when the plane gets to 200 feet from the ground, the pilot will know if it can safely land.

The withdrawing Yugoslav army plundered the airport's instrumental landing system in October 1992. The airport reopened in spring 1993 but never got a new system.

Defense Secretary William Perry said Thursday that the plane may have had an instrumentation problem, but the cause of the crash is far from clear.

Investigators do not yet have copies of radio tapes of conversation between the control tower and the plane because transcripts have to be verified by several people, said Tom Haueter, an investigator from the U.S. National Transportation Safety Board.

The plane was not outfitted with flight data and voice recorders, commonly known as black boxes.

It's Tuesday — there's nothing too redeeming about Tuesday really. You know it's a bad day when Wednesday starts to appeal to you. So I thought I'd spin a little yarn (elderly for: tell a few stories) in a vain attempt to lighten the day.

A friend of mine took his girlfriend out uptown and they were drinking. A lot. She hadn't eaten a thing all day, so eventually she puked all over the floor and passed out in his car. No surprises yet — after all it's UMass. So my friend decides he just has to get her home.

Sounds easy enough, but there is one catch. She lives with her parents. So, not only did he have to get her home, but he had to get her in the house without waking up the folks.

He pulled up outside the house, and fished the house key out of her pocket. He tiptoed to the front door and gently placed the key in the lock. He started to turn it... the door didn't open. That's OK, must be the wrong way. He turned it the other way, again nothing. You know how you're not familiar with other people's locks sometimes? Well, he thought, maybe if he jiggled it a little bit. A little noise, but he had to get her in there. Then it happened.

Snap.

The key broke off in the door.

Life isn't always a beer commercial.

It's my sophomore year in high school and it's lunch time. We're all sitting in the cafeteria chowin' on the crap they serve us. A friend of mine got a roast beef sandwich and took a nice big bite out of it. Something wasn't right — ah yes, he needed to put mustard on it.

He lifted the bun, and sitting almost dead center was a half eaten Mento (the red kind). The kid threw a temper tantrum. He ran into the kitchen to make a big scene (I mean, what was he going to get — a free lunch?).

Apparently, one of the lunch ladies had been eating Mentos and when one accidently fell out of her mouth, she thought it went on the floor. She was real sorry and all, but the worst part was the red jukes from the candy blended in with the meat.

Read three paragraphs up — he had already taken a bite.

Mentos, the freshmaker.

Speaking of gross food stories (everyone usually has a million of these), I heard this one from a friend of a friend of a friend of a friend.

Some woman went to a fast food restaurant, you know McDonald's or Burger King — I'd hate to name the wrong one and deface their tasty reputations. Anyway, the woman ordered a chicken sandwich and brought it home. Just a few bites into the sandwich she started to get violently ill. She went to the hospital and to figure out exactly what was going on with her, and they analyzed the food she had been eating.

In the chicken sandwich, they found a tumor. The woman had been eating cancer. That is just plain nasty. I hope you're not reading this during lunch.

"Um, yes, can I have a melanoma with cheese meal, extra packets of jungle rot for the fries and some shingles on the side. Oh, and could you super-size it please."

"Please drive around."

I actually read this story somewhere.

Some guy from New York, desperate for money, decided he was going to rob a bar. He figured with the tips and the cash from the drawer, it would be a pretty good take. So he entered the establishment, went up to the young lady bartender and drew his weapon, informing her to empty the contents of the register into a bag.

She didn't move, frozen in fear, staring off past his shoulders. He turned around to check his back — there were over 100 guns aimed at his head.

Uh-oh pal: You just held up a bar hosting a retirement party for a police officer.

I wonder if they let the guy retiring read the Miranda rights. Just for old time's sake.

If you answered "Yes" to any of those questions, then it's safe to say that you're at least a little impatient, but don't worry. In this day and age, that seems to be the norm. Our society is moving faster and faster every day, and the faster we move, the more we tend to rush. The more we want to rush, the more impatient we become.

So where does that leave us? This may be surprising, but impatience doesn't really get you anywhere. It will just frustrate you and a frustrated society isn't a happy one.

That's where the problem lies. Because of the impatience which has found its way to every corner of society, people go through their lives unhappier than they ought to be. If people in general were to become more patient, society would be improved in a number of ways.

First of all, it would be easier for an individual to make it through his or her day. As the situation stands right now, people are just too stressed out. If patience was pushed as a quality that everyone should develop, then it could counteract many modern day stresses, making life easier for all of us.

Let me give you an example. An English chap would like a spot of tea, but to make that tea he must boil some water. Because water takes time to boil, our friend will have to do some waiting. How should he spend those few minutes? If he spends the time impatiently watching the kettle, his stress level will go up tenfold, and it will never go down because any physicist will tell you that a watched pot never boils. On the other hand, if he was to forget about the water and perfect his whistling of "Yankee Doodle," then the kettle would be whistling with him before he'd even know it.

Thinking about the water will not in any way make it boil faster, but it could cause excess acid in the stomach leading to ulcers and the like. In this case, a little patience can make the difference between a soothing cup of tea and a visit to the doctor.

Another factor that enters into this discussion is gratification, either instant or delayed. Lately, it seems that most of society has fallen into the instant gratification trap. They want to eat their cookies before the broccoli simply because they'd rather have the good-tasting stuff as soon as they possibly can. They forget that the cookies will taste better at the end of the meal, after anticipation has built up.

We need to collectively realize that delayed gratification is good, better than the alternative in many ways. Look at it this way. If we, the college students of the world, wanted jobs and houses right now, then we could go out and get them. But we're delaying that gratification for four years in order to get a better job and a better life. This philosophy applies to many different aspects of our lives, but we don't take the time to notice it, mainly because we don't have the patience.

In other words, have a little patience. Not only with inanimate objects like tea kettles, but with people too. People are very delicate, and if you show them patience, then both you and they will be better off for it. The coupon lady has feelings just like you and me. Trust me, a little patience goes a long way.

For a long time, patience has been as one of the best qualities a person could possess, and the best thing about it is that it's not one of those things that you have or you don't. It's something that can be worked on and practiced.

If you've made it this far into this column, then you have a good amount of patience to start off with, so use it. Take pride in it. Make the world better with it.

Looking over your shoulder

Justin C. Smith

The old saying goes hindsight is 20-20." So like most everyone, there are many mistakes I have made in my life and things I would do differently if I had the chance to do them over again.

For instance, my first choice in adult life was to follow the footsteps of all my elder male relatives and study to be an engineer in college. I applied and was accepted into the program at Northeastern University. That didn't go too well so I transferred to UMass a year and a half later and decided to become a journalist.

I was able to mercifully that situation with relative ease. Other things. I will never be able to change. Just listen.

My Junior Year Prom Date — My junior year of high school. I had the biggest crush on my one of best friends, Jessica. We were actually boyfriend/girlfriend for 20 days in February — yes. I still remember from when to when — and I asked her to go with me to the prom. The prom was the end of April.

She ended up breaking up with me because she couldn't stop thinking about my other best friend, Dennis. Unfortunately, I found that out the hard way when she asked me half way through prom night if I would cover for her if she stayed with him the rest of the night.

All my friends were amazed I even thought about going to my senior prom.

My G.P.A. — I believe the guy who tried to convince me to go streaking through Northeast said it best. "It's so cold out here my penis is as small as my G.P.A., and I'm on academic probation." It times my G.P.A. has made it seem like its 100 below outside. 'Nuff said.

Old Roommates — Ever lived with a close friend? You're not as close anymore, are you? I roomed with a friend who I usually could handle, but occasionally was known to get on peoples nerves. I thought for the most part that I could handle the situation. I was wrong.

We clashed in every way possible, between tipping the driver for our pizza to when going to bed was appropriate. We never really have gotten along since. It's not because we can't stand each other — it's just that we don't hang out anymore.

Of two friends, which to hook up with — I thought both of two friends were very nice and was interested in each, but thought only one was interested in me. We ended up having almost nothing in common and we didn't last two weeks.

Later I found out the other wanted to see me but couldn't pay as much attention to me that night as she wanted to. The two of us became very close friends and through that I discovered she was everything I would have wanted in a girlfriend, but she couldn't think of me romantically after I had dated her best friend.

The way my mom dressed me — I'm sure most everyone can relate to this one. My mother possessed the one thing when we went clothes shopping that to this day would scare me to death if she ever pulled it out again — a Sears charge card. That one piece of plastic could mean only one thing... Toughskins.

If I had a dime for every time I got picked on for wearing Toughskins into my fifth grade classroom I could have retired by afternoon recess. Not only was it the pants, but also the tacky shirts that couldn't make the situation any better. No wonder I never got any valentines in elementary school.

Speaking of Sears, that also means the Sears film studio where my younger brother and I would be taken by our mother and her Sears charge card for our Christmas photo. And of course, if you and your sibling look anyway alike the way my brother and I do, then your parents dressed you in, yes, you guessed it, matching outfits.

I see infant twins today who are wearing identical outfits and my heart bleeds for them.

Choice of Delicates — What a wonderful invention boxer shorts are. I spent the first 16 years of my life in what many people refer to as 'Tighty Whities.' When my high school soccer team made the state finals, the entire team, including we, the bench riders, was given a pair of these magnificent creations. After one day I was sold on them and refused to ever put on another pair of briefs as long as I lived.

Boxers have character as well as comfort. The only color a man can show in his Hanes Briefs is the uncreemonious railroad tracks that inevitably appear after usage.

When you can wear your school mascot, Marvin the Martian or a glow-in-the-dark "Naughty" on your ass, how could you even comprehend putting anything else on your privates?

Treating patience

Mark McGrath

How patient are you? Think about that one for a few minutes. When you're stopped at a red light, do you eagerly watch for the other direction's light to turn yellow in anticipation of a quick getaway? When you're standing in line at the supermarket, do you keep an eye on the next line over to see if you chose the right one? Do you secretly curse the lady with all the coupons? After you're done, do you wonder why everyone else took so long when you only took a few seconds?

If you answered "Yes" to any of those questions, then it's safe to say that you're at least a little impatient, but don't worry. In this day and age, that seems to be the norm. Different strokes

Dawn Jennings

All right. I've come to a realization. Men and women are of different species. I've suspected this for awhile, but now I'm absolutely sure. Please bear with me. I'm being serious.

Girls, ask yourself this question: "Is your idea of the perfect night being huddled around a TV, watching the big game and seeing who can burp the loudest?" Guys, would you ever rent "Beaches" with your buddies for the sole purpose of having a good cry and then spend the rest of the evening talking about the first boy (or girl in many of your cases) you ever kissed and whether plum or burgundy nail polish goes better with your new outfit? Didn't think so. We're just not the same.

There are numerous books and movies about gender differences nowadays and I think most of us kinda laugh them off. They're just trying to make some money by writing these things. Besides the obvious biological factors, both genders are the same. Wrong, wrong, wrong.

Now, I'm not saying either sex is better than the other, and don't worry guys, my intent in this article is not to male-bash. I'm just saying we're not alike. I'd even go so far as to say that our brains are structured a little differently.

It all goes back to the way we think and how we communicate. Have you ever seen White Men Can't Jump, when they're lying in bed and she asks for a glass of water and then blows up at him when he goes to get it? She doesn't want the water, she wants him to sympathize with the fact that she's thirsty. Now I admit the movie is exaggerating a bit, but not much.

Last year, I was stressing one day. I had two huge tests that week and a friend was coming to stay at our apartment for a few days with a couple of his buddies. It was his 21st birthday and not surprisingly he wanted to party all week. Unfortunately, while I wanted to join in on the celebration, I had a ton of work to do. Usually getting a keg on Monday night and going uptown for the next five nights wouldn't have been a problem, but this particular week I couldn't quite handle it.

So, I'm talking to one of my guy friends about the situation. I'm looking for some sympathy: "Geez, what can you do?" Some reassurance: "I'm sure you'll manage somehow." Some support: "It'll be all right, gimme a hug." (I wanted a hug for this? What was I thinking?)

Instead, he thought about it for a minute, and said, "Well, if he's not coming up until tonight, you can go to the library between your 12:20 and 2:35 classes today. What time did you say he's arriving? Don't get the keg until later tonight. By the way, Liquors 44 is having a big sale on Icehouse kegs, you should probably get it there. You don't have any classes tomorrow afternoon, so you could study then..." He continued to map out the entire week for me. Now I know he was trying to be helpful, and I appreciated the suggestions. However, I didn't want the glass of water — I wanted the hug.

Another big communication barrier is the phone. Now I've already decided that most guys don't know how to use the thing, except to call DP Dough. Just so I don't appear to be taking sides, many girls are the opposite and spend too much of their time conversing on it. I mean, this time could be much better spent playing Segas or something (sorry, I have to be a little biased). When we're dealing with same gender conversations around the phone these differences work out fine. It's when the two sexes want to talk to one another that the problems begin. I'll give an example.

Girl calls boy. Boy is hanging out with friends. Football game is on. Boy answers phone.

"Yeah?"

"Todd? Oh hi, it's me."

A little grunt, then, "Oh my God, I can't believe he did that! Why didn't he just run with it?"

"Did what?"

"What?... oh... it's you. Listen, I'm busy right now, can I call you back later?"

Two minutes later.

Boy has forgotten the phone call. He's now happily engrossed in the game again, beer in one hand, remote in the other. Life is good.

Girl is talking to her friends, close to tears. "Do you think he still loves me? Why do you think he hung up so soon? Did I do something wrong? Should I dump him?"

We just think differently. I don't think there is any debate about that. Females read into things far too much and males don't enough. In order for us not to kill one another, we have to be willing to accept this. Girls: When a guy says he wants to spend the night with his friends, that's probably the whole story. Don't bother to try and analyze this. It doesn't mean he doesn't want to see you anymore or that you did anything wrong, he just wants a night with the guys. Guys: When a girl says she wants more space, she doesn't mean that the couch is getting too crowded and you should sit in a chair. You have to read just a tad bit into this statement. As soon as we start doing this I think it will be a lot easy for both genders to get along.

BMCP keeps it real at 7th annual conference

By Gregory Casimir
Collegian Staff

On March 29 and 30, the Black Mass Communication Project (BMCP) held its seventh annual communications conference.

This conference focused on the various aspects of the communications field: radio, film, video and journalism. The purpose of the conference was to provide ALANA students with a special opportunity to enhance their careers by introducing them to people in the industry.

The BMCP Conference scheduled several informative panels with guest speakers from various fields of communications to lecture and answer questions by students interested in that respective field.

Despite the modest budget allotted to them by the Student Activities Office of UMass, BMCP still manages to bring reputable speakers and quality performers to their yearly conferences.

In the past, the conferences have had guest speakers that included journalist Tony Brown, filmmaker Spike Lee, Dr. bell hooks and Angela Davis. In addition, BMCP has managed to capture such renowned acts like Tribe Called Quest, Naughty by Nature, Onyx, De La Soul and Grammy- winning reggae star Shabba Ranks.

This year's conference was no different. Day one of the conference began last Friday with an elaborate cocktail party and semi-formal. Day two of the conference was filled with activity and excitement as students from UMass flocked to the Campus Center for free giveaways that included CDs, cassettes, stickers and vinyls.

Not only did a large number of students from UMass attend, but so did many other students from the Five College Area, as well as students from Boston, New York and Springfield.

This year's conference panels were filled with people galore from deep in the heart of the industry of music, radio, television, and production. Among some of the more known names in the business were MC Search, James Lewis, Eric Skinner of five Records, producer Easy Mo Bee, artist Lady Lee and General.

Most of the panels were held in the Student Union Ballroom, as well as the keynote speaker. This year's keynote speaker was James Mtume, the music producer for Fox's hit television series, New York Undercover. Mtume is also a talented symphonic composer Broadway composer, and jazz recording artist as well.

Some of his work credits include working with artists such as Brandy, Al Green, K. C. Haley of Jodeci, SWV, Brownstone and Roberta Flack.

One panel that drew a large crowd was the New England Coalition/Hip Hop Radio Unites panel. Moderating it was rapper/producer MC Search, and college radio veteran James Lewis.

This panel addressed the problems of relationships between college radio stations and record labels and industry representatives. One major problem presented was how a small station could get more exposure.

Search responded, "A solution for smaller stations is to make copies of their shows to retailers. Labels have to see need more than just stickers."

Other panels included a Reggae Workshop/Panel, moderated by UMass' own Sean Warner, a lecture on Cerebral Intercourse presented by Brother Jamie X of Mosque No. 13, and an informative panel on "Hip Hop From A Woman's Perspective."

The conference then featured a talent show that night, and ended with an after-party deejayed by Pete Rock from New York's Hot 97.

BMCP is headed by general manager Shannan Magee. In addition to the conference, BMCP also collaborates with other campus organizations to promote and sponsor entertainment events and community activities.

Power to vote unused

Allana E. Todman

I have a confession to make.

Although I am constantly telling people to be on the look out for the government and the tricks that they'll implement to keep the chains on the black mind on lock, I am doing nothing to help the situation.

I'm not changing anything.

I am powerless.

I am not registered to vote.

It hurts my heart to even admit it, but it's the sad truth. And do you know what's even worse? I'm not the only one. How many of us out there are drifting along in political limbo, not able to tell the difference between a tax or a welfare reform bill?

It really irritates me when I think about the upcoming presidential elections and how many of us will sit in our dorm rooms, powerless, as we let upper-class, middle-aged white men pick the president of the United States, who will make decisions that will directly affect our people.

I never thought it would get to the point when black people would literally reject political power in a country that for years denied us that right. Are we forgetting something?

It wasn't long ago when the right to vote was something black people didn't have and would die for. We had no political power without it. There was nothing for us to do but watch as whites decided when, where and how we did things.

Now, after years of blood, sweat and many tears, we hold the opportunity to affect change in this country. The only way to do that is by attacking the ballot box and making the presence of black people felt by those politicians who refuse to acknowledge our needs.

Back in the day, black men and women had to travel for miles to take their registration tests. And although the tests were set up for us to fail and deny us from gaining the privilege of the vote, those who beat the system took full advantage of their rights and did what they could to help the rest of us who still couldn't get through.

Finally, when such tests were eradicated and blacks could register freely, it was believed that it would finally be our time. And although there were many of us registered and voting, the majority of us were not and political power still remains in the hands of whites today.

The major difference between those days and today is that now, more than ever, black people can flex their political muscle and put someone in office who will remove the needs and concerns of African Americans from the back- burner and into the forefront of political discussion.

Welfare reform, the affirmative action debate, gun control, the death penalty and censorship are just a few of the hundreds of issues that have a profound affect on the black community.

We can no longer afford to wait until a bill is already passed before we start to voice our opinions on it. We need to get politically aware and stop letting people who don't particularly care about us make decisions for us.

I don't know what's worse — not having power or having it waved in front of our faces and us not taking advantage. Regardless of what we say or all the marches we have, if we don't get out and vote, we will never see the beginning of a solution to our problems.

By the printing of the next Black Affairs Page on April 22, I will be a registered voter. I've already waited long enough and so have the rest of my people.

One time for the mind

Humphrey brown III

When journalist Nathan McCall spoke about his imprisonment and the steps he took in order to change his life last Wednesday night, one of the reasons he gave for his days of violence and street life was due to "self-hate."

McCall went on to say that it is because of all of the past years that no one else believed in us, many of our black youth developed blind rage, causing them to see no help or future for themselves. While continuing to speak about the self-hate, McCall went on to say that if you watched basketball, you would find that much of the court is filled with African Americans, because that is the only arena the white race expects us to be successful at.

Although I was inspired by many of the convictions that McCall had to share, I was quite perturbed to hear his explanation for the reasons of our young black men getting involved in gangs and participating in violent acts.

This self-hate that Nathan McCall talks about is just another excuse for black Americans.

Although I do understand that we fought for many years to regain all of the freedom that we equally deserved, ask yourself these questions.

Have you been involved personally in a slave trade?

Have you not been able to vote because of your race?

Have you not been able to sit in the front of the bus?

Most, likely many of you who are students would say no. Now, I'm not saying that racism does not exist, but wouldn't you say that we've gotten a little bit farther than where we were before? Although our race has been harshly affected by slavery, our generation is the product of what our ancestors experienced, but we have not personally encountered this type of dehumanization.

With this knowledge, it is time to take hold of the past, but move on.

Although racism still exists today, even in moral codes, as black Americans we can use our own moral codes and work through the political system to advance in the workplace and help our inner city youth.

By taking control of the problems that affect our black youth today, we can only move forward, leaving the past behind.

Up close and personal with Greg Casimir: a conversation with rapper MC Search

The eighth floor of the Campus Center was packed for the BMCP communications conference. There were people hurriedly milling in and out of conference rooms. Walking around were four brothers selling Bad Boy International shirts for five dollars. Somewhere in the corner, a photographer had gotten his license to kill, and shot at everything that walked by.

I made my way through the tangle of people that littered the floor. I was searching eagerly for something to cover; I mean, after all the publicity the conference had gotten, I figured that there shouldn't be a scarcity of exciting things to report.

I entered room 809, and realized that I had gotten there late. People were leaving, and asking the reps late minute questions. Mildly disappointed, I made way back to the line for the elevators.

My attention was suddenly called by an unfamiliar rap song playing, and an explosion of laughter from the right of me. I turned around and saw a man sitting on the table smiling and calling everybody in a loud voice who asked him something minter."

I recognized him immediately; it was MC Search, from the first white rap group that got love for us, 3rd Base. Although he wasn't wearing his characteristic glasses, his voice was quite distinct.

I walked up to him, and he bellowed at me, "What can I do for you, mister?"

I smiled and introduced myself, and added that I was from Queensbridge, N.Y.

"All right, I'll talk to you then." Search said approvingly.

Cas: How long have you been involved with the College Coalition?

Search: I've been involved my whole career, but I got more involved this year at the College Coalition panel in Atlanta. I believe in college radio as a marketable tool for breaking records.

Cas: How are conferences like this helpful for kids trying to get into the biz?

Search: (Smiling) Fellatio works well. No really, it enables you to see what the day to day life in the business is. It's good to see how DJs network. For example, if you see someone who kisses ass, you don't want none of that. It also helps to see how eloquent someone is, and how they handle business.

Cas: Last question, I see you have to go now. What's the best way college radio can benefit rap?

Search: The best way college radio can benefit rap is to better understand labels. College viewers need to take their shows more seriously. Like I said before, college radio is a great tool for breaking black music.

Search got off the table and was surrounded by his entourage. He extended his hand towards me, and I gave him a pound and a hug. He turned and was immediately swallowed out of sight by the people around.

Grinning, I folded up my pad. So far so good. I thought to myself about the conference. I got back on line for the elevator, and anticipated the next surprise.

McNeal delivers messages

By Allana E. Todman

RENAE MCNEAL
Hampden Theatre
April 4

"You can kill my body, but you can't take my soul," said actress Renae McNeal, as she packed the Hampden Theatre last Thursday night. This statement was just one of the messages that was conveyed through McNeal's performance.

A woman who was never a theatre major in college, McNeal, spent much more of her time meditating and learning everything about her old ancestors. She was able to grab every audience member from every cultural background. McNeal's integrity, spirituality and cultural performance was not only seen, but felt. With eight character sketches the audience was reached in a profound way.

The first character sketch that was performed was entitled "Mother of Civilization." This sketch conveyed how the admired strength of black women initially began. This soulful interpretation conveyed the era of slave trades.

McNeal played a nine year old girl who had been taken away from her mother in order to be a slave for a different "master." As the little girl was being taken away, she was very confused. While being dragged away, she heard her mother saying loudly, "You can kill my body, but you can't take my soul!"

As the little girl became of age to bear children, her master, known as Master Johnson, had raped her, and she had six daughters by him.

Despite the harsh and dehumanizing trauma that this young slave had to experience, as time went on and her struggles increased, she could still hear her mother faintly in the background saying, "You can kill my body but you can't take my soul."

This monologue revealed the inner strength that is present in black American women today. Many black women today are the prime examples of this quality, often being the mother and father figure of families.

The inner self was one of the key symbols that was reiterated throughout McNeal's performance.

"One of the things that I feel young black women should do is reach into their inner selves and when they find that oneness, that's when they won't have problems hating others," she said.

As the performance continued, McNeal was able to carry the audience through the emancipation period, and also through Marcus Garvey's movement of "Africa for Africans."

Renae McNeal also covered other issues relating to all women. While dressed in '70s garb and dancing around to the Supremes, she was able to have audience participation. With everyone singing "R.E.S.P.E.C.T.," McNeal introduced the audience to a new character, Shanequa Waters.

Shanequa found it hard to be a black woman and a "lesbian." She talked about being in the urban environment and how everyone would perceive her as "funny."

Bringing up the issue of being a lesbian and a black woman in America, McNeal brought another pressing issue into the eyes of many. For many, this allowed all women to feel nourished in her performance.

Audience member Lisa Scott said what she liked best about the performance was "the familiarity part of it... It bridged age groups and was able to intertwine anecdotes."

Allowing all issues to be present in her performance, McNeal provided the audience with the message to always be happy with who you are. Then, and only then, would you be able to "fly."

Many people of all cultural backgrounds enjoyed the performance. Patricia Gordes, an audience member, said, "Part of me as an educator loved it... but it gave me personal inspiration to survive and struggle."

For black American women, the words and messages that McNeal conveyed through her performance added inspiration and the feeling that "we can do anything."

McNeal ended by saying, "Women have lots of power. Everyone who comes into the world came from the womb of a woman."

Chip on a shoulder: tales from a burdened activist

Humphrey brown III

Last Wednesday, author/reporter Nathan McCall was at the Fine Arts Center giving a talk on his best-selling autobiography, "Makes Me Wanna Holler," and the issues the book raises.

I was on hand to cover the speech for the paper, and something McCall said really made me think. Well, many things that he said made me think, but I was particularly intrigued by the question he said he encountered often while touring the United States promoting his book.

He said people would come up to him and ask him a question that went something like this: "Due to the amount of racial content you have in your book, can it be said that you are obsessed with race?"

McCall said this question was asked way more than needed and how surprised he was every time he heard it., McCall's response to the question was, "Yeah, I'm obsessed with race, and I'm obsessed with race because America is obsessed with race," he said.

And as I'm sitting in the front row, taking in all that he's saying, I begin to think of how obsessed America really is with the issue of race and how it's absolutely ridiculous for anyone to say that the days of racism and big time discrimination are behind us.

I started thinking back on all the times people had asked me that very same question and how awkwardly I looked at them for asking it. I never quite understood how anyone could ask such a question. In my experience, the only ones who have ever asked were white people or blacks who have been sheltered most of their lives to a certain way of living and are trying to ignore reality, which is pretty impossible for even the lightest brother or sister.

Anyone who says that racism is not alive and well in America today is fooling themselves and living in an alternate reality.

There has been many occasions when white people will come up to me and say, "What are you complaining about?" With whites, I can halfway understand. They don't undergo or ever have to deal with the kinds of discrimination and prejudices that we have to endure throughout our lives. As a result, it's very easy for them to not notice the racism that goes on around them, but even that is a weak excuse.

What kills me is when I get a brother or sister who tells me I need to quit complaining and move on.

Move on? I wish I could.

It's not as if those of us who are fighting for equality are fighting because we have nothing better to do with our time. Or that fighting against ignorance is easy, or even fun.

The majority of my time, and that of people like me, is spent trying to improve the way things are among our people. This means trying to educate those who don't know or don't have the means to find out. This means talking to people, dropping a little knowledge every now and then. The last thing I need is to see someone roll their eyes or pretend to not hear what I'm saying, when we're all in the same boat. Getting strange stares and being known as the "pro- black one" are things that should never happen.

If I have some knowledge to drop, it's gonna get dropped. In a time where black men and women are only expected to pay attention to hip hop, blunts and basketballs, what can be more beneficial than hooking one another up with useful information and expanding minds?

What good is fighting for my people if my people don't want to hear the truth? I'm not talking about the brothers and sisters who have been down from jump and are constantly in the fight, I'm talking to the misguided souls who try to ignore what's right in front of their faces, for reasons I know not.

It's time to stop dodging reality and face the truth. If you're not a part of the solution, you're a part of the problem. Dig?

Web searchers make browsing 'net easy

People have asked me how I find all the web pages that I write about in Thursday's issue of the paper. It is actually rather easy — I use search engines.

Search engines are large databases of web pages maintained by a company, organization or university. Every search engine has a query line where a user types in a few keywords for the server to search the database. Although the interfaces are all very similar, every search engine is a little different.

Web Crawler at http://www.webcrawler.com

WebCrawler touts itself as the fastest search engine on the web, and I believe it. The interface is quite basic with a simple query line, and few other options.

However, the lack of options leads to very unstructured results. WebCrawler simply spews back a list of hundreds and even thousands of sites that poses the keywords.

If you are conducting a rather quick and general search, then use WebCrawler. B

Yahoo at http://www.yahoo.com

If you are looking for a more refined search, then there are other engines that might be more useful. Yahoo, a popular search engine, is a prime example.

Yahoo breaks down areas of interest into different categories such as computers, arts and living, society and business to name a few. Each main category includes subcategories.

Take arts for example. Arts encompasses everything a person would expect to read about in the corresponding section of the newspaper, so a user can refine a search to pages about movies that include the keywords.

Although Yahoo's method takes longer, the results are often more useful than those of WebCrawler. B+

Lycos at http://www.lycos.com

The third engine, and possibly the best engine on the Web, is Lycos. Lycos operates a lot like Yahoo, but the results are even better because it includes summaries of the pages. The summaries are basically the first two lines of text from the page. The results from Lycos are even more useful than those of Yahoo, and 10 times better than those of WebCrawler.

Lycos claims to have the most comprehensive database on the Web, and I believe it. I have found that whenever I am unable to find something on Yahoo, I still find a handful of useful sites on Lycos. A

Alta Vista at http://altavista.digital.com

The final engine I book marked is Alta Vista. Supposedly it is one of the faster engines available.

What I liked about Alta Vista is the ability to choose between searching the Web or newsgroups. In addition to choosing what to search, users can also configure Alta Vista to provide results in different manners.

The standard search results are displayed in a simple list of links like WebCrawler, but users can set it to provide a summary of the page from the first paragraph like Lycos.

The only draw back to this engine is the lack of the ability to refine the search like Yahoo and Lycos. B

There are other search engines available on the Web, but these are the ones I found most useful. If you are using Netscape Navigator, you can easily find the other search engines by clicking on the Net Search icon on the tool bar. Also, it is not uncommon for some engines to provide links to the others.

Miller's latest mixes time travel, romance

By Tara MK Connelly

LAURA LAEL MILLER
Pirates
Pocket Books

The buzz words in romance novels are time travel. Ever since Diana Garberdon became famous for her Dragonfly trilogy (the tale of a 20th century woman who travels back to 16th century Scotland and finds her true love) authors have been trying to tap into that bestselling and mystical combination.

The last time Laura Lael Miller hit the bestseller's list was with her vampire/romance trilogy (Time Without End, Forever And the Night and For All Eternity), which also had elements of time travels interdispersed with the super- natural. A competent and more interesting romance writer, Miller tries to follow suit with Pirates, but ends up walking the plank.

Meet Phoebe Turlow, a young woman in the 20th century who loses her job, her husband and the dog she rescued from the gutter. Strapped for cash and morale she opens some junk mail that beckons her to Paradise Island. For the low, low cost of nothing, Phoebe can tour the island and possibly invest in the condominiums that are being built there. Hoping that this will jolt her out of her melancholy mood, she jumps on a jet and takes off for paradise.

During a mandatory costume party, Phoebe finds herself in the basement of the hotel and whisked back to the 18th century and into the arms of Duncan Rourke. His Paradise Island is a true tropical get away and haven for the supporters of the Revolutionary Army. Duncan, part pirate and part patriot, falls in love with Phoebe (of course). The cast of characters are rounded off by Old Woman, a prophetic wise woman who knew Phoebe was coming to the island; Simone, Rourke's discarded mistress; Alex, Rourke's childhood friend; and Rourke's family, Tories who cannot understand why he is fighting for the Colonies' freedom.

In a scant 307 pages, Miller has Phoebe and Duncan shuttled across the Caribbean, time and space with little thought for detail and reality. It is amazing how fast the two take to each other, and even more amazing how Duncan and close companions blindly accept Phoebe's mixture of modern terminology and colloquialisms with a mere nod and little question (blame it on a fever, it works every time).

Whenever Phoebe starts rattling off in '90s-speak, Duncan's only reaction is mild curiosity. However this can be attributed with his love of the English language, and language itself, that Miller mentions in the beginning, perhaps to make Duncan more interesting, or perhaps just to let herself off the hook.

Two to three months pass within two to three sentences as if Miller would like to go into further detail, but at the last minute stops, leaving the reader thirsting for the details that make a real period piece tick. In

Lifetime punks up Easter

By Adam Dlugacz

LIFETIME
Pearl Street
April 7

Easter Sunday has never been a great day for shows, especially when the weather is dreadful. This year it was no different as one of hardcore's best bands, Lifetime, performed in from of one of the lamest crowds ever. Despite the band's blend of emo and straight up punk, which has led them to be one of hardcore's fastest rising bands, the kids acted like they were at a funeral.

Many punk fans have no problem complaining about lack of shows but when a great band such as Lifetime performs and no one comes something is wrong. To make matters worse, those few who showed up considered bopping their heads a form of dancing. In fact there have been Bar Mitzvahs featuring more energetic dancing than last nights show.

Regardless, Lifetime still plowed through their set. The fact that it was the last show of the tour may have helped contribute to the fact that it wasn't quite up to par with their past performances. Opening up with "The Gym (is neutral territory)" and playing most of the songs off their latest album, Hello Bastards, the band was very tight. "Knives, Bats, New Tats" and "Rodeo Clown," also off Hello Bastards, were two of the set's highlights.

Lifetime even played songs off the Tinnitus EP — not that the crowd noticed. "Star 69" and "Ferret" were two exclamation points in the set as they showed off Lifetime's angrier more aggressive side. However Lifetime ignored material off both their first album and seven inch single — it would have been nice to hear some of those classics. Since they only played recent songs it was a short set, although it may have been feared that the crowd might slip into a coma.

Walleye, who share Lifetime's label Jade Tree, opened up. Playing pretty solid emo, their set was also sub-par to both their album and past shows. It would have been nice if their lead singer faced the crowd every now and again. Cast Iron Hike, from Worcester, followed and their blend of Quicksand mixed with generic metal may have been what led to the crowd's apathy.

Dodgers down Braves in yesterday's NL action

By Ken Peters
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — The noisy, sellout crowd at Dodger Stadium was treated to a sunny afternoon with the temperature in the high 70s, and a beautiful pitching duel.

Hideo Nomo, the 1995 NL rookie of the year, pitched a three-hitter Monday in the Dodgers' home opener as they beat Tom Glavine and the Atlanta Braves 1-0.

"This was about as well-pitched on both sides as any game I've been involved in," Dodger first baseman Eric Karros said. "Nomo threw a great game, Glavine threw a great game."

Nomo pitched the first shutout of the 1996 season, allowing only David Justice's leadoff single in the second inning. Jeff Blauser's two-out double in the eighth and Fred McGriff's leadoff single in the ninth.

"I felt great," Nomo said through an interpreter. "We got a 1-0 lead in the early innings and I wanted to keep it that way." Glavine allowed five hits, all singles, struck out nine and walked two before being lifted for a pinch-hitter in the eighth. Los Angeles manager Tom Lasorda said Nomo's outing was particularly important, considering the circumstances. The Dodgers had just returned from a disappointing road trip, during which they went 2-5, including losing three of four in mostly freezing weather in Chicago.

"This was against a pretty good hitting club," Lasorda said of Nomo's performance against the Braves, who had averaged more than seven runs in their first six games this season.

"And it was a game we really needed desperately. Combine those two things and it was particularly great pitching."

Glavine, who gave up three singles in the third, including Raul Mondesi's run-scoring hit, said: "I don't think he outpitched me, but he got the results he wanted and that's what counts. Ultimately I'm not facing Hideo Nomo. I've got to get their hitters out and hope it's good enough."

Nomo (1-1) struck out six, walked five and did not allow a runner past second base until the ninth in a game played before a crowd of 53,180. Pinch-runner Jerome Walton made it to third on Ryan Klesko's one-out grounder, then Nomo retired Javy Lopez on a fly ball to end it.

Mondesi drove in the only run with a third-inning single, one of just five hits off Glavine (1-1) in his seven innings. Mike Piazza had three singles for the Dodgers. Brett Butler singled with one out in the third, went to second on Piazza's single, then beat Justice's throw home on Mondesi's single into shallow right field.

Nomo, who was 13-6 last season with three shutouts, was coming off a rocky 1996 debut. He gave up seven hits and four runs in four innings in a 5-2 loss at Houston last Wednesday.

"I was unable to pitch the way I wanted to in the last game," Nomo said. "Today I was."

After Blauser's double down the left field line in the eighth, Nomo struck out Chipper Jones to end that threat.

"He's still as tough as I remember him to be," Blauser said of Nomo. "We had our opportunities, but somehow he got out of it." The Braves posted a mild threat in the third inning, when Marquis Grissom walked with one out and stole second. Piazza's throw on the steal sailed into center field, and Grissom tried to go to third, but Butler made a perfect throw and Mike Blowers tagged out Grissom.

In the fourth, Nomo walked McGriff with one out and, after getting Justice on a foul pop, walked Klesko. But Nomo then struck out Lopez to end the threat.

Cubs 9, Rockies 6

DENVER — With a bright sun and a temperature of 70 degrees, it was, as Chicago's Mark Grace noted, "a perfect day to play baseball."

Grace was plenty perfect himself. He went 4-for-4, including three doubles, and drove in three runs — and still had to yield the spotlight to teammate Scott Servais, who drove in a career-high five runs with a home run and double.

The Cubs blew a 6-0 lead but Servais' three-run homer in the seventh gave them a 9-6 win yesterday and spoiled the Colorado Rockies' home opener.

"Scotty Servais had an awesome game," Grace said. "He drove in some huge runs for us, and the bullpen made it stand up." The Cubs, winning their 10th straight road opener, built a 6-0 lead off Kevin Ritz (1-1) after two innings, then finished off Ritz in the seventh.

With one out, Grace doubled for his third hit of the day. One out later, Luis Gonzalez was intentionally walked and Servais homered to left.

Rockies manager Don Baylor defended the decision to walk Gonzalez, who was hitting .330 for his career against Colorado with five homers and 23 RBIs. Servais, meanwhile, had a career average of .210 against Colorado.

"Gonzalez has killed us too many times," Baylor said. "I'll take my chances with Servais. I thought we could get Servais out with a breaking ball. There's no second-guessing. The pitch was just in the wrong spot."

Ritz said his curveball to Servais was one of several bad pitches he made early in the game and again in the seventh. "I just left it up and out over the plate," he said.

Reliever Terry Adams (1-0) gave the Cubs four solid innings, striking out his last four batters. His four innings and six strikeouts both were career highs. Doug Jones pitched the ninth for his first save.

Both Grace and Servais are on early-season tears for the Cubs, who are hitting .304 as a team. Grace is batting .500 (15-for-30), and Servais is batting .455 (10-for-22).

"I'm off to a decent start," Servais said. "I was just trying to have a quality at-bat and hit the ball hard and maybe drive in a run. I got lucky and came out a bit better than that."

Grace's three RBIs helped fuel the Cubs' early spurt.

Chicago scored four runs in the first. Grace had an RBI single, Servais a two-run double and Jose Hernandez a run-scoring single. In the second, Grace lined a two-run double into the gap in right-center.

Colorado got to Kevin Foster for four runs in the third. Jeff Reed led off with a 417-foot homer, just one pitch after being accidentally hit in the helmet by catcher Servais' return toss to the pitcher. After a walk, Walt Weiss homered, Ellis Burks doubled and Dante Bichette hit an RBI triple off the center-field wall. In the fourth, the Rockies made it 6-5 on Ritz' RBI infield hit. Colorado tied it in the fifth on Larry Walker's RBI grounder. Ritz escaped trouble in the sixth after Servais and Hernandez both singled with no outs. Two batters were retired on bunt attempts, and Burks made a running catch at the warning track off Brian McRae for the third out.

Padres 9, Marlins 2

SAN DIEGO — Ken Caminiti, Tony Gwynn and Wally Joyner kept up their torrid hitting and the San Diego Padres rallied to run their winning streak to five with a 9-2 win over the Florida Marlins in their home opener yesterday.

The Padres, unbeaten since their first game, are on their longest winning streak since taking six straight from May 27-June 1, 1994.

Once the Padres got to Chris Hammond (0-1), they didn't let up. Caminiti tied the game at 2 with an RBI double in the fifth inning, and two more runs scored when former Padres third baseman Gary Sheffield dropped Joyner's fly ball on the right-field warning track for a two-base error.

With two outs in the sixth, the Padres got consecutive RBI singles from Steve Finley, Gwynn, Caminiti and Joyner, the first off Hammond and the last three off reliever Yorkis Perez to make it 8-2.

Caminiti, who has hit in all six games, went 3-for-5 with two RBIs. He struck out with the bases loaded to end the seventh. Gwynn, the six-time NL batting champion who has hit in all but one game, went 2-for-4 with two RBIs, including one on a bases-loaded walk off Matt Mantei in the seventh. Joyner was 2-for-5 with one RBI, giving him two hits in each of his first five games.

Joey Hamilton (2-0) found his command after a shaky start and matched his career-high with eight strikeouts in seven innings. He allowed just five hits, including Devon White's leadoff homer that hushed the sellout crowd of 44,470. Hamilton also walked four, all in the first three innings.

White's homer was his first of the season and the third leadoff in the Marlins' four-year history. The Marlins made it 2-0 on Charles Johnson's RBI single in the fourth inning.

Gwynn doubled in the fourth and scored San Diego's first run on Andujar Cedeno's two-out, bases-loaded single as third baseman Terry Pendleton and shortstop Alex Arias collided going for the ball.

Escorted by Gwynn, San Diego native Ted Williams threw out the ceremonial first pitch. The 77-year-old Hall of Famer was driven into the stadium in a 1936 Packard Convertible to commemorate the year he signed with the Pacific Coast League Padres.

The happy ending is also pretty weak, with the reader finding out the future of the two star crossed lovers in a flimsy excuse for an epilogue. More time and more patience is needed not only for the writer, but anyone who reads this book. C program this year and for years to come.

"She's a great person, and she's had a great impact on the team," said first baseman Kim Gutridge, last year's A-10 Rookie of the Year.

Fellow freshman, and roommate, Ashlie Hayes said, "It's wonderful that she's doing so well, she's really growing as a pitcher."

Henderson is growing indeed. In her nine-game winning streak she has lowered her ERA from a decent 3.65 to a stellar 1.51, allowing less than one base runner per inning (32 hits, 23 walks in 56 IP) after allowing 40 opposing runners to reach base in her first 25 innings.

In her last seven innings of work, two mercy-rule shutouts, Henderson has given up just four hits while striking out seven and walking one.

It's scary to think that Henderson is only a freshman, and in Sortino's words, "we've only scratched the surface in terms of her development."

The Minutewomen are set to host their first home tilt of the spring as the Hartford Hawks invade Totman Field for a double header today starting at 3 p.m.

Henderson and Liz Wagner look to continue their hot pitching using the Virginia Tech twin routs as a stepping stone. In the two contests against the Lady Hokies, Henderson, Wagner and junior reliever Dani Ortega combined to allow a mere six hits and one run in 10 collective innings.

The offense, obviously, was huge in Blacksburg, Va., but what really shone through was the errorless defense played by the Minutewomen. Finally, everything has come together.

stopped four, while they each let up four goals.

The Minutewomen hope to keep their winning streak alive on Wednesday when they host Dartmouth College at Totman Field at 4:00 p.m.

Wednesday's battle against the Big Green is the last home game for the Minutewomen before they leave Amherst to play a four game road trip.

UMass kicks off the road trip with Rutgers and Hofstra before moving on to Philadelphia to face Atlantic 10 opponent St. Joseph's and Big East antagonist, Villanova.

■ Neely

video, to landing a cameo in the hit movie Dumb and Dumber, Neely was everywhere.

He puts his stardom to good use as well. He founded the Cam Neely Foundation that helps cancer-related charities in memory of his parents, both of whom died of cancer. Plans are in progress to build the Cam Neely House, where patients of the New England Medical Center and their families can stay and receive support while they undergo treatment.

Neely often speaks for and supports many local charities, and frequently visits Boston Children's Hospital to cheer up the patients.

One thing he wanted to give the city was a championship. He almost got there. He was a key part of two trips to the Stanley Cup finals.

Following the 1990-91 season, Neely almost brought the Bruins there again, as he helped lead them to the Wales Conference Championship. The Bruins lost to the Penguins, but more importantly, saw what was the beginning of Neely's undoing.

Cheap-shot specialist Ulf Samuelsson leg-checked Neely, injuring his knee to the degree that he would play just 22 games in the next two seasons.

Many skeptics said his career was over, that Neely's fragile knee would never withstand the rigors of the NHL again.

Neely was not among those nay-sayers.

He worked, sometimes 12 hours a day, to keep his beloved hockey career alive.

He succeeded. After a grueling struggle that included several different types of rehab, Neely rejoined the B's for the 1993-94 season when, despite playing only 49 games, he reached the 50-goal milestone.

In only 42 games of last year's strike-shortened season Neely managed to score 27 goals.

This year, after a solid start, Neely's hip gave out. He faces considerable rehab and eventual hip replacement surgery. Even if he does make a return, despite being only 30-years-old, his hockey days are numbered.

Now with the Bruins in the midst of one of their best stretches of the season, Neely is forced to the sideline.

He can't even watch. He sits in the locker room and flips through the channels of the TV, keeping track of how his teammates are doing. He is still unable to watch as the pain of not playing perhaps exceeds even the pain in his legs.

The question will be asked, should Neely's No. 8 be raised to the FleetCenter rafters? While his career numbers aren't quite there, does being the quintessential Bruin to go along with pretty good numbers for a short career give him enough? Probably not. That honor is usually based on numbers, which will leave Neely with Terry O'Reilly and Rick Middleton among the Bruins that just missed.

I never saw Bobby Orr play. I was born four years after his famous goal. My father has told me stories about the things he did and what he did for the game. What always stuck out in my mind is that I was somehow cheated that his career, that might have spanned into my lifetime, was cut short by an injury.

While Neely's playing style can hardly be compared with that of Orr, there are similarities about their careers.

Both players were immensely popular in Boston, to the point of being symbols of the city.

But the thing that most links the duo in the memories of Bostonians and hockey fans everywhere will be that their careers didn't last long enough.

I can't help but wonder how good Neely could have been had he dodged the injury plague.

■ men's track

In the track events, O'Brien felt that his team's depth would be the deciding factor in the outcome of the meet, but it turned out to not be all that necessary.

"I knew we were deeper than they were, but they didn't even have some of the backup depth that I thought they would have," said O'Brien. "We were just a little deeper than they were, beyond my expectations."

Most impressive among the many wins that the Minutemen claimed in the track portion of the meet was freshman Tom Toye's 200 meter victory. Toye qualified for the IC4A and New England meets, as well as posting the third all-time best time in UMass history with a time of 21.6 seconds. Another IC4A and New England qualifier was the 4 X 100 meter relay team, that included Toye and sophomore Scott Price, who won with a time of 42.5 seconds.

Similar to last weekend's dominant performance, the Minutemen once again used an all-out team effort to take the victory.

"I don't think any one individual dominated," O'Brien said. "I'd say the entire team chipped in, not necessarily first place finishes, but we had a lot of seconds, thirds and fourths.

Sonics dismantle NY, Kemp leads Seattle

By Chris Sheridan
Associated Press

NEW YORK — The Seattle SuperSonics pulled off two rare feats Monday, reaching 60 victories and finishing off a 6,000-mile, one-day trip.

The Sonics beat the New York Knicks 108-98 in a game postponed three months ago by a blizzard that dumped two feet of snow across the Eastern seaboard. It was played early in the afternoon because the New York Rangers played a hockey game at home yesterday night. Seattle had to fly across the continent Sunday, and it started snowing in Manhattan after they arrived. After the game, they trudged back to the airport for the trip back home.

But they didn't let the jet lag or the Knicks' physical play stop them from becoming the second NBA team to reach 60 victories this season. The franchise record is 63 victories in 1993-94. Shawn Kemp, who lost his temper after Charles Oakley bloodied his nose with an elbow in the third quarter, led Seattle with 25 points and 13 rebounds. Detlef Schrempf had 24 points, eight rebounds and six assists and Hersey Hawkins added 20 points.

"For us, this was basically an 8:30 a.m. game. This was not a happy place this morning. This was supposed to be our first three-day weekend in the last two months of the season," Schrempf said. "We were ready to pay the fine and just go home. But once we got on the floor, we came alive. We always do."

"So much has been made about the Bulls and 70 victories. We just kind of sit back and stay out of the limelight. We play in the West and aren't on TV as much, but we're proud of what we accomplished," Sam Perkins said. The Sonics out-rebounded New York 49-33 and forced turnovers on four consecutive Knicks possessions in the fourth quarter as they put the game away with an 11-0 run.

Several thousand seats were empty when the game began, and Madison Square Garden was strangely quiet for the first two quarters. The mood changed dramatically in the third quarter, however, as Kemp knocked over two chairs after getting elbowed by Oakley, Gary Payton got in the face of several Knicks and Schrempf threatened to settle his differences with Patrick Ewing after the game.

Seattle led by as many as 14 and as few as four in the quarter and continued to play with emotion in the fourth period.

"When we get an aggressive and tough mentality, that's when we play best. When it got physical like that, I knew we were going to fight the rest of the way," coach George Karl said.

The Knicks pulled within four points four minutes into the fourth quarter when Anthony Mason hit a jump hook in the lane to make the score 90-86, but that was New York's last field goal until 2:11 remained.

Seattle got a driving one-hander from Perkins and a driving basket from Vincent Askew for an eight point lead with 7:17 left. A foul shot by Ewing pulled to New York within seven, but Seattle finished it off as Payton had a 3-pointer and a jumper. Perkins scored on another drive, Hawkins made a layup and Kemp finished it with a double-pump jam for the 11-0 run.

Seattle, with the best record in the Western Conference, won for the 10th time in 11 games. New York had its two-game winning streak snapped.

"When a team puts that kind of pressure on you, you have to pressure them back. As a team, we cannot accept mediocrity, but that's what this team is doing," John Starks said.

Derek Harper led the Knicks with 22 points and Mason had 19. Ewing had was just 5-of-21 from the field and scored just 14. The Sonics had 33 fast-break points to the Knicks' 11 and held New York to just two field goals in the first 9 1/2 minutes of the fourth quarter.

"It was their quickness level that hurt us," Knicks coach Jeff Van Gundy said. "The contested every pass and every dribble. They're a very intense team and obviously, they disrupted us very much."

"Frankly, over the past four games we've reverted back to a lot of bad habits and our attitude toward the preparation that goes into a game has taken a step back. When our attitude gets better, our game will get better," Van Gundy said.

St. John's coach Mahoney replaced by Fraschilla

By Hal Bock
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Two days before the signing date for recruits, St. John's turned over its head basketball coaching job to Fran Fraschilla, who brings an impressive resume and realistic point of view to the assignment.

"There are still some quality players out there, but we're in the eighth and ninth innings," Fraschilla said yesterday after being introduced by athletic director Ed Manetta. "There are two solid freshmen coming in. We have what we have."

That would include center Zendon Hamilton and forward Felipe Lopez, two of the top recruits in the country, whose arrival at St. John's two years ago seemed to work in reverse for the program and coach Brian Mahoney.

Manetta dismissed Mahoney following a dismal 11-17 record, the school's worst in 33 years. The AD said he talked to six coaches and settled on Fraschilla, who had a 17-12 record at Manhattan and was 85-35 in four years there.

"I had a short list," Manetta said. "Our top choice sits with us today. I wanted an individual who communicates well and who has a good feeling for student-athletes. He had the attributes I was looking for."

Other coaches reportedly on Manetta's list included Pat Kennedy of Florida State, Jim Molinari of Bradley, Rick Majerus of Utah and Butch Beard of the New Jersey Nets. There also was a brief overture made to Massachusetts coach John Calipari.

Fraschilla, an assistant coach at Providence, Ohio State, Ohio University and Rhode Island before coming to Manhattan in 1992, said he was thrilled to become the 15th head coach in St. John's history.

"To be here as a New Yorker, a kid from Brooklyn, is really a great thrill," he said. "I grew up watching St. John's. This is an opportunity I'm excited and proud about. I am conscious about what St. John's means, the tradition it represents, the opportunity and obligation to uphold the tradition of St. John's, on and off the court.

"I want my team to play hard and play together. What I want to do is create a situation where there is a blue collar mentality, they play hard together, care for each other and know they have a coach who cares for them.

"The key is to make sure you have good players who play hard." Asked if the current Red Storm roster fills that description, Fraschilla said, "We'll find out."

St. John's has signed two players, 5-foot-10 guard Collin Charles from Toronto, and 6-5 guard Lavor Postell from Albany, Ga. Fraschilla has one scholarship available.

Fraschilla's Manhattan teams were predicated around a half-court defense, a style he said he'd bring to St. John's. "Defense creates good offense," he said. "In this day and age, kids like to go up and down. But everything starts at the defensive end."

Fraschilla came to Manhattan in 1992 and took the team to a 23-7 season, the Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference title and a bid to the NCAA tournament, the first for the Jaspers since 1958.

After a 19-11 record and NIT bid in his second season, he led the Jaspers to a 26-5 record and another NCAA invitation, this time as an at-large team, in 1994-95.

When the Jaspers knocked off Oklahoma in the first round of the tournament, Fraschilla became a hot coaching property, pursued vigorously by a number of programs, most notably Tulsa.

Why did he move now and not then?

"Last year I felt it wasn't time to leave or to go to Tulsa, as nice as it is out there," he said. "You wind up going where you least expect."

`Bandits' threaten runner safety in 100th Marathon

By Glen Johnson
Associated Press

BOSTON — "Al" has run the Boston Marathon before, and nothing is going to keep him from running again this year, the 100th anniversary of the famous road race.

"This is a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity," said the North Shore resident, who did not want his real name used.

There's only one hitch with Al's plan: He's not supposed to be there. Like an unknown number of people who will show up, he doesn't have an official number.

Instead, Al is preparing to run unofficially, as a "bandit." While that has been tolerated in the past, this year it's taboo. With a field of 38,500 already expected, organizers say gate-crashers threaten the safety and efficiency of the race for the official entrants.

Roads in Hopkinton, where the marathon begins, already will be so overloaded with more than triple the number of usual runners that it will take at least 45 minutes for everyone to cross the starting line.

Organizers also expect the 26-mile, 385-yard course to take so much out of an expanded number of first-time runners that they have greatly enlarged the medical areas at the finish line.

"Because they're not officially entered, I don't know who's going to arrive when," said race starter Dave McGillivray. "The rest of it is a well thought-out event for 38,000 people."

The 100th marathon has proved to be a lure for both veteran runners and novices. The course is considered one of the most picturesque in marathoning, and past participants invariably talk about the huge and adoring crowd that lines the hilly way on race day.

The Boston Athletic Association, which organizes the race, recognized the popularity of this year's event, so it decided to accommodate as many extra runners as it could. Normally about 9,000 qualifiers and 3,000 bandits compete.

First, the BAA lengthened the period for qualifying for the race from one year to 15 months.

Then it held three lotteries for official numbers, recognizing that the qualifying times are difficult for all but serious runners. Men between the ages of 18 and 34, for example, have to run a marathon in less than 3:10 to qualify. Lottery participants merely had to pay a $50 entry fee.

The BAA, however, ran into trouble with the lottery system after an unexpectedly large number of people ran qualifying times.

That meant organizers could raffle off only 5,000 slots, if they wanted to keep the field to a calculated maximum of 40,000 — the most they feel they can safely start.

Those circumstances left Al, who was unable to again run a qualifying time, and other would-be racers, feeling left out. And that's prompted some to consider running unofficially.

Some expected bandits are out-of-towners who made airline and hotel reservations for the weekend of the race before they were notified that they failed in the lotteries.

Others figure that, since they began their training before the lotteries were over, they might as well forge ahead and run. One local writer and runner, Don Allison, recently suggested an alternative for both groups.

"Why not come to town anyway?" he asked in an article being distributed by the BAA. "The entire marathon week will be a festive celebration of running. Participating in the ancillary events can be a lot of fun, too."

While the BAA has no plans to throw bandits out of this year's race, it has been trying to discourage them.

"We're not so naive as to think that no one is going to show up," said race director Guy Morse III. "I think it's going to be very limiting just in terms of traffic or geographic issues." The BAA is restricting access to Hopkinton and the starting line. Roads to the area will be shut down at 6:30 a.m. on race day, April 15, and runners will be herded into corrals limited to those with official numbers.

It also is encouraging official entrants to discourage bandits from running.

One, David Wright of East Longmeadow, wrote a letter that was published in a special marathon edition of "Runner's World." "Like most of the people who will line up in Hopkinton on April 15, I went through the grueling process of qualifying," he wrote. "If you do not have an official number for the '96 Boston Marathon, please let this day be ours."

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE

ARIES (March 21 – April 19) — The emphasis now is on providing for your financial future. Go over recent savings and checking account statements; you could find an error. A new addition to the family will increase your insurance needs.

TAURUS (April 20 – May 20) — An unusual career or financial opportunity could arise this week. You need to consult family members before making a long-range decision. Distant affairs could be lucrative.

GEMINI (May 21 – June 20) — Your financial situation is changed by a stroke of good luck. Your co-workers' pessimism fails to dampen your spirits. A phone call alerts you to a family crisis.

CANCER (June 21 – July 22) — A joint effort to please higher-ups could fall short of the mark today. Refrain from issuing ultimatums. Solo projects enjoy favorable influences.

LEO (July 23 – Aug. 22) — Any disagreements are apt to center on the right way to disperse funds. A compromise is the best solution. Questions of personal prestige assume new importance.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 – Sept. 22) — A good day to ask for favors and seek loans. Paying careful attention to detail will prevent costly mistakes. Share a secret with someone in a position to help you.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 – Oct. 22) — Others will let go of the past if you do. A member of the opposite sex could be waiting for you to take the initiative. Your social life accelerates.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 – Nov. 21) — Allow things to settle down before you take a stand on a divisive issue. Modify your plans if you fear that you are being overly confident. A second job is the answer to a cash shortage.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 – Dec. 21) — Put a big job aside while you tackle the little ones that have been piling up. A relative may give you the cold shoulder. Withhold judgement until you have all the facts.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 – Jan. 19) — Romance looks highly promising. Nothing should stop you from carrying out your plans today. Use the fax and phone to save valuable time. You need to be prompt about paying bills and answering letters.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 – Feb. 18) — Keep a low profile and avoid trying to force your views on others. Home is a wonderful place to regroup when you fell stressed. Be honest with yourself. Change can be exhausting. Go slow.

PISCES (Feb. 19 – March 20) — The emphasis this month is on replacing bad habits with good ones. It may be necessary to travel a long distance today. Before starting out, check to be sure you have everything you need.

Throwers lead UM in tri-meet

By Jay Warner
Collegian Staff

In what coach Ken O'Brien thought was going to be a tough meet, the Massachusetts men's track and field squad cruised to a tri-meet victory against the Boston College Eagles and Hartford Hawks last Saturday. The Minutemen outscored the Eagles and Hawks 121-62-7, respectively.

"I was surprised at the margin of victory," said O'Brien. "I always admit going into a meet with BC that it is going to be a tough meet. The past has convinced me of that."

The Minutemen quickly fell behind after the first event due to NCAA qualifying performances from BC's dynamic throwing duo, the McGehearty brothers. Refusing to allow BC to dominate the field events, senior Marc Lefebvre and freshman Ian Stevens posted a 1-2 finish in the shot providing the spark the Minutemen needed to finish the day strong.

"We caught a nice break in the throwing events when Lefebvre and Stevens went 1-2 in the shot. Boston College opened the meet 1-2 in the hammer with the McGehearty brothers, and they were quite capable of doing the same thing in the shot," O'Brien said. "That was a big breakthrough for us because I felt the throwing events were the events that were really going to hurt us in.

"Before the meet we talked about the pressure that was on those in the throwing events because Boston College had the potential to create a deficit that would be too tough to overcome. Their 1-2 finish was big. It set the tone for the day."

In addition to his victory in the shot, Lefebvre earned the blue ribbon in the discus with a throw of 150', qualifying him for New England's as well as placing him 10th on UMass' all-time list. Sophomore Ryan Carrara also qualified for New England's with an outstanding performance in the steeplechase with a time of 9:38.5. The steeplechase was one of only two events, the long jump being the other, in which Massachusetts swept.

Other field events that saw strong Minutemen finishes were in the triple jump, pole vault, high jump, and javelin. Freshmen Andre Roche and Alberto Vasquez placed first in each the triple jump and pole vault with distances of 13-6¢ and 4-05 meters, respectively. In the javelin, senior Richard Dupuis led the UMass attack that claimed the top three positions with a throw of 53.65 meters. Another youngster, freshman Ryan Fortune won the high jump with a jump of 6'-1 1/4".

Women win big vs. BC, Hartford

By Stephen Clements
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts women's track and field team is coming off a very impressive win this weekend by disposing of Boston College by a score of 98-70. Hartford finished a distant third with a total of five points.

"Hartford scored three more than they did last week" UMass coach Julie Lafreniere said. "They are a developing program that didn't score that many points last year.

"BC was supposed to be our toughest competitor during the outdoor season. They are strong in New England's, but aren't a very strong dual meet team."

BC is a team featuring a lot of good individual performers who will score high at the ECAC's, especially in the distance events, which they proved that this weekend.

In the 800 meter, Rebecca Donahue, an ECAC qualifier, finished third. BC had two All-Americans in this event, but Donahue held her own with a time of 2:12.

The Minutewomen's biggest surprise of the day was in the discus, where they took the first four places. Stephanie Townson took first place with a throw of 128 feet. Shana Mitchell took second with a throw of 127.10 feet followed by Heather Dolgar with a throw of 122.1 feet.

"This is the best we've done in the discus in the last couple of years." Lafreniere said.

Heather Brown won the javelin with a throw of 150.11 feet. Brown is the school record-holder in this event with a throw of 161.3 feet.

The 4x100 meter relay team of Nicole Roberts, Shalanda Irish, Emma Gardiner and Yves Amazan took first in the event, racing across the finish line with a clocking of 48.5 seconds, a time which qualified for the ECAC's.

The 4x400 meter relay team of Donahue, Angela Osei Mensah, Silifia Kenku, and Nicole Roberts took first place with a time of 3:58.15.

The biggest contributor on the afternoon was Roberts, who, after sitting out last week with a shoulder injury, won 3 events. In addition to running the anchor leg of the winning 4x400 squad, Roberts took first in the 200 meter with a time of 25.3 seconds and the 400 meter in 57.6.

Their biggest loss of the season is the loss of Anya Forrest, the team's top hurdler, who is out with an injury. She is not only an ECAC qualifier but also regularly scores a lot of valuable points.

The Minutewomen's next meet will be on Saturday, April 13 when they face Providence, Lowell and Holy Cross. The defending National Champions in cross country, Providence is a team that might give UMass a tough time this weekend.

"They have a lot of good distance runners, but not very good sprinters or hurdlers." Lafreniere said. "Lowell is a Division II team that is stronger than a lot of Division I teams. They are well-rounded but not strong enough."

Henderson a freshman pitching ace for UM softball

By Fred Hurlbrink, Jr.
Collegian Staff

Facing a pitcher who toes the rubber at over six feet tall with a blazing fastball would intimidate any major league batter.

Imagine being a college softball player going up against a pitcher whose nickname is Harry!

"Just before she releases the ball, the look on her face tells it all," associate head coach Mona Stevens said. "You can see the animal come out."

Freshman right-hander Danielle 'Harry' Henderson is taking the Atlantic-10 Conference and a slew of top-ranked, out-of-conference opponents by storm with her incredible power and meteoric development, as she has sprinted out to a 9-5 record.

"Now that she has become more familiar with [her surroundings], she has become more confident, and as a result her pitches are starting to become a lot better," Stevens said.

It took Henderson a while to get her bearings at the collegiate level as evidenced by her five-game losing streak to start the season, but since her last loss, a 4-3 defeat at the hands of Missouri at the NSCA Lead-Off Classic, Harry has reeled off nine consecutive wins.

In her last five victories, Henderson has not allowed a single run, registering a streak of 32-1/3 scoreless innings. Lynn Stockley holds the UMass record for consecutive scoreless innings with 45.

Danielle Henderson

Remaining pleasantly humble, Henderson said, "I just have to be sure that what I'm telling her is right."

Her imposing stature on the mound and intimidating fastball are two key components of the Henderson package that both coaches are impressed with and hope to further build upon to make her a more complete, better pitcher.

In creating this monster, Stevens and Sortino want to focus on situational pitching — a difficult concept for most young pitchers to grasp — in order to further enhance Henderson's talent and ease her transformation from a thrower to a pitcher.

"Once a pitcher starts trusting what they can do, the focus can shift outside, to the batter," Stevens said. "It's a process, but she's on her way."

"Fourteen games into her young career she understands what to do [in certain situations]," Sortino said. "Now, she's going in for the kill."

The coaches aren't the only ones excited about the prospects of Henderson's cannon arm and what that means to the success of the UMass softball staff, enjoys working with the youngster and acknowledges her willingness to learn and, in turn, become a better pitcher.

"It's fun. She listens to everything I say," Stevens said. "I just have to be sure that what I'm telling her is right."

Neely's career too short, surgery looms for star

Matt Vautour

It seems almost inevitable now. The career of the most colorful Boston Bruin of the decade appears to be nearing an end.

While Ray Bourque has been the top player and the heart of Boston hockey throughout his career, nobody has personified what it means to be a Bruin more than Cam Neely.

Bourque is a quiet leader, who shies from publicity away from the ice. Neely has embraced the city of Boston and what it means to be a sport celebrity in one of hockey's greatest strongholds.

After Neely toiled in anonymity in Vancouver, Harry Sinden was criticized for trading talented center Barry Pederson for "Cam Who?" and a draft choice (that turned out to be Glen Wesley).

The move proved to be another one of Harry's gems. While Pederson basically disappeared after the trade, Neely became the definition of power forward.

He scored regularly, posting back-to-back 50-goal campaigns, and could pass well for a power player. His trademark body-checking became the standard that all power forwards were set against. And much to many fans' delight, to go along with the rest of his skills, he could stand toe-to- toe with any of the league's goons and fight with the best of 'em.

Off the ice, Neely is a class act and a celebrity. He is a star in every sense of the word. From dating Glenn Close, to appearing in Extreme's "Hole Hearted"

Women's lax wins two, trounce Wildcats 11-8

By Luke Meredith
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team won their second straight contest last Friday with an 11-8 victory over the University of New Hampshire Wildcats in Durham, N.H.

Laura Korutz, the freshman attacker from Media, Penn., continued her torrid team-leading scoring pace with three goals and an assist as Jenn Herker, a sophomore midfielder from Kenneth Square, Penn., added three of her own to lead the Minutewomen over UNH. This win marked UMass' first road win of the year.

After losing three straight tough games to the likes of Harvard, Brown and Yale to start the season, the Minutewomen built on the strong effort shown last Tuesday in a 12-11 home win against Holy Cross and rebounded to go to 2-3 so far this spring.

The Minutewomen fell behind early on as UNH jumped to a 4-1 lead, with the only UMass goal coming courtesy of Korutz. This deficit was only temporary, though, as the Minutewomen stormed to four straight goals, two coming from Glen Mills, Penn., sophomore attacker Jen Bowen. Bowen's two goals put the Minutewomen back on top to send UMass into the intermission with a 5-4 lead.

The Wildcats came out of the half quickly and built themselves a 7-6 lead, but the Minutewomen would score the next three goals and wouldn't look back.

Herker led the Minutewomen in the second frame with two of her three goals, her sixth and seventh of the season. Junior Stephanie Walsh of West Roxbury, added her 65th career goal, as freshman Amy Malady of Huntington, N.Y. and Michelle Warrington of Woodlyn, Penn. also scored in the second half for UMass.

Two Minutewomen goalies combined for the win, with junior Trish DiBenedetto and freshman Melissa Borodinsky posting strong efforts. DiBenedetto stopped seven shots in the process of picking up her second win and Borodinsky

Bruins in, stars deal with injuries

Ted Kottler on the NHL

While you're saving up to order your St. Louis Blues playoff games on pay-per-view (if the Keenans don't make it, the GM will use the money to sign Gary Leeman for next season), here are one observer's musings on this turbulent close to the regular season and what it signifies for the upcoming post-season.

The Bruins, for all intents and purposes, are in. Of course, simply making it was not the goal, but it is the first checkpoint. And the Beantown black and gold hit it in full stride, going 10-1-1 in their last 12 road games, an amazing feat considering their ineptitude away from the FleetCenter for most of this season.

Good road records in the NHL are about as common as veteran coaches. That is to say, not many teams have them. At 18-16-6, the B's aren't exactly brilliant, but brace yourself: Only the Rangers are better (19-16-5) in the Eastern Conference. These two of the Unoriginal Six may well meet in the first round, which is too bad in a way since the Boston Garden is no more. We might have determined which garden is the most valuable to the home team.

Speaking of the Blueshirts, should they face the Flyers down the road, that series has to be pay-per-view as well, because it's going to be nothing but a non-stop series of boxing matches. Both teams were once coached by Keenan, so he can bask in some extra credit for sharing his Einsteinian idea with his former employers.

There is a Hall of Fame wing's worth of NHL superstars on the shelf, and the question now centers on which ones will be back for the playoffs. Cam Neely, sadly, will not, as his impressive career may be done (see accompanying story). The Blues stand to be first-round fodder again if Brett Hull does not return, he being the real key to St. Louis' hopes. Stat of the Week: The Keenans are 6-9-1 with Wayne Gretzky on board. Philadelphia has survived without Mikael Renberg, but it is useless without Eric Lindros (2-5-1 when he's scratched), who should be a repeat Hart Trophy winner if the voters can answer what MVP stands for.

And then there is Pavel Bure, Vancouver's electrifying sniper who hasn't played since Nov. 9 of last year. His injury is the most common of the serious type — a torn anterior cruciate ligament. Normal healing time is 10 months, but Canuck backers have hope. If he returns, he's going to be reunited with a much-improved team, due to the trades made by GM Pat Quinn for Jesse Belanger and Markus Naslund. Wouldn't it be something if Vancouver hooked up with St. Louis in the opening round, as it did last season, and "upset" the Blues again?

The talk of NBA circles has been the remarkable season for the Chicago Bulls, who at 66-8 need to win just four of their last eight to set a record for wins in a season. This shows you just how far ahead of the NHL that league remains, because the Detroit Red Wings need just one more victory to tie the record of 60 set by the Montreal Canadiens in 1976-77.

I bet the Red Wings wish they had another game in the United Center. No, not to face the Bulls in a made-for- (network) TV event — they'd like another crack at the Blackhawks. Chicago's mark against the Red Wings is something like Susan Lucci's in the Daytime Emmys. I consider last season's playoff tilt between the two to be the closest five game series I've ever seen, but you know the one about horseshoes and hand grenades. Whalers play-by- play announcer John Forslund actually suggested the Blackhawks are the only team who can handle the Red Wings in the playoffs. Well, he might be right, in which case you can pencil Detroit in for the Stanley Cup Finals right now.

There might be one tough decision that Detroit coach Scotty Bowman, the only one in the Western Conference with more than a few years' experience, has to make. Will he name Chris Osgood or Mike Vernon No. 1 goalie for the stretch drive? Since the rest of the team is so damn good, it might not really matter. Assuming it does, however, the call has to go out to Osgood. Vernon's had a very nice regular season, but Osgood could capture the Vezina Trophy. History should play a part in Bowman's decision as well. In 1994, before Vernon arrived, the rookie Osgood was left out to dry in a crushing first round upset by San Jose. Using the typical NHL logic that a goalie who's already won a Cup is the best kind to have, Detroit acquired Vernon and made him the man last season.

He blew it in the playoffs. Others were partly to blame for the Devils' sweep of the Red Wings in the finals, but Vernon didn't impress either. Meanwhile, Osgood had a great season, but hardly touched the ice in the playoffs. This season has been simi-

36 wounded in Israel by Shiite-fired rockets

KIRYAT SHEMONA, Israel (AP) — Shiite Muslim guerrillas fired a barrage of rockets at northern Israel on Tuesday, wounding 36 people. Israeli opposition leaders quickly seized on the attack as political ammunition a month before general elections.

The Iranian-backed Hezbollah group said the rocket attack was in retaliation for a land mine explosion that killed a Lebanese teenager Monday and wounded two boys, one of them seriously. Israeli forces responded with air raids and artillery and tank fire against 17 Shiite Muslim villages near the Israeli-held zone in southern Lebanon. No casualties were reported from the bombardment.

In Washington, State Department spokesman Glyn Davies blamed Hezbollah for instigating the latest fighting.

"We have repeatedly called for restraint, but Hezbollah is once again acting to inflame the situation," Davies said. "That's very negative."

Residents of the northern Israeli town of Kiryat Shemona, where most of the damage and injuries occurred, booed Police Minister Moshe Shahal and burned tires when he toured the town after the attacks.

Objects thrown from Residence Hall floor

By Daniel Sullivan
Collegian Staff

A barbell weight was dropped from an unknown upper floor of Washington Residence Hall of the University of Massachusetts last night, landing on the roof of a parked truck. No one was injured from the incident.

"There has been a lot of activity around Washington [Residence Hall]" this week, said Norman Hiza, area director of Southwest South.

"It is illegal for people to not have screens in the window," Hiza said. "It is hard to tell when someone doesn't have the screens in because it is so far up."

Students living in Washington Residence Hall have noticed an increase in problems, said Sean Marien, a first-year political science student. "There is definitely more problems since UMass was eliminated [from the Final Four]," Marien said. "I don't think the loss is related to the activity though."

Hall Staff held a floor meeting last week to talk about the incidents, and students have been encouraged to be more aware of illegal activity and to report it, according to Hiza.

"The question for us is trying to educate the people," Hiza said. "They need to understand [things like this] can kill someone. Stupid people throw things out of windows."

Campus Safety and Fire Prevention Manager Edward Mientka commented. "It is disturbing for sure. It is a serious safety issue," Mientka said. "Stuff flying out of windows can't be tolerated. There is no doubt that it is endangering people's lives. The key is the people down there. They really should work on cleaning [the problems] up."

"Obviously it is a concern," Marien said. "It is so infrequent, but it happened."

Preliminary costs are unavailable, according to Dan Marshall, assistant operations manager of Southwest South. However, labor costs for the April 4 flood in Washington Residence Hall totalled $1,778. The flood was caused by a "malicious activation," according to Residence Director Craig Alimo.

Northampton rejects bid by Lollapalooza sponsors

By Daniel E. Levenson
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON — After finding out the potential number of fans at the Lollapalooza concert originally slated to take place in Northampton on July 9, the small city revoked the permit due to safety concerns.

Northhampton Police Chief Russell Sienkiewicz has voiced his concerns over the issue at City Council meetings and to the media. He said Northampton simply did not have the size or appropriate resources to handle an event of this magnitude. Sienkiewicz said concert promoters offered to pay for the increased man power — literally hundreds of officers — but neither the State Police nor the Northampton Police Department would be able to muster that many people for the event.

"I couldn't allow my entire department to work at the concert and neglect the city," Sienkiewicz said.

While the town was hardly expecting a crime wave to arrive with the event, there was concern over increased underage drinking and drug availability. Many neighborhood residents still remember a folk festival, held in 1977 at the Three County Fairgrounds, which proved somewhat disastrous, according to Sienkiewicz. People camped out on residents' lawns and committed various acts of robbery around the town, he said.

That event drew only 20,000 people. Lollapalooza is expected to draw thousands more.

Access is a serious issue, with a single two-lane road running through a residential area leading to the event, safety becomes a serious problem. If there were a medical emergency or fire, it would be hard for help to get through.

Sienkiewicz noted that the place where the show was to be held was an ecologically sensitive area. Thousands of people pouring into the area at once could have a negative effect on the land.

Student reactions have been mixed, with people going both ways on the issue. Seth Avakian, a freshman political science major said, "I think it's great that they've tried to bring it to non- traditional venues, but from what I understand the Northhampton site isn't big enough, and I'm not going to cry about it."

Freshman English major Jeff Alulis, who has attended Lollapalooza in the past, said he doesn't feel it's inherently dangerous. "You don't feel threatened at all. As long as you use your head, it's a safe place," Alulis said. "As long as they don't out-sell the place, I don't see why it would be a problem."

When sponsors originally mentioned big bands, "the city apparently though they meant polka or swing", according to the Associated Press.

Male doctors neglect mammograms often

CHICAGO (AP) — Male doctors may have a greater tendency than their female colleagues to neglect physical breast examinations when they order mammograms, according to a new study.

That is a problem because a thorough physical breast examination can find signs of trouble that the breast X-rays can miss, said the authors of the study in this week's Archives of Internal Medicine.

"Patients of female providers were much more likely to receive comprehensive screening than patients of male providers," the study concluded.

The study, headed by Dr. Risa Burns, examined the cases of 100 women over the age of 50 who had been referred by physicians at Boston University Medical Center, an urban teaching hospital.

The 100 women were seen by 45 physicians. Twenty-eight were men and 15 were women.

Ninety-five percent of the patients seen by women received both the manual breast exam and the mammogram, the study said. Sixty-seven percent of patients seen by men got both examinations.

State budget raises tuition issues

By Jonathan Liberty
Collegian Staff

Section 190 of the Fiscal Year 1997 (FY97) House Ways and Means Budget Proposal gives the Board of Higher Education (formerly known as the Higher Education Coordinating Counsel, HECC) jurisdiction over all tuition and fees in the public higher education of Massachusetts.

Presently the University of Massachusetts's Board of Trustees has jurisdiction over all fees set within the UMass system, while HECC sets the tuition.

"Section 190 really does force the trustees to justify their proposals for tuition and fees," said Student Center for Education and Research Advocacy (SCERA) student coordinator Mike Hass. "The trustees will have to recommend their proposals to HECC and if they cannot justify the levels which they have set then there is an obvious problem."

According to a fact sheet produced by the UMass Amherst Student Government Association the trustees have abused tuition and fee increases due to a lack of oversight. The trustee abuse has lead to a 340 percent increase in fees over the past nine years while making UMass the second most expensive flagship university in the nation.

"It is important for those who allocate the funding [trustees] at the university not to be able to increase their revenue source through tuition and fee hikes," said Hass. "190 is pro-student and pro-education whereas it will force the trustees to justify any increase to the Board of Higher Education."

The Massachusetts Teachers Association (MTA) has openly opposed Section 190 of the Budget.

"They see it as a revenue loss," Hass said.

On Monday, members of SCERA met with two UMass MTA members, John Bracey and Sara Lennox.

Bracey and Lennox offered a compromise in representation of the MTA. They mentioned rolling the curriculum fee into tuition.

SCERA said this was a decent offer. However, Bracey and Lennox would have to speak with the entire MTA and try to win their support for the compromise.

"Our time frames are off," said Hass. "In 190 we have a proposal which will potentially help us lower tuition and fees. We are already the second highest flagship university in the country, and now we have a chance to do something about it."

SCERA received no commitment from the MTA and has stated that they now need to charge forward on the issue.

"As students we can not stop what we are doing," said Hass. "They want to leave it to chance, but we have reality in front of us. If students want lower tuition and fees, they need to stand behind this issue."

Because MTA is lobbying to eliminate 190 SCERA is now in the process of calling representatives asking them to support it.

SCERA is also supporting an amendment to the budget proposal which will add $21 million for collective bargaining (the funds which pay faculty and staff salaries). Ellen Story (D-Amherst) has made the amendment which creates a total of $33 million for collective bargaining. Without the amendment UMass-Amherst alone will lose near ly $15 million in funds.

MTA supports the amendment.

"It seems hypocritical of the MTA to push for a $30 million per year contract which is not state guaranteed, but then when the students start talking about giving HECC the final say, the MTA says that they cannot support something that is not state financed," said Hass.

Students can express their support for Section 190 and collective bargaining today on the west side of the Student Union, near People's Market, by calling their state representative. SCERA will have phones and instructions available from 11 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. for any student who wants to make the call.

Panel discusses Balkan tribunal

Efforts to detain criminals guilty of atrocities stalled by lack of funds

By Michael Elliott
Collegian Staff

With a fragile peace holding in Bosnia, the region's future is far from predictable. With the multitude of dilemmas brought on by wars end, few are as complicated and problematic as that of bringing those guilty of crimes against humanity to justice.

A panel at Smith College addressed this issue Wednesday night in a discussion entitled, "The War Crimes Tribunal and the Prospects for Peace in the former-Yugoslavia." The panel included Michael Scharf, a professor at the New England School of Law, Susannah Sirkin, deputy director of physicians for human rights, and Stephen Walker, director of the American Committee to Save Bosnia.

In May of 1993, the United Nations established an international war crimes tribunal in The Hague, the Netherlands. Their purpose is to indict and convict military personal from the Serbian, Croatian and Bosnian-Muslim armies guilty of committing atrocities such as mass executions, rape and torture.

Scharf, a former State Department official and legal advisor to their U.N. Affairs division, critiqued the tribunal on a judicial level, comparing it to the Nuremberg trials established to punish Nazi Party criminals at the end of World War II.

During the Nuremberg hearings, many cases were tried in manner which would violate a persons right to due process of law here in the United States, according to Scharf.

In the current tribunal, for example, defendants are not required to incriminate themselves during their testimony, as was the case in Nuremberg, said Scharf.

Furthermore, the tribunal is attempting to prevent the scapegoating of one particular ethnic group — in this case the Serbs — by actively seeking all those who are suspect of war crimes, Scharf said.

Any case conducted in another manner who be "inherently suspect," Scharf said.

Scharf said he is critical thusfar of the tribunals failure to detain "big wig" suspects, such as Bosnain-Serb leader Radovan Karadzic and his highest ranking general, Ratko Mladic, who were some of the chief architects of "ethnic cleansing."

Sirkin, whose organization was contracted by the tribunal to exhume suspected cites of mass graves, emphasized that obtaining physical evidence was "important to create a historical record" to refute the inevitable disbeliever.

Sirkin presented a slide show documenting the information compiled by the Physicians for Human Rights in Vukovar, a town in southeastern Bosnia.

Vukovar's population was originally comprised of Serbs and Croats, until is was besieged by the Serbian National Army in November of 1991.

Sirkin presented pictures of the mass grave site her organization was investigating in which bodies from a Vukovar hospital were identified. The hospital had been overtaken during the siege, and Sirkin said its residents were forcibly removed by the Serb Army and executed. The entire site could contain hundreds of decaying bodies, she said.

These findings were used by the tribunal to indict several suspected war criminals. However, insufficient funds from U.N. member countries has prevented the Vukovar investigation and many others from being completed, Sirkin said.

Walker, a former State Department official who dealt with the Balkan crisis, was critical of the United States for failing to provide the support which would have prolonged efforts in Vukovar.

"The tribunal will succeed or die on the limb of U.S. political and financial support," Walker said. "Only the U.S. has the clout, influence and wealth to make it work."

Walker, in addition, said that the NATO-lead International Force [Ifor] should be more aggressive in pursing indicted suspects.

Walker pointed to recent sittings of Karadzic mingling with NATO troops in the Bosnian city of Banja Luka and news reports with Mladic skiing in the presence of the international media as examples of where Ifor could have been more aggressive to the advantage of the tribunal.

"They are trying to keep their mandate very limited," Walker said, of Ifor and their U.S.-supported command structure. "They are hoping for peace to evolve on its own."

But if the peace is to be sustainable, said Walker, the United States must take on a more active, policing role, through Ifor.

If we don't serve justice this time — we may never get a second chance," concluded Walker.

N.Y. Times wins 3 Pulitzers

By Rick Hampson
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Journalists who exposed wrongdoing — cigarette makers who secretly heightened nicotine potency, esteemed fertility doctors who stole eggs from the womb, soldiers who committed Europe's worst massacre since the Holocaust — won 1996 Pulitzer Prizes on Tuesday.

The New York Times won three prizes and Newsday two. The Associated Press won for a freelancer's photo of a big fireman and a little girl in the ruins of the bombed-out Oklahoma City federal building.

The News & Observer of Raleigh, N.C., won the gold medal for public service for stories on the environmental and health risks of waste disposal in hog farming.

Jonathan Larson won the drama prize, less than three months after he died at age 35 following the final dress rehearsal for his rock opera Rent.

The News & Observer series told of the rapid transformation of a rural region east of Raleigh, where big companies were replacing small family hog farms with massive high-tech complexes.

But waste pits were leaking into groundwater and creeks.

Finally, heavy rains created a series of spills. One dumped 25 million gallons of feces and sludge into a fragile waterway, killing fish and driving off fishermen.

The series "Boss Hog" was a fitting topic for one member of the News & Observer team, reporter Pat Stith, who grew up on his family's farm. One of his chores: Slop the hogs.

"I'll celebrate for a day or two, then get back into the valley and raise some more crops," he said, meaning stories.

The staff of The Orange County (Calif.) Register won the investigative reporting award for uncovering fraud at a fertility clinic.

Reporters were able to substantiate rumors that doctors at the University of California-Irvine were stealing eggs from patients, fertilizing them, then implanting the embryos into other unwitting patients— resulting in live births.

The paper eventually documented egg thefts involving more than 60 women and identified 10 babies born from them. Using "hundreds of hours of computer time... and old-fashioned shoe leather," the paper said, it was able to track down patients whose names had been kept secret by the clinic.

The scandal closed the clinic, led to a federal grand jury investigation and spurred the American Medical Association to issue new fertility guidelines. Two of the three doctors implicated in the series fled the country.

The award for explanatory journalism went to Laurie Garrett of Newsday for reporting from Zaire on the Ebola virus outbreak. At the height of the outbreak, she spent nine days in the epicenter.

Even though it wasn't clear how transmissible the virus was, Garrett went into homes ravaged by the virus to get her story.

Newsday's Bob Keeler won the beat reporting prize for his detailed portrait of a year in the life of a Roman Catholic parish on Long Island — "where the people gather together to be church for one another."

The national reporting prize went to Alix M. Freedman of The Wall Street Journal for coverage of the tobacco industry, including a report that showed how ammonia additives heightened nicotine potency.

She showed how, despite denials, some manufacturers manipulate nicotine in cigarettes. Ammonia-based additives convert nicotine into a far more potent form that gets absorbed more quickly by the smoker and eludes detection by the Federal Trade Commission's nicotine detection process.

Cop pleas innocent, out on bail

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — A state trooper accused of trying to choke his ex-girlfriend to death with a purse strap remained free on $15,000 bail Tuesday.

Trooper Thomas Downs III, 40, has pleaded innocent to charges of attempted murder, assault and battery with a dangerous weapon and assault and battery in connection with an attack on Deborah Ewing last month.

Prosecutors were dissatisfied with the $15,000 bond set when Downs was first arraigned in Cambridge District Court, said Jill Reilly, spokeswoman for the Middlesex County District Attorney's office.

After Downs was indicted by a grand jury and arraigned in Middlesex Superior Court on Monday, prosecutors sought — and obtained — a separate "dangerousness" hearing for Tuesday. Prosecutors argued Downs should be held without bail, and a Cambridge detective testified Ewing told him that on previous occasions Downs had pushed her down a staircase, pulled her by the hair, and entered her apartment with his gun drawn.

Superior Court Judge Joseph Grasso Jr., however, continued the same bail conditions set three weeks ago by District Judge Jonathan Brant. Brant had ordered Downs to report to a probation officer daily, to turn in his service weapon and to stay away from Ewing.

Reilly said Downs had obeyed the bail conditions.

Downs' lawyer has said the trooper, who is assigned to the Medford barracks, had no previous criminal record.

On March 16, two days after a heated argument, prosecutors say Downs forced his way into Ewing's Cambridge apartment, pushed her down the hall and slammed her against a closet so hard the door broke. Then he allegedly choked her to unconsciousness, wrapped a purse strap tightly around her neck and left her for dead.

As he left her apartment, he spotted neighbors who knew him in a passing car. Prosecutors say Downs told the neighbors he couldn't get into Ewing's apartment and was worried about her. They entered the apartment together, where one neighbor removed the purse strap from the unconscious woman's throat.

Ewing awoke a day later in Mount Auburn Hospital and told police it was Downs who had attacked her.

Meanwhile, Downs called the hospital, where a nurse told him he couldn't visit Ewing. He went anyhow, carrying his gun, and was arrested by Cambridge police, prosecutors said.

Downs maintains he was talking to Ewing on the phone when she told him she had to hang up because someone was at the door. When he didn't hear back from her, he got worried and went to her apartment.

What did you think of the ticket scalping at Curry Hicks Cage that occurred before the UMass Final Four game?

"I think it's good because it gives students the opportunity to make money, because normally the University makes money from students. [It] gave students the chance to get some back."

MIMNAUGH HILL
SOPHOMORE, SPORTS MANAGEMENT
NEW BRUNSWICK, N.J.

"I think it's the inevitable result of having overvalue placed on sports on campus."

"I think it's totally ridiculous to pay that much for a ticket. I wouldn't pay that much and I can't understand why anyone else would."

ANNELISE MORDHORST

CHESTER, CONN.

"If something wants to pay the money for it, I guess it's okay. Thousands of dollars for a ticket is too much, but if someone's willing to pay, oh well."

"I thought it was a little scary because there were so many [scalpers]. I also thought I could have gotten a lot of money if I had tickets."

Countdown to the '96 Presidential Primaries

WASHINGTON (AP) — And then there were two.

Breaking clear in a contest once crowded and tangled, Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole has secured the Republican presidential nomination and won the right to engage President Clinton in the fall.

Neither man at this point has a comprehensive platform. But what they do have, after Clinton's three years in the White House and Dole's 27 years in the Senate, are records. And since January they've answered questions on a variety of subjects put to them by The Associated Press.

Crime

Bill Clinton

Clinton: Won $30 billion package providing for 100,000 more police officers, imprisoning criminals for life on third felony, building prisons and more. Stiffened gun control. Proposals for more police powers and anti-terrorism steps mired in House.

Bob Dole

Dole: Favors more spending for prisons and for juvenile boot camps, and prosecuting youths as adults when charged with murder or a third violent felony. Favors allowing evidence to be used from criminal searches conducted without warrants, but with "just cause." Favors limits on death row appeals and tougher penalties for illegal firearm possession. Opposes most gun controls.

Here are their answers, plus summaries of their words and actions on a variety of issues. Positions may change, and Ross Perot may yet jump in again to mix everything up.

But as of now, this is where they stand and what they've said.

Unabomber suspect tracked to Calif.

By Bob Anez
Associated Press

HELENA, Mont. — As federal agents searched for proof that Theodore Kaczynski left his Montana cabin to mail bombs, two people said Sunday they had seen the hermit in Sacramento, Calif. — in the area where the Unabomber mailed his last four bombs.

Frank Hensley, a desk clerk at the Royal Hotel, next door to the bus depot in downtown Sacramento, told The Associated Press he saw Kaczynski in the neighborhood or staying at the hotel almost annually during the last five years. He stayed at the hotel two or three times, usually in the late spring or summer, Hensley said.

"If it wasn't for all this, I'd be expecting to see him about now," Hensley said, referring to Kaczynski's recent arrest.

At a Burger King restaurant next to the Sacramento bus depot, Singh, the manager, saw Kaczynski a few times in recent years. On one occasion, Kaczynski was carrying an armload of books, Singh said.

"He said he was doing research and he had a breakfast sandwich," he said. "He looked like one of those bums who come in in the morning and have a sandwich and cup of coffee and walk out."

FBI spokesman George Grotz confirmed that agents were investigating whether Kaczynski had traveled to the Sacramento area.

Federal investigators tracking Kaczynski's movements are trying to learn how the former math professor, who had no visible means of support, could get to other states where the Unabomber's bombs were mailed or left.

They reportedly are checking whether he rode buses to those states; two bus line employees in Montana told the AP that Kaczynski was a passenger numerous times.

Kaczynski, 53, was taken into custody at his cabin near Lincoln, Mont., a week ago today and is being held without bail in a Helena jail. He has been charged in federal court with possession of bomb-making materials.

The charge is intended to keep Kaczynski in custody while investigators build a case against him for the Unabom attacks that killed three people and injured 23 in nine states over the past 18 years.

Meanwhile, the painstaking search of Kaczynski's 10-foot-by-12-foot cabin continued Sunday. Grotz said investigators were combing the cabin and the surrounding forest.

The cabin search already has turned up a partially completed pipe bomb, bomb-making chemicals and components, and notes on making bombs.

One law enforcement official said a typewriter found in the cabin appears to be the one the Unabomber used to type his 35,000-word manifesto and letters. Another said investigators defused a live bomb in the cabin on Friday that they believe was intended for someone in particular.

Spotting prejudice

Prejudice isn't a bad thing and I'm all right with its existence.

Before half the black folks on campus drop dead or come to straighten me out Marcellus Wallace–style, let me explain myself. Despite the example I'm about to use being race– related, prejudice is not solely limited to the volatile topic with which it is most commonly associated.

Years ago, when I was but a wee lad, I was told the Conner family reunion would be in Texas. I cringed in fear. My father had told me several times about how he was forced as a child to use the "colored" bathrooms at gas stations after crossing the Mason–Dixon line en route to the Lone Star State. I had, and still have, a defiant streak in me — all I could imagine was that redneck attendant, his crew of Gomers and Roscoe P. Coltrane chasing my dad's crusty old lug up some dirt road just because of me.

Obviously my imagination would prove to be fantastically overactive. In fact, I had a great time, free of that Jim Crow–era mentality. However I did develop the theory that based upon the mysteriously gratuitous and seemingly never– ending flow of tasty honey I and my relatives consumed at every meal (sample dinner conversation: "Would you like some more honey on your burrito, Chris?"), the stuff must be made out of Soylent Green.

But I digress.

The point is, it's perfectly fine to have pre–conceived notions about various topics. Don't shy away from them. Acknowledge them. Embrace them like children. Children who inevitably must grow up.

The point is, it's perfectly fine to have pre–conceived notions about various topics. Don't shy away from them. Acknowledge them. Embrace them like children. Children who inevitably must grow up.

C. Taylor Connor

As long as you make a conscious effort to eradicate those notions through education, they're okay to have around. Unless you pull a Linus, and the next thing you know you're 40 and still carrying the drool–encrusted blue blanket of ignorance everywhere you go.

Here are a few prejudices I know I have, complete with how I plan to rid myself of them.

Prejudice. The Mass–hole thing. I've been away from Pennsylvania for almost two years now, and I still don't understand how exchanges so suggestive of in–breeding like the fictional one below exist.

(Luke and Stacy have just met at a party.)

Luke: Where are you from?

Stacy: East Furreebut

Luke: You're kidding? I'm from Sucksnot.

Stacy: That's cool. I have friends from Knumnutt.

Luke: Wait a minute. Is that next to Molecester?

Stacy: Uh–huh. And Buchnasty.

And so on and so on. Class, say it with me: Too small a state plus too many small towns plus too many people knowing where these towns are equals high chance of many households with a "Cousin Dad" for an occupant.

Solution. Visit every small town in the Bay State. All 77.596 of 'em.

Prejudice. Southwest has more incidences of the letters "C" and "K" being spotted than found in total in every printing of Webster's Dictionary since 1944. The place is a Mecca to the concept of carbon copy. Like the Dave Matthews that incessantly resounds from windows on weekends says: "They all do it the same way." Imagine Hell as designed by Tommy Hilfiger with a complimentary pair of Filas to walk across the hot coals.

Solution. I know and like several individuals who live in the West. It's just time for me to break down and hang out, unfazed by the prospect of smelling like ganja and that damned popular unisex eau de toilette when I depart.

Prejudice. Stupid people. I'm not talking about people who aren't academic wizards. Nor am I thinking of the folks who just don't get it but keep their mouths shut. I'm talking about the boss and girls who, by some stroke of cerebral inverse proportion, always manage to voice their opinions most vehemently on the topics they quite embarrassingly (at least to those of us who weren't in the Port–A–Potty when God was handing out the common sense rations) know the least about.

Solution. Kill 'em all. Or just stop taking sociology classes.

Prejudice. Elitist self–serving private school snobs who abbreviate their first names to just the first initial and write pompous, smug editorials that smack of overeducation. Everywhere you turn in this rag another one pops up. The type of guys who can be referenced by looking up "pretentious" in most thesauruses. Aloof with a capital ALOO.

Solution. J. C. Taylor Conner, will just have to find a common bond with them. Maybe I could even learn a thing or two.

C. Taylor Conner is a Collegian columnist.

Life, death and promises

Sunday afternoon, as most people were at home with their families celebrating Easter or Passover, I was here at good ole' UMass, getting over a cold and working on Monday's edition of the Collegian.

It was about 6 p.m. and my friend Jim asked for a ride home because it was snowing outside.

"Snowing?" I asked incredulously.

Sure enough, it was snowing outside — on Easter. I said yes, and we went out to my car in the Campus Center Garage. I climbed into my trusty little Hyundai, turned on the windshield wipers and headlights, and we were off.

I pulled up to the light in front of the Mullins Center and waited for the light to change so I could make my left turn towards Southwest. For some reason, the light doesn't always want to change, so I inched back a little in the hopes I might trigger the traffic light.

Marni E. Helfner

On more than one occasion, I have been waiting at the traffic light and as the light changed, someone sped through the red light, never bothering to even slow down.

The light triggered. I put the car back into first gear, the light turned green, I eased off the clutch and started to accelerate.

About two feet into the intersection Jim pointed to my left and yelled out, "Watch out!"

Purely from reflex, I stopped accelerating, and I saw a red car in the corner of my left eye. I slammed on the brakes as soon as I realized the car was speeding towards the intersection, and didn't see the light change.

I slammed my hand down on the horn and thankfully, my car stopped without skidding. As both our heads snapped back, we watched in horror as the driver of the red car also slammed on his breaks, skidding across the wet pavement, missing the front of my car by inches. The truck finally stopped when it smacked into the median.

Dazed, I drove through the intersection, pulled the car over, realized both of us were okay, and got out to check on the other driver. As I stepped out into the flaky, wet snow, I ran towards the other driver, and he stepped out of his car. He apologized immediately. I asked if he was okay, if his car was okay; he said he was fine and his car had a flat tire.

I drove around the corner to get the police. They informed me that because my car wasn't actually hit, I didn't have to stick around. I took Jim home, and then drove back towards the garage.

When I got there, the truck was still there, along with a police cruiser. I parked my car, walked up to the cruiser and offered to make a statement. The officer didn't ask for my name and address, but rather if the other driver was speeding. I said, "I think so, but I'm not sure. I know I definitely had the green light, and he didn't start to hit the brakes until he hit the crosswalk." The police officer was fine with my response, and I departed.

It was then that my heart started to finally come down out of my throat and back into my heart. I came inches away from serious bodily harm, if not death. As that red truck came speeding towards my driver's side door, closely missing me, and all I could think about was whether I had fed my fish that morning.

In that split second, and the many long seconds after it, I realized my life could have been over — over from a dumb car accident. And like those late night public service announcements, "Wet roads and speeding make for a deadly equation."

I started thinking about all the things I have never done. I started thinking about all the words I wanted to say, all the emotions I had never let anyone see. It scared me to think of everything I have been "afraid" to do.

But this fear, this fear of death, has somehow liberated me. I am suddenly motivated to start doing the things I have been putting off — the things I have really wanted to do.

I called up my dad and brother and told them how much I loved them and missed them. I got an e–mail account. I sent out a resume to the one place I think will never hire me. I made myself several promises.

And I'm going to keep them.

Speaker defends AHORA cut

To the editor:

I am writing in response to Sarah Coffey's article on Undergraduate Student Senator William Davila in last Friday's Collegian. This article is highly inflammatory, without proper basis and is a poor piece of journalism.

I was outraged that an article on the Ways and Means process was published without the inclusion of the opinions of either the Chair of Ways and Means or myself, the Speaker of the Senate. Either of us would have told Ms. Coffey that William Davila is an exemplary member of Ways & Means and has contributed a great deal to this year's grueling budget process. He is one of the foremost advocates for Latino students on this campus, so to imply that he is out on a personal mission to cut AHORA is ludicrous. He simply wants what is best for the Latino community.

The article does not even give any explanation of why Ways & Means proposed a $2,000 cut for AHORA. At last year's budget meeting, a crooked deal was made on the Senate floor to divert funding away from UPC and into the hands of a group of RSOs and an area government.

The Ways and Means Committee has decided that the reallocation of funds that resulted from this deal should not be acknowledged and that level funding for all of the groups involved should be the preliminary allocations of the Committee, equalling $8,000 for AHORA. The additional $2,000 cut is for subscriptions for magazines that no one reads and are simply piling up in the AHORA office. Hardly an arbitrary cut, this is consistent with the efforts of Ways and Means to make cuts where cuts are possible and to fund growth of deserving student groups.

Boricuas Unidos has been one of the most active RSOs in the past year, making them deserving of a funding increase. I have personally seen the hard work of their members, which has been considerably more impressive than AHORA's. This was conveyed appropriately to Ways and Means in their budget request and therefore an increase was approved by the Committee.

William Davila never voted on any motion involving AHORA or Boricuas Unidos. The article makes it sound like he single–handedly passed the budget cut for AHORA. All of the RSO budgets are voted on by Ways & Means, a committee comprised of 11 students who are representative of many different viewpoints. Neither William Davila, nor any single individual, has the ability to dictate the budget of any individual group.

AHORA should be more concerned with controlling waste in their budget than attacking a solid member of the Latino community. The article by Sarah Coffey was unprofessional and an unjustified attack on Senator Davila, and I hope that the Collegian can provide a safeguard, so that such sensational articles do not appear in the future without a more factual basis.

Learn to spell

To the editor:

I am sure it is a challenge to publish a daily student newspaper, and I do enjoy reading it, however when I see a blatant spelling error in a headline on the front page, (4/2/96 issue, "Foriegn [sic] Language Open House Presented"), I wonder if you have anyone who is responsible for proofreading. It reflects badly on the Collegian when mistakes like this occur. At the very least, you should proofread the headlines.

Get with the program

To the editor:

The editor's function as a newspaper is to ensure that reliable and accurate information is being presented to the reader. About 75% of the information that you present could be torn to pieces by factual accountability. Responsible journalism, or better known as investigative journalism, requires obtaining all facts to create a proper hypothesis. One story in particular was written by Hussein Ibish (Collegian, 4/3/96). Mr. Ibish's story leaves the reader understanding that Mr. Ibish is anti–Taiwan/U.S. Government. That's all it does. There is absolutely no story here. Granted, Mr. Ibish enters historical data, however it is limited. Limited information can be utilized to create a biased opinion, which Mr. Ibish has tried to accomplish. With regards to foreign affairs, read the history of that country. Go to the library and read the Washington Post, the New York Times, etc. Listen to National Public Radio or the BBC. Do your homework on the subject matter and never, never enter your personal opinions. Just present the facts. I personally believe it is our responsibility to speak up and act, if our government is making or is in the process of making a mistake. It's the media's responsibility to report this information. However, Mr. Ibish's report, not to exclude the majority of your reporters, is second rate journalism, and is not newsworthy. Try sending copies to editors of any news media and ask for an opinion. Get with the program, because if your major is journalism, your work will be reviewed in the cold, cruel world of competitive employment. College? It's just temporary.

DVP cut defended

To the editor:

I am writing in response to the column "Plantains and Duct Tape," written by Daniel E. Levenson on Monday, March 11, 1996. On behalf of the Student Ways and Means Committee, I would like to explain the rationale behind the zero–funding of the Distinguished Visitors Program. The article incorrectly states that the University is responsible for the cut. Technically, we could say that the University is responsible for funding speakers on campus and that this is one of the many reasons why the Ways and Means Committee made such a cut. However, students did make this decision, and a difficult one at that.

You might find it ironic that I was part of the DVP for two years. Therefore, the decision by the committee to zero fund the DVP was based on educated motives. This is not because I have any problems with the members of the DVP or with the mission or productivity of the group, although productivity was included in the DVP discussion. Instead, the decision stems from financial and fiscal responsibility, given that there is a dire need to balance the Student Activities Trust Fund budget of $1.7 million.

The University is increasing the number of speakers who come to the campus, and so it should. In addition, many Registered Student Organizations and agencies on campus are also bringing speakers to campus at lower costs. They are accomplishing the mission that the DVP was set out to accomplish more than thirty years ago, in a cheaper manner, and they are bringing larger crowds as well. In order to foster the growth and expansion of these groups, cover the expected SATF deficit for the next fiscal year, compensate for increasing salaries and the minimum wage, and pay taxes on the SATF that we currently have no control over, it was necessary to zero fund the DVP. Any other reasons to justify this cut are based on merit alone and are included in the decision to various extents.

Mocking the protesters

To the editor:

A most disturbing thing happened to me on Thursday morning around 10:50. I was walking into the Student Union to get my morning paper as I do three or four days a week. I like seeing how my favorite teams did the previous day and what else is going on in the world. It's a simple morning ritual that gives me great pleasure. On this particular morning there was an obstacle between me and my morning tranquilizer. Four of my fellow students took it upon themselves to let their opinion be known outside of the Student Union. Instead of just voice what they had to say, these people barricaded the doors with their bodies and a blanket so that nobody could get in or out. I was in shock. I could not believe that these four students, who had apparently seen too many tapes of '60s demonstrations, had the sheer arrogance to think that whatever they had to say was important enough to halt everybody's day. Students such as I, who just wanted a paper, a cup of coffee, or to mail an Easter or Passover card home to Mom, had to either stop or physically remove these people form their paths. I chose the latter option. I felt that standing and listening to whatever these pompous students were saying would only add a sense of legitimacy to their "protest."

The little that I did catch was quite humorous. One of the girls was reading from a book, yammering on about "the man keeping them down" and how people with all the money "have got them by the balls." Three words: go to class. My bet is that the people with the money and "the man" is part of the reason why you have the opportunity that many do not, to go to a fine university such as UMass. I'd like to talk directly to these people and communicate to them that they are ineffectual wieners who have no agenda but to draw attention to themselves. You have a gripe? Write an editorial in the Collegian or to your congressman, organize a rally, do an expressive dance, Moonunit. But please, get off your soapbox and get out of my way.

Books mark anniversary of tragic bombing

NEW YORK (AP) — April 19 is the first anniversary of the bombing in Oklahoma City. Nineteen children were among the 169 people killed. More than 100 children lost one or both parents in the bombing.

Children's book author Nancy Lamb was visiting Oklahoma City at the time of the bombing of the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building. In her new book, One April Morning: Children Remember the Oklahoma City Bombing (Lothrop, Lee & Shepard Books, $16), Lamb writes: "When the smoke cleared, the north side of the building looked like a giant had stomped his foot on it in a fit of rage, squashing steel, concrete, and marble in a pile of sorrow-filled rubble."

Lamb interweaves text with comments from 50 Oklahoma City youngsters, ages 5 to 14, who were not directly involved in the blast, whether by injury or the loss of a parent or sibling. ("My daddy got a 2-year-old baby out of the ambulance," said Addi. "It only had socks on.") Illustrator Floyd Cooper has filled the book with reassuring images of children hugging one another, being comforted by adults and of life returning to day-to-day routines. But the words of the children are not softened. They express anger and sorrow at what occurred. Proceeds from the book will help fund The Care Center in Oklahoma City.

Also marking the anniversary of the bombing is Dear Oklahoma City, Get Well Soon: America's Children Reach Out to the People of Oklahoma (Walker, $16.95).

From the first days after the explosion, thousands of cards, letters, posters and banners poured into Oklahoma. The book is a collection of letters and drawings edited by Jim Ross and Paul Myers, who knew many of the people inside the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building the day it was bombed. Included is an afterword by noted child psychiatrist Dr. Robert Coles. All profits from sales of the book will go to Project Recovery OKC, Inc., in Oklahoma City.

Beat generation artists to be honored in Washington

National exhibition to feature poetry, portraits of Jack Kerouac & Allen Ginsberg

By Carl Hartman
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Members of the "Beat Generation," those outrageous and outcast young Americans who began their rebellion against conventions half a century ago, are being treated to a revival.

The young rebels came along after World War II in a movement fueled by disaffection from what they saw as a materialist society. It was set to the sound of jazz and its brash new baby, bebop. Jack Kerouac, author of the beats' best-known book, On the Road, said: "I'm the bop writer." He also gave the group its name.

"After World War I, you had Ernest Hemingway's 'Lost Generation,'" Steven Watson, an expert on the era, said in an interview. "These people came after World War II and they got the word 'beat' from the drug and carnie world — 'it meant 'robbed' or 'cheated.'"

Watson is curator of a new show about the beats at the National Portrait Gallery, following one at the Whitney Museum in New York. Exhibits include books, photos, paintings, photographs, recordings — some of them with music — of authors reading their own work, and other memorabilia. The exhibition comes as Francis Ford Coppola, director of the Godfather movies, is reportedly at work on a film version of On the Road.

Kerouac died in 1969 at the age of 57, a victim of alcohol and Dexedrine. Some of the beatniks suffered in childhood from alcoholic, abusive or mentally affected families, Watson said. Though some went to Harvard and Columbia universities, they felt that they were cut off from society, whether they wanted to be or not. That led them — like other young rebels of the past — to shock their elders with uninhibited use of alcohol and drugs and equally uninhibited sex.

The beats also were fascinated by what Kerouac called the "wild form" of jazz and bebop. The Beatles, who had nothing to do with the beats, and the heavy beat of rock 'n' roll came later. The term "beatnik" was coined because the beats were getting publicity at the same time as the Russian Sputnik, the first man-made satellite to orbit the Earth.

The most spectacular of the beatniks' young leaders, the poet Allen Ginsberg, is now 69. He won the National Book Award for a volume of poems in 1973.

Watson reports that Ginsberg sees his friends' legacy as liberation — spiritual liberation, sexual liberation, black liberation, women's liberation, liberation from censorship and even "gray panther liberation" for the elderly.

He did not mention liberation from traditional clothes. "I've sold a million jeans," Kerouac once boasted. Now, decades later, Gap and Nike have used some of the beats' faces in ads. Critics say no American poet has ever been as recognizable as Ginsberg or as popular in his own time, across as many generations.

In a book of poems published last year, Ginsberg mused: "How'd I get into this fix, his workaholic show — biz meditation market?" Now, he is expected to star at a reunion sponsored by the National Portrait Gallery on April 27.

The painters in the show do not have a direct link to the beats, though both painters and writers of the period set great store on spontaneity. Some of them knew one another and frequented the same Greenwich Village cafe, the San Remo. The most prominent painter was Jackson ("Jack the Dripper") Pollock, who spread his canvases over the floor rather than on an easel and allowed paint to drip on them.

Actress discusses role in upcoming movie

By Kathleen Sampey
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Laura Linney once burst into tears because of a cheeseburger. While waiting tables in a boisterous Manhattan restaurant nine years ago, a customer inquiring about his long-overdue burger looked at her with such hatred, she says, "I just went hysterical."

It's hard to imagine Linney's Primal Fear character bursting into tears about anything. As hard-bitten prosecutor Janet Venable, Linney shows little vulnerability while squaring off in court against Richard Gere, who plays a defense attorney and Venable's former love interest.

The film, which opened April 3, is about a cynical but highly ambitious defense attorney (Gere) who tries to spare a teenager accused of murder from a death sentence. Venable wants him to fry.

"She's tough but I like her because I think she's realistic," Linney says of the character. "She's under difficult circumstances and she's under a lot of pressure. I figured why make her sympathetic??"

"I have no aspirations for really being a household name," Linney insists. "I'd much rather (the audience) remember a character than remember me."

When asked how stage acting differs from film acting, she laughingly replies, "You got nine hours? A huge difference. Your responsibilities are completely different. On stage, you control the pace, the nuances, the action. In film, that's the director's job. So it's very hard when you start doing film to let go of all those responsibilities that have been ingrained in your soul."

Linney's film appearances include Dave, Searching for Bobby Fischer and Congo.

"I would much rather stay right in the middle and just chug along," Linney explains, illustrating her point by holding her left hand perpendicular to the floor in a gliding motion. "I'm very happy right now."

Greenwell started the fifth with a double and came around on consecutive singles by Valentin and Jose Canseco. Vaughn, who hit 39 homers as last year's American League MVP, hit his first of the season in the seventh. Greenwell added a two-run double in the eighth to make it 9-1.

pitchers have been hot as well. Senior David Dart leads Minuteman pitching with a 3.08 ERA. In the final game of the series, Dart allowed two runs on four hits while striking out five batters. Junior Jason Bennett threw for a full seven innings allowing three runs on six hits with five strikeouts. In addition, the always present threat of reliever Steve Levy looms in the bullpen. The 6- foot-9 senior has a flawless 0.00 ERA with one win after pitching 4 1/3 innings.

As for the Blue Devils their major threat comes from Dan Graham, who boasts an impressive .441 average in addition to 12 RBI and two home runs. In addition to Graham, sophomore Ken Pruchnicki is at the head of the class for CCSU with a .424 average and 14 RBI. An interesting note — the Blue Devil squad has only tallied one more stolen base than UMass' team-leader Gorrie.

"We can beat anybody in the league," Ictte said. "We just can't expect to come out here, throw our gloves on and win the game."

the way for Williams and should pose an interesting match for UMass' No. 1 doubles team of Liesl Sitton and Caroline Steele, who are undefeated this spring.

It seems that the Minutewomen's toughest opponent so far this spring has been the snow and cold weather. They headed back to Hampshire College for the 6:30 a.m. practices this week and their routine has somewhat been altered.

But this hasn't seemed to affect them come match play as they have responded with good intensity and concentration. After Williams there are some big matches coming up in BC and Boston University, and the Minutewomen are excited for them.

"The players know they can handle the pressure and they're ready," Lowry said. "They want to prove it to themselves, and to us as coaches, that their work has paid off."

Yankees beat Kansas City; Athletics nip Detroit

By Ben Walker
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Umpire Ken Kaiser wore a ski mask. A fan dressed like Santa. The organist played "Winter Wonderland."

On an afternoon better suited for snowballs than baseballs, the New York Yankees won their home opener in blizzard-like conditions Tuesday, beating the Kansas City Royals 7-3.

The snow started before winner Andy Pettitte's first pitch and lasted until John Wetteland's last toss. It began as flakes, then turned to flurries and eventually, whipped by winds that never quit blowing, became a full-fledged, howling storm.

"I've played in that kind of snow for an inning or two, but never for a whole game," said Jim Leyritz, who got three hits for the Yankees. "You get a snowflake in your eye when the pitcher is in his windup, that's tough."

Rarely has a major league game been played in such wintry conditions. But because the snow never stuck — it was 40 degrees at gametime — the action was allowed to continue without a stop. In fact, plate umpire Derryl Cousins even wore short sleeves, almost in defiance of the bad weather.

"We thought about it in the eighth inning when the batters were backing out a lot, but I don't think we were ever close," crew chief Joe Brinkman said.

"It looks worse on television than it did out there," he said. "Snow is a lot different than rain. If we had that much rain, we'd have never made it."

Baseball has been plagued by snow, rain and cold this year, resulting in eight early postponements, three involving the Yankees. But this game clearly was the poster scene for critics who complain the season starts too early.

"It wouldn't have surprised me if they'd called it," new manager Joe Torre said after his first home win. "But when you have a lead, you can't start crying about 'how can you play in this?'"

An announced crowd of 56,329 — most of them were present at the start — and first-ball thrower Joe DiMaggio saw the Yankees win their fifth straight home opener. The fans got another reward besides the victory when they were told they would receive free tickets to another game.

Yankees owner George Steinbrenner said he'd heard that the weather for Wednesday, an off-day for the teams, was supposed to be worse.

"The forecast was just for light snow today," he said. Somehow, the snow did not cause many problems for the players. Except for occasional slips on the mound and slides around the bases, there weren't a lot of mishaps. There were four errors, perhaps a surprisingly low total considering the conditions. Kansas City's Michael Tucker twisted his left knee and had to leave after beating a double-play relay on an RBI grounder in the fifth inning. He hit the bag wrong, and it did not appear that the weather was a factor.

"It was pretty miserable," Royals manager Bob Boone said. "We were a little concerned about the conditions, slipping and all, but it wasn't as bad as we thought."

Leyritz went 3-for-3 with a pair of doubles and a walk as the Yankees ended a three-game losing streak. He drove in two runs, including an RBI-single during a three-run fifth that made it 4-1. All three runs that inning were unearned because of an error by shortstop Jose Offerman.

Paul O'Neill and Mariano Duncan later added two-run singles for New York.

"I've never seen anything like this," O'Neill said. "I don't even remember playing in flurries. But this wasn't flurries. It was downright snow. This time of year, everyone is losing games. You've got to get them in.

"I lost all feeling in my fingers," the right fielder said. "It was tough to pick up the ball out there. There were a couple of foul balls where I couldn't tell where they were."

Pettitte (2-0), who won in 35-degree weather last week in Cleveland, allowed six hits in 6 1-3 innings.

Pettitte, at 23, was the youngest pitcher to start a Yankees home opener since 1910, when 22-year-old Hippo Vaughn did it. Back then, the Yankees were known as the Highlanders and played at Hilltop Park.

Loser Chris Haney (0-1) lasted six innings. Royals pinch-hitter Jon Nunnally hit a two-run single that made it 4-3 in the seventh.

Athletics 7, Tigers 6

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Geronimo Berroa hit a two-run homer in the bottom of the ninth inning and the Oakland Athletics finished their stay in Las Vegas with a flourish, rallying past the Detroit Tigers 7-6.

The A's, who pulled their first triple play in 15 years earlier in the game, went 2-4 while playing at Cashman Field. They were forced to move for the first week of the season because of construction at their Coliseum.

Chad Curtis hit a solo home run in the ninth, giving the Tigers a 6-5 lead against Jim Corsi (1-0).

But Brent Gates singled to open the Oakland half and, after Jason Giambi flied out, Berroa homered off Brian Williams (0-1). Berroa's shot was the 23rd home run hit in the six games at the minor league park, home to the Triple-A Las Vegas Stars.

A crowd of 9,723 watched the game. Attendance for the six games at Cashman Field was 54,986, including sellouts in the last three. Capacity is listed at 9,353, although there are grassy hills down both lines where fans can sit.

A leaping catch by center fielder Ernie Young started Oakland's triple play in the third inning.

Alan Trammell was on second and Curtis was on first, and both were running when Bobby Higginson hit a long drive. Young robbed Higginson of extra bases, holding the ball after crashing into the wall.

Young threw the ball back to Brent Gates, who relayed to Giambi covering at second for the second out. Giambi then threw to catcher Terry Steinbach covering at first for the third out.

It was Oakland's first triple play since July 18, 1983, also against Detroit.

Higginson hit a two-run homer in the fifth. He connected off Don Wengert, who relieved in the fourth when Ariel Prieto left with a blister on the middle finger of his pitching hand.

Plantier, acquired by Oakland in a trade with Detroit three weeks ago, homered in the second off Tigers starter Clint Sodowsky. Oakland now leaves for Milwaukee to start an eight-game road trip. The A's play their Coliseum opener April 19 against the Chicago White Sox.

Mariners 3, Brewers 1

SEATTLE (AP) — Sterling Hitchcock won his second start with a two-hitter over eight innings Sunday and the Seattle Mariners scored twice on three wild pitches in the eighth inning to beat the Milwaukee Brewers 3-1.

Hitchcock (2-0), acquired in a five-player trade with the New York Yankees in December, gave up an infield single in the fifth inning and a bunt single in the sixth. He struck out seven and walked three.

The 24-year-old left-hander lowered his ERA to 1.20 in 15 innings and evened his lifetime record to 2-2 against the Brewers. He was helped by catcher Dan Wilson, who twice threw out runners following walks.

Norm Charlton got one out in the ninth and Mike Jackson finished up for his first save.

Edgar Martinez, last year's AL batting champion, hit an RBI double off Ricky Bones (0-1) in the first inning to give the Mariners a 1-0 lead. Joey Cora singled, stole second and scored on Martinez's hit.

Bones gave up five hits, walked three and struck out three in 6 2-3 innings.

Seattle added two runs in the eighth as Brewers reliever Mike Fetters threw three wild pitches. Paul Sorrento, who had six RBIs on Saturday night, hit an RBI single and Fetters' second wild pitch allowed Martinez to score from third.

Milwaukee scored its run in the ninth. Pat Listach walked and went to second on Charlton's wild pitch. He took third on Kevin Seitzer's single and scored on Greg Vaughn's infield grounder.

Angels 6, White Sox 5

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — NL transplants Don Slaught and Tim Wallach hit two of California's four home runs Sunday, and the Angels beat the Chicago White Sox 6-5.

Slaught gave California a 5-0 lead with a two-run homer in the fourth, his first AL homer since July 14, 1989, when he was with the New York Yankees.

Wallach, who had spent his entire 15-year career in the NL, made his first AL start and got his first AL hit with a solo homer in the sixth that made it 6-3.

Rex Hudler hit a leadoff homer in the first and Tim Salmon hit a two-run drive in the third, his third in three games.

Harold Baines hit a two-run homer in the fifth, his 1,500th hit for Chicago, pulling the White Sox to 5-2. Baines, who spent the first 9 1/2 seasons of his career with Chicago, rejoined the team this year after a 6 1/2-year lapse.

Tony Phillips hit an RBI double later in the inning. After Wallach's homer had made it 6-3, Frank Thomas drew the White Sox within a run with a two-run homer in the seventh off Mike James. Thomas was the first batter after James relieved Chuck Finley (1-1), who allowed four runs and six hits in 6 2-3 innings. All four Angels homers came off Wilson Alvarez (1-1), who gave up six runs and nine hits in 5 1-3 innings.

Troy Percival got four outs for his first save. He got the final out by fanning Thomas with a runner on first.

Padres 17, Astros 2

HOUSTON (AP) — The San Diego Padres looked at it as a big victory; the Houston Astros are trying to make it just another loss.

The Padres recorded their biggest victory ever and sent Houston to its worst loss in seven years, routing the Astros 17-2 Sunday as Craig Shipley had a career-high five hits.

"We've got some guys on this team, where we can have games like this," Shipley said. "Not that we'll score 17 runs every game but we've got an offense that can go out and have these kind of games. This lineup can produce runs."

San Diego matched its franchise-record for runs, a mark set against Pittsburgh on July 18, 1989, and equaled on Aug. 24, 1993, against St. Louis.

The Padres previous record for victory margin was 14, accomplished twice, the last time against Philadelphia on July 17, 1974.

And, they did it with some of their everyday starters getting a day off.

"I don't like to see games get out of hand like that," Padres manager Bruce Bochy said. "But it's nice to see especially when you give guys days off. I just think it's a good game for our guys who haven't been starting."

Shipley was among the super subs.

"I've never had five hits anywhere," Shipley said. "I had four last week against Las Vegas, but that didn't count." Shipley was a triple away from the cycle when he singled in the ninth.

ARIES (March 21 – April 19) — New proposals merit careful investigation. Some inside information comes your way later today, easing your worries. Keep dental and medical appointments.

TAURUS (April 20 – May 20) — Favorable travel or financial developments are featured for you and your mate. Romantic partners who must be apart should write or phone often. A tender gesture or encouraging note can mean a great deal.

GEMINI (May 21 – June 20) — Those around you may be in a "show me" mood. If you do not respond in a down-to-earth manner, you can expect some grumbling. Review all options before finalizing an important decision.

CANCER (June 21 – July 22) — You are in one of your reclusive moods. Others may not appreciate your need for solitude. Seek quiet surroundings when tackling a complex task.

LEO (July 23 – Aug. 22) — Some self-promotion is essential now. Pursue a goal that has long been close to your heart. Others want to climb aboard your success wagon. Allow this only if they will be an asset.

UM, Hartford softball teams play on an even keel

KAREEM ALY/COLLEGIAN

Danielle Henderson [left] and Chris Martens [right, batting] were both integral in UMass' victory yesterday. Henderson hurled her 10th win in a row, pitching a two-hit complete game. She gave up one unearned run while striking out five. Martens went 2-for-4 with an RBI in the game to help UMass out offensively.

Yesterday's home opener was not a good day for streaks, as a few drew to a close for the Massachusetts softball team.

Massachusetts	8
Hartford	1

The team extended its consecutive winning streak to 11 with a 6-1 romp over Hartford in the first game of a doubleheader at Totman Field, but saw that streak come to some sort of an end with an unusual 4-4 tie in the second game. The game was called after eight innings at about 7:20 p.m. due to darkness.

With the win and draw, UMass holds a 20-10-1 mark for the year. The rare tie was UMass' first since a 1-1 tie against South Carolina in March of 1985, and is only the third in school history.

In the first game, Danielle Henderson saw her consecutive shutout inning streak draw to an unfortunate close after 38 innings on an unearned run in the sixth inning, set up by a pair of errors. Although Henderson was stopped seven innings short of the school record mark of 45, she still maintains a streak of 39.1 innings without surrendering an earned run.

The streak was nearly snapped in two eerily similar instances earlier in the contest, but smart plays by senior Amy Powell at second base kept the streak alive. In both the third and fifth innings, the Hawks had Missy St. Onge at third and Sarah Elliot at second with one out. But each time Henderson got leadoff hitter Lesley Gertner to ground to Powell, who calmly fielded the balls, firing to catcher Kelly Buckley for a pair of run-saving putouts.

Overall it was another solid outing for the freshman who won her tenth straight start, by throwing a complete game two-hitter with five strikeouts. Yesterday's effort drops Henderson's ERA to 1.38, just percentage points (.0056) behind Liz Wagner, who also sports a 1.38 ERA after yesterday's twin-bill.

Massachusetts	4
Hartford	4

After getting RBI singles by Chris Martens and Sam Cardenas to put up a run in each of the first two innings, UMass broke the game open with a four-run rally in the bottom of the fourth.

Buckley drove in a pair of runs with a lined shot past an outstretched Jennifer DiMella at third base, while Cardenas and Kim Gutridge also chipped in RBI singles.

The second game for the double-dip saw strong pitching by Wagner and a solid effort at the plate by Cardenas, but nothing was settled before night fall.

Wagner went the distance, allowing just two earned runs while striking out a career-high nine batters, without issuing a walk.

The Hawks jumped on the scoreboard first in the nightcap, posting a deuce in the top of the third. But UMass got those back with a pair of its own in the fifth on a Cardenas single that plated Tracey Osier and Octavia Brown.

The Minutewomen thought that they had scored two more in the inning. But those plans were scuttled after the home plate umpire decided that a screaming line drive hit by Gutridge, that had struck the first baseman's glove before she had a chance to move from her ready position, was a foul ball.

The Hawks pushed across a pair of unearned runs on a single by Amy Subo in the top of the sixth to take a 4-2 lead.

UMass retaliated in the home half of the inning, as Cardenas tied the game with a two-RBI triple that brought home Ashlie Hayes and Osier.

Neither team would score again before the umpires called the game on account of darkness after eight innings. The best scoring opportunity for either team came in the UMass half of the eighth with Powell on third and Osier at first with two out.

Cardenas, who went 3-for-5 with all four of the team's RBI in the second game, was robbed of a certain fourth hit and fifth RBI when Hartford's Sarah Elliot made a tremendous diving catch on a line drive at first base to end the game.

The Minutewomen will host a doubleheader against the Harvard Crimson tomorrow at 3 p.m. at Totman Field. The two teams have only met twice before, with UMass sweeping a 1984 twin-bill.

Baseball hits the road again, faces Central Connecticut

By Chris Stamm
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts baseball schedule seems to have been inspired by a certain annoying Willie Nelson song. After playing a five game home stand against Connecticut and Fordham last week, the Minutemen take to the road once more.

UMass travels to Central Connecticut (11-7-1, 3-1 in the Mid Continent Conference) today to play the first of a 14 game road series.

"We're inconsistent. We're not as consistent as I'd like us to be right now," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "We have a lot of people in new positions. We have five new people and lost our best two people from our pitching staff last year."

The Minutemen, who post a 14-7 record (5-3 in the Atlantic 10) are coming into the matchup against the Blue Devils with some solid performances at the plate and on the mound following the weekend series with Fordham.

The Minutemen are looking for some of the key performers from last weekend to iron out the inconsistency that Stone feels plagues his team at times.

At the plate, senior leftfielder Ryan Iette was a major offensive threat for UMass last weekend and will undoubtedly pose a challenge for the Central Connecticut pitching staff. Iette, who is currently batting .369 (the fifth best on the team) went 2 for 4 in Saturday's first game earning three RBI off a home run and double. Iette is currently second on the team for stolen bases with 11, just behind shortstop Brad Gorrie (.409 AVG, two HR) who has stolen an impressive 14 bases out of 15 attempted.

Combined with the Minutemen's other sluggers, Nate Murphy (.384, two HR) and Muchie Dagliere (.380, two HR), the Blue Devils will have their hands full.

Williams College next for 5–0 women's tennis

By Mike Corey
Collegian Staff

This afternoon the Massachusetts women's tennis team will be looking to improve on its 14-1 mark, as the Minutewomen will be taking on Williams College at 3 p.m. in Williamstown.

Williams is a Division III school, but is not to be taken lightly as the team is ranked in the top 15 in Division III. The Ephs No. 1 doubles team of Porter Harris and Julie Greenwood is also nationally ranked and won the New England Division III title this past fall.

In the fall season the Ephs were 7-1 overall and Co-New England Division III Champs with Amherst College.

"These girls are good," UMass assistant coach Tom Lowry said. "The tennis background of these players [is] solid."

This will be the first time that the Minutewomen will play Williams, and it will be played inside.

"We need a good match going into [Boston College] on Thursday," Lowry said. "The matches we've had, we really haven't felt a lot of pressure."

UMass has only given up four total points this spring on route to a perfect 5-0 record. The Minutewomen have demolished the competition in beating Vermont, Bucknell, Colgate, Connecticut and Fairfield.

"They're looking ahead a little bit, but I think the pressure their feeling is not nervousness. They're ready to put it all together," Lowry said. "In the early matches, the nerves won out. Now we're able to channel the pressure better because we've been practicing so much."

Williams comes into this match with a record of 1-1 this spring. The Ephs defeat was at the hands of Washington and Lee on a spring trip 7-2, and the victory was over Nazareth in their home opener, 8-1.

The Ephs finished 13th at last year's NCAA Division III tournament, after finishing second at the NCAA's in 1994.

Men's lax entertains Wildcats

By Justin C. Smith
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's lacrosse team looks to put together its first winning streak of the season as it concludes its three-game homestand when it hosts New Hampshire today at 3 p.m. on Richard F. Garber field.

The No. 16 Minutemen (4-3) are coming off a 13-9 win over the then 10th-ranked Duke Blue Devils and now face the unranked Wildcats, whom they have not lost to in over 10 years. Coming off the big win, coach Greg Cannella feels his team will not look past UNH to this weekend's trip to Delaware.

"You worry about, whether you win or lose, a letdown. Any coach is worried about that," Cannella said. "I think we have changed our focus as a team and worry about the next game. I think the guys are looking towards New Hampshire and they should be. When that game is over we will go over the scouting report and will watch film with the guys to get focused for Saturday.

"We're getting ready for [today] and the guys realize that."

With that big victory over a top 10 ranked team, and the prospect of playing UNH — a team that has lost badly to two common opponents with the Minutemen (UNH lost to Hofstra 12-6 and Boston College 14-6, while UMass lost to Hofstra 15-14 in OT and pounded BC 15-9), could give UMass its first back-to-back wins of the season. An area that he feels is important at this time in the season.

"It's very important anytime you can put a couple of wins together," Cannella said. "This is the time of year where you want to play well because it's the toughest part of our schedule, and the time when the NCAA tournament is determined.

"You've heard it before," Cannella added. "It's

"It's very important anytime you can put a couple of wins together. This is the time of yearwhere you want to play well."

kind of cliche, 'You want to win it at the end, you don't need to win at the beginning.' So putting together a couple here against the competition we're going to play in the next couple of weeks is going to be difficult, but if we accomplish it I'll be very happy."

The Wildcats are led by junior attackman Chris Bromby who has 16 goals on the year and Dave Hanchett, who can score as well as pass on the attack with 14 goals and 14 assists. In goal for UNH coach Jim Urquhart will most- likely be sophomore netminder Gary Foster, who has an impressive 8.5 goals-against-average and a .602 save percentage.

UNH (5-3) is also a very physical defensive team, just as the Blue Devils were this past weekend. Cannella feels that many of the same tactics that helped UMass score the upset of Duke will help his Minutemen prevail in this game as well.

"Saturday was definitely the best performance we've had as a team on both sides of the field," Cannella said. "I think New Hampshire has some quick players but have some big strong defensemen. I think we have to do more of the same [to be successful]. We have to use our quickness, speed and try to outplay them there.

"On defense, hold them down. A couple of their guys have at least 14 goals which is very good. We'll have pretty much a similar game plan and hopefully the guys will come out and play the same."

Broadcast Notes: The flagship station for UMass men's lacrosse, WMUA 91.1 FM, will broadcast the game live with the pre-game show beginning at 2:50 p.m. Patrick Sheeran will have the call of the game and Leigh Torbin will provide color analysis.

Gordon, Sox drill Twins in opener

Mo Vaughn smacked his first dinger of the year in yesterday's win.

By Howard Ulman
Associated Press

BOSTON — Tom Gordon overcame the Minnesota Twins and the frigid weather for his first complete game of a season that started badly for him and the Red Sox.

He allowed one hit in the last four innings in Boston's 9-1 win Tuesday in a makeup of Monday's snowed-out home opener. It was Boston's second straight victory after starting the season with five losses.

Boston	9
Minnesota	1

"The cold didn't seem to affect me. Normally it does," Gordon said. "I think I blocked that out. I was thinking I have a job to do. My teammates need me now."

The Fenway Park stands were free of snow, but the game-time temperature was 44 degrees. More snow was forecast for Tuesday night and Wednesday morning, threatening Wednesday's afternoon game between the teams.

New leadoff hitter Mike Greenwell drove in three runs. Mo Vaughn hit a two-run homer and Kevin Mitchell had a two-run single in a four-run third inning.

Gordon (1-1) allowed six runs in 3 1-3 innings last Wednesday in Texas, his first game since signing as a free agent from Kansas City. On Tuesday, he gave up seven hits and one walk and struck out eight.

"My last outing, I just didn't have command of my pitches. I was more of a defensive pitcher," he said. "Today, I was the aggressor."

"He had us down and didn't allow us too many opportunities to score," Twins manager Tom Kelly said. "When we did do something, something funny happened."

That occurred in the fifth with Boston leading 5-1. Matt Lawton singled Pat Meares to third but was thrown out at second by left fielder Greenwell.

Greenwell went 3-for-5 for the second straight day as the leadoff hitter after manager Kevin Kennedy shook up the lineup because of the slow start. Greenwell batted sixth in the first five games.

"I want to do something to spark the team," Greenwell said.

"We just need people to get on base for the big part of our order," said Kennedy.

Gordon gave up a run in the top of the third on Lawton's RBI grounder. Then the Red Sox, who hadn't scored more than four runs in any game this season, got four in the bottom of the inning off former Boston pitcher Frank Rodriguez (0-1).

"They've struggled the last couple of games," Rodriguez said, "but when you look at them, top to bottom, they've got an awesome lineup. You've got to be at your best to beat them, and I wasn't able to do that."

Mike Stanley started the third with a walk, went to third on Tim Nachring's single and scored on Greenwell's

Doctors investigating Haiti's meningitis epidemic

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti — Four Cuban doctors are visiting Haiti to determine whether a vaccine developed in Cuba can help stop a meningitis epidemic that has killed dozens of people.

The doctors' 12-day visit comes two months after Haiti resumed diplomatic relations with Havana, severed in 1959. The move was a slap to the United States, which restored Haiti's elected government with a 1994 military intervention.

Also in Haiti this week is the director of the Cuban Chamber of Commerce, Gladys Garcia Garcia, who is meeting Haitian businessmen to discuss trade possibilities.

The Cuban doctors, who arrived Friday, were to travel to Torbeck in southern Haiti, where 48 people contracted meningitis between Jan. 28 and March 8. Twenty-one victims have died, according to government epidemiologist Marlene D. Fougere. Torbeck is 130 miles west of Port-au-Prince.

The Torbeck outbreak is believed to be meningitis B, for which Cuban doctors have developed a vaccine that has been effective in Africa and Latin America.

Catholic Church debate over married priests

MILWAUKEE (AP) — The ordination of married men should be discussed as one option for meeting the continuing shortage of Roman Catholic priests, Milwaukee Auxiliary Bishop Richard Skiba says.

The Roman Catholic Church now opens the priesthood to married Episcopal clerics who convert to Catholicism.

"Given the fact that (Catholics) have been raising those questions regularly (about celibacy), I thought the church needed to explore those possibilities," Skiba said recently. "The archbishop and I have no question about the current practice."

But he acknowledged that the Vatican may not welcome another call for discussion.

"I think the practice of clerical celibacy has proven to be a blessing in many ways," Skiba said. "The Roman authorities are hesitant to initiate a dialogue on the subject."

Nevertheless, he said, Catholic conferences of bishops around the world have earmarked the question of mandatory celibacy for diocesan clergy as an issue that should be discussed.

Skiba said the subject was raised regularly during the pastoral visits he and Archbishop Rembert Weakland made to all 284 parishes in the 10-county archdiocese during the last two years. Weakland is now on a six-month sabbatical that began in December.

Polymer Center dedication finally a reality

By Amy H. Paradysz and Melanie B. Arruda
Collegian Staff

The Silvio O. Conte National Polymer Research Center will officially be recognized as the home of the Polymer Science and Engineering Department at a dedication ceremony on Friday at 11 a.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

Over 400 guests are expected to attend the event which will celebrate the many roles of polymers in Massachusetts, including both research and economic factors.

Ground was broken in the summer of 1991 to build the center in the name of Congressman Silvio O. Conte, whose efforts allowed brought $20 million from the federal government. Almost five years and $50 million later, the center is ready to house approximately 160 researchers and Ph.D. students affiliated with the polymer science and engineering (PS&E) department.

"There are probably only 10 programs in the United States that concentrate entirely on polymers," said Art Clifford, science spokesman for the University.

Polymers are more than plastics, Clifford explained.

They dominate today's materials industry and play roles in other fields from oil recovery to health care, according to Richard Farris, head of the polymer science and engineering department.

"It's one of the few, very few, programs in the country that has taken an interest in biological polymers, a very new area in polymer research," Clifford said.

While synthetic polymers are made from oil based substances, biological polymers are usually made of proteins, or occasionally, from bacteria. Biological polymers may be used for medical applications, such as sutures made of protein that dissolve in the body.

"Your body would tolerate it much better than plain polymers or oil-based, polymers," Clifford said. "They're also going to make synthetic skin and biological band-aids."

The scientific instruments necessary to do this work is "very delicate," according to Clifford. "The

SGA debates housing cancellation fee

By Michael Elliott
Collegian Staff

The Student Government Association (SGA) Senate unanimously passed a motion at their meeting Wednesday night to reduce the proposed amount of the housing cancellation fee, and extend the Housing Services notification deadline for students intending to move off- campus.

The motion, sponsored by Sen. Ashavan Doyon, was in response to the Administration proposal which would require students to inform Housing Services of the their living plans for the following academic year by the middle of spring semester.

If eligible students opted to move off campus after this point, they would be charged ten percent of the total housing fee, amounting to $237.

According to Doyon, the office of Commuter Services recommends that students begin their search for off-campus housing after the Administration's suggested notification deadline. Therefore, he said, many students would be unfairly victimized by the cancellation fee, as they would not be afforded the necessary time to locate a new residence.

"Students were not be given enough time to find a place to live," Doyon said.

The motion passed before the Senate extends the deadline to August 1 and reduces the fee to $100.

Prior to the decision of Housing Services and SGA, no cancellation fee existed.

"We acknowledged the need for the fee," said Doyon, because it encourages students to inform Housing Services of there plans as soon as they are known. This way, the Administration can accommodate returning students who are remaining the Residence Halls with their specific living requests, more rapidly.

Doyon and other SGA representatives will be meeting with Acting Director of Housing Services Michael Gilberti and his associate Gerry Quarles this week to discuss implementing the motion.

"They should be willing to compromise on this," Doyon said.

SGA members, including Speaker Dan Castellano, were critical of the administration for not adequately discussing the proposal until recently with the SGA and the joint student-administration Residential Advisory Committee.

"There needs to be better coordination," between these groups, Castellano said. "We felt like we were left out."

In other matters, the Senate approved two motions relating to student transportation issues.

To enhance the accessibility of the Campus Center Parking Garage for students, Sen. Bill Ramsey successfully introduced a motion which would provide them with a special discount rate of $.35 per hour, down from the standard $.70 for parking privileges.

For a six month trial basis, Ramsey said that this motion will benefit commuter students who want to park on campus. They currently pay up to $7 for a full day's worth of parking, according to Ramsey.

"Students need to have this option

Clinton, nation join in grieving for Ron Brown

By Kevin Galvin
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — In a heartfelt eulogy, President Clinton led America's political and civil rights leaders yesterday in grieving Commerce Secretary Ron Brown and celebrating his love of life and devotion to the nation. "Let there always be joy in the morning for Ron Brown," he said.

From the highest reaches of government to the Harlem neighborhoods where Brown grew up, 4,700 mourners filled the neo-Gothic Washington National Cathedral. Its bells tolled over the city.

This was a funeral full of joyful remembrances of Brown's escapades from the golf course to government service and solemn reminders of the price that public service sometimes extracts.

Amid the prayers and gospel hymns, a mournful trumpet solo by Wynton Marsalis echoed.

Brown, 54, was killed a week ago with 34 others in a plane crash while on a trade mission to the former Yugoslavia.

The hearse bearing the remains of the first black commerce secretary moved through the streets of the historic black Shaw neighborhood of Washington, past the Commerce Department and across the Potomac River to Arlington National Cemetery. An Army veteran, he was accorded full military honors with a horse-led black caisson.

Seven riflemen fired three volleys. A military band played taps then the folded American flag that had been draped over Brown's coffin was handed to President Clinton, who presented it to Brown's widow. The Brown family members, the president, vice president and their families each placed a single white lily atop the casket.

Clinton paused to touch the coffin. Brown's daughter, Tracey, kissed her fingers then placed them on the mahogany surface.

The day before, his body lay in repose at the Commerce Department for 24 hours, drawing thousands of mourners.

Inside the cathedral, the American flag that had draped the coffin was replaced with a white cloth with gold crosses.

"He's in a place he deserves to be because of the way he lived and what he left to those of us who loved him," Clinton said.

"Let there always be joy in the morning for Ron Brown.

"Amen."

Brown's son, Michael, took the pulpit before the president. He thanked the Croatian search team that found his father's body and asked for a moment of silence for others victims of the crash, including 11 Commerce employees.

He injected a note of lightness, too, joking that those who said his father was graceful under pressure, "have never played golf with him."

Among the mourners were Johnnie Cochran Jr., Stevie Wonder, retired Gen. Colin Powell and former New York Mayor David Dinkins. Supreme Court Justices Stephen G. Breyer and Anthony M. Kennedy, who knew Brown, were among those attending as well, along with Cabinet members and members of Congress.

UMass parking lots prove nightmare for drivers

By Daniel Sullivan
Collegian Staff

From his sixth floor Grayson Residence Hall window, Charles Sturtevant has a perfect view of a purple parking lot. Out of habit, the sophomore electrical engineering major turned his head towards the window. His eyes focused on a car that entered the lot.

"I see people driving in circles looking for a spot all the time," Sturtevant said. "The cars follow people when they walk into the parking lot. It is pretty pathetic actually."

Sturtevant thinks the University of Massachusetts provides enough parking areas, but not enough spots in each lot. He wants the University to make an effort to fix the growing problems in purple and yellow parking lots.

"There are not enough spaces," Sturtevant said. "I had to wait 15 minutes to find a spot this morning. After seeing someone walking to his car, I got one. They should stop giving out purple permits or expand the parking lots. There is plenty of space to put in more spots. They need more spaces if they are going to charge me $30 to park, though I'm getting nothing for it."

The University provides over 13,000 parking permits to suit commuter students, faculty, staff, graduate students and residence students. UMass splits the five levels of parking according to a color system. For each parking color, the University provides multiple lots for vehicles. UMass provides a parking sticker for every student who wants one. Nevertheless, students are complaining about poor safety conditions and numerous cases of vandalism.

Vandalism, break-ins and theft of cars in parking lots have increased, said Phil Cavanaugh, associate director of the University Police Department.

"We are going to increase patrols to the lots," Cavanaugh said. "We want to control break-ins and thefts. We were successful in the fall semester in stopping break-ins."

Parking at UMass is a nightmare for Jennifer Barrows, a senior English student. She thinks the parking situation is unsafe and in need of drastic improvement.

"My car was stolen from a parking lot," Barrows said. "It was found later at Amherst College with about $500 to $600 of damage."

Parking services offered her a purple parking sticker following the theft of her car, but she declined since she no longer had a car. After getting her car back, parking services refused to give her a purple sticker. They claimed the lot was filled. Barrows said.

"The week after getting my car back and usable, I had the driver's side window smashed and my car phone stolen," Barrows said. "It cost me $360 to repair the window and over $100 for the car phone."

Vehicles parked in purple lots with yellow permits are fined $20, said Lynn Braddock, parking manager. If vehicles without stickers are in a purple lot, then they are fined $10, said Braddock.

"The discrepancy is because those people with a permit are or should be familiar with the policy," Braddock said.

UMass residential members can park in purple parking. Students who apply before new student orientation are guaranteed a sticker. Only four areas are designated purple parking, but each lot has more spaces per lot. Purple parking is off campus, a moderated distance from the residence halls. Presently, 2,419 purple parking stickers have been allotted at $30 per year.

Yellow parking is the lowest level of parking for UMass. No one is denied admission to yellow parking, said Braddock. Only three lots are available. These lots are a half mile off campus with less security. Over 3,800 yellow parking permits are in use. These stickers cost $410 for a year's use.

Walking to a yellow lot is not a problem for students. Lots are on the bus line and are not far away, said Noah Budiansky, a senior environmental student.

"The distance to yellow parking is an inconvenience, but not a huge problem," Budiansky said. "With 26,000 students, walking a little far isn't that bad."

The boys of summer

Andrew Bryce

I have never thought of drinking at 9 a.m. I have drank at 9 a.m. before, but it was a continuation from the night before. As a starting time though, 9 a.m. is revolting.

So, I cracked open a Bud Light at about five past nine. We were on a train to New York to catch the Yankee home opener. I had never seen the Yankees play on their home field, so I was getting pumped. We were all telling stories, making each other laugh, drinking some beers. That's when I met Reggie, a longtime friend of my sister's fiancee.

One of the stories had to do with his shaving habits. He's half Albanian half something else. He's a hairy guy and so he has to shave in various places due to unfortunate growth spurts. I won't describe where he did exactly shave. But after he bent over and acted out how he went about his shaving tasks, the people behind quietly packed up their things and moved to the next car.

Thank God, because his next story was worse.

The second story Reggie told us was about Jeff Ruland. For those who don't know who Jeff Ruland is, it doesn't really matter. But to those who know, the former NBA player is an added bonus.

Reggie played college baseball, and was set to grab a connecting flight with his team in Philadelphia. He was going to the bathroom, which he described in vivid detail that doesn't need to be splattered (no pun intended) all over this column space. He then heard his friend whisper from the stall next to him that Jeff Ruland was in the bathroom with them. Reggie then peeked over the stall and there was the 6-foot-11 Philadelphia 76er.

"Do something that will make him tell his teammates about what he saw at the airport," a teammate said.

They knew Reggie. They didn't have to egg (no pun intended this time, either) him on. Reggie left the stall, and walked up behind Jeff Ruland so that he could be seen in the mirror. Jeff Ruland's eyes widened and his mouth dropped to the floor.

Reggie had feces smeared all over his suit jacket. He reached out his hand to Jeff Ruland.

"I'm a big fan, Mr. Ruland," Reggie said.

Jeff Ruland sped out the bathroom door.

He retired a few months later, complaining of his nagging knee injuries. But Reggie is convinced that the knee problem was a coverup. Reggie takes full responsibility, saying that the bathroom incident sent Jeff Ruland into retirement.

OK, Reg.

I then felt the seal breaking, so I got up and walked to the bathroom in the train. I had never been in a train bathroom before. I was pretty proud of my pinpoint accuracy as I held the rating with the right hand and a beer in my left hand.

I held back on wiping anything all over myself, thank you.

After a few stories which we were incomparable to Reggie's escapades, we got to the train station. We walked down the street to a bar, had a few more beers, and headed to Yankee Stadium.

We were there. The House That Ruth Built was the same place where Mantle created a legend and Reggie — not Feces Man, but the less legendary Jackson — took three swings for three homers in the sixth game of the 1977 World Series. And now, I was there on Opening Day. It's the springtime, I'm at the famous ballpark, I'm with a guy who has ties to Jeff Ruland and I'm cocked.

What more could I ask for?

Maybe that it wouldn't snow.

I've been to Fenway on hot summer days, where I spend time sweating on the people next to me while watching from centerfield. But never had I been to a baseball game where you could find most of the fans huddled underneath a heat vent in the men's bathroom.

When we watching the game, we kept warm between innings by dancing to, among other songs, the Village People's "YMCA." I think I had a few too many, because the C to the A part gave me some trouble.

I then made another trip to the bathroom since, after all, I broke the seal. But this time, I had another excuse. After eating the hot dog and drinking the beer I bought for $17, I heard a cop say on his walkie talkie that Charlie Sheen was getting his ass kicked in the bathroom.

So, my buddy and I followed the policeman into the bathroom. There was Sheen, holding his nose after the setup. I tapped him on his shoulder as he was escorted out by the cops. He should be honored, that Charlie Sheen. I don't normally tap guys on the shoulder in the bathroom.

And so, we went back out, and braved the cold. We were rewarded, as the PA announcer said we could pick up tickets to another Yanks game.

On Tuesday, I did a few things I have never done before, and seen things I had never seen before. Yankee Stadium might be better when they don't have to use a tamponi on the field. It may be more pleasurable to watch a game without my nippies being erect throughout the entire game. Maybe I should have slapped Charlie Sheen instead of tapping him, just so he'd remember me. Or maybe I should have got him, Jeff Ruland style.

But it was still a blast. It was memorable enough. Even without Reggie finger-painting on himself with defecation.

Hump day

Henry Brier

"My friend, you want to ride one camel?" the Turkish man asked in broken English as he threw his arm around my shoulder.

I was honored. And flattered.

In the middle of this past October I was passing through Turkey with two friends when we stopped in a small trading village in the west central region of the country.

There were several fully grown camels sitting idly by stands or meters in front of us. Pretending to be the cowboy I had ever been in a pack of camels was the highest kings.

"Of course, my friend!" I said, and gave my answer to anger my friends and I told him to wheel around a camel for each of us. At that point I would be somewhere between two camels wearing harnesses.

When I showed my pearly whites, I was offered the ones in a slightly uncomfortable position.

Would I like to ride a camel while in the Middle East? Absolutely. How could I not? Why would I not?

Perhaps this gentleman had just received a letter or his buddy has chili for breakfast, which was nothing unexpected in this country. Everywhere we had been in the Muslim countries, culinary congenial surprises were the norm experience.

Hell, I'd be glad to be proven wrong. I'd jump at the chance to be proven wrong. My assistant urged the camels to stand up.

He then warned them to stay put while I got on. I should've known that something was up.

They knew according to the genetics theory, looked exactly like his dad.

I disregarded my elation at that time, trying to maintain my smile for the camera, while the little boy with the small stick lightly rapped it against the camel's side and ordered it to stand.

"Camel up!" he called out, as the domesticated servant slowly rose to all four legs while I heeded the man's advice and gripped tightly, sparing myself the humiliation of being thrown from my opportunity.

This animal, I have since learned, was an Arabian Camel (camelus dromedarius), as indicated by the one hump. This type of camel is capable of carrying enormous loads (not that I weigh a whole lot) and the camel is also extremely valuable because of the ability to withstand the loss of one third of body fluid without endangering itself.

While the little boy, who himself spoke broken English, was leading the camel by the jaw with the rope, he tapped the animal's underside with the stick.

"Baby," he said while looking up at me.

While still holding tight I turned around in the seat and looked at the enlarged and bulging stomach I had not noticed until I was made aware.

I was becoming a little skeptical, beginning to wonder where we were going and if this was one of these expensive tourist experiences people talk about.

I was aware of stories where the camel races into the middle of the desert and stops when the owner confronts the passenger and tells him to empty his wallet, or find another mode of transportation back.

"Where are we going?" I asked as I thought to myself that I really would not mind paying for this ride.

Turkey is a country reputed for being dirt cheap, and at the time I was there the American dollar was worth 50,000 Turkish liras. Nowadays it is worth about 70,000 liras, and rising.

The three of us ended up going for a two minute-long excursion, which circled back to exactly where we started.

"Camel sit!" the little boy beckoned as he hit the backside, and the camel bent her front knees down first, almost propelling me over its head. Then my balance was stabilized as the hind legs folded and the camel returned to its reclined position.

As I disembarked the camel, I walked towards its head. I petted its head, offering thanks, then noticed that her mouth was moving.

Perhaps she was ready to cough one up and huck it my way.

"That's 250,000 liras," the man said as he confronted me.

I was completely caught off-guard, but like I said, I did not mind paying a few bucks for a ride.

"That's not very nice to do to a tourist," I responded as he maintained a hardened expression and manner.

"Okay," he answered. "Two-hundred thousand for you, my friend."

I'M TOTALLY FREAKED OUT ON THE SUBJECT OF DEATH. IS THERE ANYTHING YOU CAN SAY TO REASSURE ME?
NO PROB. FIRST YOU DIE.
THEN THEY COME AND WASH YOUR BODY AWAY.
THEN SOME WEIRD GUY WITH EMBALMING FLUID COMBS YOUR HAIR AND PUTS ROUGE ON YOUR CHEEKS.
THEN THEY DRESS YOU UP IN YOUR SUNDAY BEST AND STICK YOU IN A COFFIN.
THEN THEY DIG A HOLE IN THE GROUND BUT YOU AREN'T THERE AND COVER YOU UP.
THEN YOU LIE THERE FOR AWHILE.
THEN YOUR BODY STARTS TO DECAY A LITTLE BIT. THEN IT DECAYS A WEE BIT MORE.
THEN IT DECAYS A LOT MORE.
YOU KNOW THE OLD SONG "THE WORMS CRAWL IN, THE WORMS CRAWL OUT"? WELL THEY AIN'T JUST WRITIN' IT FER.
EVENTUALLY THERE'S NOTHING LEFT BUT YOUR SKELETON.
AND BEFORE YOU KNOW IT THERE'S NO EVIDENCE YOU EVER EXISTED.
BUT DON'T WORRY ABOUT IT — I'LL ALWAYS BE HERE TO REMEMBER AND LOVE YOU.
BUT WHAT HAPPENS WHEN YOU DIE?
YOU JUST HAD TO QUIT FOR EVERYONE ELSE, DIDN'T YOU?

Losing our religion

Erin Barnes

Last week, I noticed less people attending class as it got closer to Easter weekend. As I sat amidst the seven or so other students who decided to show up for classes last Friday, it occurred to me that the absence of our peers meant one of two things. First, that these individuals were so devout in their beliefs that their religious experience would be hampered by an extra day of schoolwork. The second, and I imagine more prevalent possibility, rests in the fact that many of these individuals were "Christmas Catholics" (or your favorite denomination), who embrace their faith when it is convenient and pick and choose certain aspects of their religion to follow.

My perspective stems from the fact that I do not come from a deeply religious background. My mother was excommunicated from the Catholic church when she married my non-Catholic father, and her interest in religion faded as their happy marriage progressed. My brother and I were baptized non-denominational, although we did attend a parochial junior high school after the public school was found to be too tedious. The night before I was to start All Souls School, my parents asked me to say something "Catholic," to which a family friend responded, "Guilt." At the time, I didn't understand the joke, though now it makes me chuckle.

To this day, my family does not celebrate religious holidays with any great enthusiasm. In fact, my parents had shish-ka-bobs on Easter, and we eat chili every Christmas Eve. Nonetheless, I find solace in the fact that my family remains constant in what we do and say — a far cry from what I witness in some of my "religious" peers.

For example, Catholics lead a life dictated by the sacred Ten Commandments. If I am not mistaken, one of these is "Thou Shall Not Kill." Ironically, many Catholics firmly believe in capital punishment, though when it comes to a woman's right to choose, these same devotees switch to the side of pro-life. This example illustrates the Catholic cycle that says a couple should not engage in premarital sex, and if they do, they cannot use birth control. Yet, if the couple becomes pregnant, the woman is forbidden to have an abortion. So what's a girl to do, especially when she knows her decision will be scrutinized in the eyes of the Lord?

The Catholic church likes to say that these rigid standards elevate them to a higher level of morality. However, it seems as though some members of the church are so tightly wound that they snap, causing them to perform such unthinkable acts as child molestation and murder at abortion clinics. One Catholic group from Colorado Springs filmed aborted fetuses as pirated television commercials that aired during afternoon cartoons, scaring some children half to death. And while non-religious people perform these same atrocities, they do not proclaim them in the name of God.

Catholicism is not the only religion that exercises some form of religious hypocrisy. From my observations, it seems that some members of the Mormon faith raise double-standards to an art form. As the seventh largest church with over nine million members worldwide, the Mormon faith is both a religion and a lifestyle. President Gordon Hinkley claims it to be, "An island of morality in a sea of decay; an anchor in a world of shifting values."

The Mormon religion stresses self-control, and urges its members to avoid alcohol, caffeine, tobacco and premarital sex. My parent's home in Littleton, Colorado, is just minutes away from a shiny Mormon temple. The majority of my high school classmates adhered to the Mormon faith in front of their parents, yet neglected its norms on a daily basis. At parties, they drank us under the table, they smoked outside the Burger King, and they certainly had sex.

The Mormon "island of morality" is predominantly white, and it wasn't until recently when African Americans were afforded the opportunity to enter the church and become priests. It remains to be seen whether women will be given the same chances the male gerontocracy has held for centuries. Ironically, in this world of shifting values, these women accept the fact men dominate most aspects of life, for God dictates such behavior. As of late, the Mormon notion of self-control has succumbed to male authority as domestic abuse cases within the church have risen. Unfortunately, given the accepted role of women, Mormons often sympathize with the abuser and not the victim.

Critics of the Mormon religion claim that by forcing conformity through its guidelines, the church stifles individuality. This could be said about other religions as well, including Catholicism. It appears that some religious devotees are blinded by their faith, and hold rigid norms that obviously conflict with changing times. This unbending aspect frightens me as religious zealots gain increasing power in the schools, the pulpit and politics.

Indeed, I may sound like a hypocrite when I say that not all religious people are selective, and that most, in fact, take their faith very seriously and successfully avoid extremism. It is these individuals with whom I want to work to preach a message that recognizes change and embraces diversity. Social responsibility and family values are not secular terms. Moreover, people can be spiritual without being religious. In the face of this hypocrisy, I sing the Beatles hymnal: "I don't believe in Jesus. I just believe in me."

Letters to the Editor

Acknowledging achievement

Before my first fall semester at UMass, friends and family were concerned that I would blend into the masses as a consequence of attending a large university. However, any upperclassman will tell you that UMass seems to shrink as the years go by. Hanging out at the same bars, trekking the same route to class, and studying faithfully in your favorite spot, surrounds you with familiar faces providing the illusion that UMass isn't so big. Watching all these familiar faces pass by without acknowledgement creates a second challenge; overcoming the impersonal "UMass nod." I found my niche through my true passion and I created the ideal college experience.

As an intimidated freshman, I tried out for an athletic team which had no previous success but, with the coaching of the new assistant director, promise of a competitive future loomed in the horizon. The first season we grew as a team, gaining experience and knowledge about intercollegiate competition. A strong united team began 1995 with a bang and never turned back. We took first in the region and traveled to Texas for UMass' first trip to the national competition in two decades. Last year, showing true UMass spirit we earned the regional title once again and placed fifth at the national competition in Colorado. This year, we're on our way to Los Angeles for the third consecutive national, to win.

Although success is sweet, the attitude of our team and the attitude of others towards us, including this University, has taught me the most valuable lessons. No other incredibly successful team on campus takes more pride in competing for UMass, with so little recognition. Challenged by teams such as Mt. Holyoke and Smith College, that specifically recruit students to ride for their fully funded equine programs, we are constantly reminded how little interest our own University takes in us. Despite all this, our team, modeling our coaches ethics, exemplifies good sportsmanship, dedication and team spirit. This is my second year as captain and I couldn't ask for more memorable experiences. Experiences that have created a strong leader, a worthy competitor and a happy, successful college student.

My true passion erased all feeling of self-ambiguity, giving me a name and a title as opposed to my nine digit student identification number. I would hope that every UMass student has the opportunity to incorporate their passion into the University. I know this is idealistic, and for that reason I appreciate even more the experience I have had regardless of the lack of school support.

Having said all this, yes UMass, we have an equestrian team, as many of you read on April Fool's Day in the sports notice box. The team will represent our fine university in the "Final Four" of intercollegiate horseback riding May 3-5 in Los Angeles. We will personally pay the $500 to travel and with or without support, we will proudly wear the UMass logo.

Osborne's off charts and onto Net

As Joan Osborne skyrockets to fame, a handful of net- heads have taken notice and established Web pages in her honor.

Joan Osborne: relish at http://members.aol.com/drldeboer2/ htm/jo.htm

Relish is a simple fan page dedicated to Osborne. It is one of very few pages about this up and coming artist.

The page is pretty comprehensive and includes compulsory fan page features such as discographies, photographs and reprints of articles from magazines. The page even includes links to top 40 charts, so fans can follow her popularity. However, since Osborne lacks other home pages enshrined to her, there is no link section.

The drawback to this page is the lay out. It isn't well divided into sub-pages. The discography is at the end of the main page rather than an independent page, so it takes a while to download. However, since the page lacks a lot of graphics, lynx users will have no problem with this page.

Joan Osborne at http://www.rockweb.com/bands/joan- Osborne

Rockweb maintains web pages for up and coming bands and musicians such as Spacehog, and Osborne. This page includes all the basics of a promotional web page from a background story to reprints of articles from the press. It also includes a real-time chat room, and concert listings.

Joan Osborne

As Joan Osborne prepares to come to the Valley next week, questions about God, spirituality and rock & roll come to mind. Some are forced to ask...

"What if God was one of us?"

Marni E. Helfner & Amy Paradysz

"What if God was one of us? Just a slob like one of us? Just a stranger on the bus — tryin' to make his way home. If God had a face, what would it look like and would you want to see if seeing meant that you would have to believe in things like heaven and in Jesus and in the saints and all the prophets ..." — Joan Osborne

Pop singer Joan Osborne has gone to the top of the charts with her song "One of Us," a tune which has pushed many to ask questions about the role of God in their lives.

As college students across the country struggle with the idea of God and spirituality, and as many reject most forms of organized religion, Osborne takes a risky step when she asks such pointed questions.

The Lyrics

The lyrics of "One of Us" aren't very long or complicated, but they manage to make people think. Some critics have suggested that perhaps, if the tune wasn't so catchy, the song would not have risen as far as it has.

"My little nephew sings it all the time, singing 'yeah, yeah,'" said Joanna Santaniello, a senior microbiology major. When asked about the religious tone to Osborne's lyrics, she looked down and said, "I've lost it [religion] as I've gotten older."

Unlike the traditional conventions which eastern Judeo- Christian preach, Osborne's song addresses what would happen if people saw God as the person next to them. While the idea that God is approachable and accessible by the everyday Joe isn't new, it still goes against what most Americans are taught about God. The Puritans believed that one did not need a priest or a bishop to be religious and in contact with God, and they were punished for their beliefs. In some way, Osborne is also preaching this belief through the suggestion that God can take any form — and could be "... just a slob like one of us."

"It sounds like she needs something to believe. It sounds like she does believe in Him and she's trying to make us understand humanity," said senior Kim Collins. "You think about, how many times are you rude in one day? If I was rude to a person and then later thought 'what if that stranger on the bus were God?,' then I'd probably apologize and not be rude anymore."

Martha Hay, a senior who describes herself as a Catholic Christian, said "I think [Osborne]'s trying to say is that God was one of us at one time... That he's not something high and mighty like people like to think, that he was just a person, not just a person... but he did come in human form."

The other issue addressed in the song is whether or not people are going to see their higher power in the form of "God" or "Jesus." Osborne sings, "...and if seeing meant that you would have to believe in things like heaven and in Jesus and the saints, and all the prophets." With hundreds of religions across the world, and the Pope and every other religious figurehead claiming theirs is the one true religion, why does Osborne choose to talk about Jesus?

It could be she really believes Jesus and Christianity are the right religion. Or, more likely, it could be that Osborne is questioning why society even needs to name their higher power in specific terms and practices. Does one even need to have proof of "God" to know that one exists?

The Controversy

Of course, "One of Us" has caused some controversy. Some critics have claimed Osborne has taken religion and God and defamed them by using them for personal gain. To a large extent, the lyrics go against some of the most basic tenets of Judeo-Christian religions, and for some this is disheartening. But in an age where the numbers of actively religious Americans are rapidly declining, most seem to see Osborne's song as encouraging a belief in God. Collins said, "Here [at the University], I'd say the majority are atheist, which is disappointing."

Sister Christine Methè, a campus minister at the Newman Center, admitted she hadn't heard the song, but was supportive of the message. "I think it's kind of interesting that the search for spirituality may go against traditional teachings, but it's refreshing that someone would pose those questions in contemporary music," she said. "Anytime someone is looking for spirituality and meaning in their life, it's a good thing."

Methè added, "I'm not sure music and rock and roll can give you a spirit, but it can help you express that spirituality."

Rooted in more than rock n' roll

Osborne is a Kentucky native, born in a small town outside Louisville. She relocated to New York in 1987 to attend NYU film school, and got her start after drunkenly climbing onto an open mike night stage at the blues bar Abilene. With no formal training, Osborne sang a Billie Holiday tune and was so warmly received she was invited back for jam sessions at the bar. She became a regular act, and it was there she put her first bands together.

Like Lisa Loeb and Ani DiFranco, Osborne is somewhat of a New York favorite. Relatively small known until that one elusive tune hit the charts, Osborne sees Liz Phair and Tori Amos as her contemporaries. She credits her influences as a combination of modern rock, traditional blues, the gospel of the South and the Appalachian country she grew up with.

Joan Osborne will appear on Monday, April 15 at John M. Greene Hall at Smith College at 8 p.m. Tickets are $16.50 and are available from the Northampton Box Office and For The Record in Amherst.

People and Pop Culture in the News

Attention Genesis fans — Phil Collins has officially left the group behind. However the show must go on and the '80s rock legends will be searching for a new singer. Yea.

Angela Lansbury will also be taking a bow as the 70-year-old actress leaves behind her days of sleuthing on Murder, She Wrote. The last show will run May 14, but since Perry Mason she will probably return to more TV movies. Yea.

Okay, there is something worthwhile as well not really, but for all you Pamela Anderson Lee fans you can watch her and Tommy Lee make it on video tape. How? Well apparently the two taped themselves making whoopie and then put the tape in their house's safe for safe keeping. But, the safe was recently stolen from the couple home and (gasp!) landed in the hands of Penthouse magazine which plans to publish images from the tape in an upcoming issue. The couple are suing the magazine for the tape and seek $10 million in damages.

Clint Eastwood is married, not to long time love and companion Sandra Locke, but to 30-year-old news anchorwoman Dina Ruiz. It is his second marriage and her first.

The artist formally known as Prince and his belly dancing wife, Mayte, are expecting their first child in November. The couple wed on Valentine's Day this year. Steven Spielberg and wife Kate Capshaw are also proud parents of adopted daughter, Mikaela George.

Attention Letterman fans, the king of "Late Night" will be filming his show in San Francisco. And if that doesn't catch your attention, how about the fact the Sharon Stone set the fashion world on end when she sported a $22 Gap mock turtleneck to the Oscars, causing everyone to rush to the nearest store (one opens every three hours). The company plans to rush shipments of the butt shirt to it's greedy star struck consumers. One word: lemmings.

Take a guess who "ER" heart-throb George Clooney chooses to play B-Ball with — Urkel! That's right, Jaleel White ("Family Matters")! tapes his show next to Clooney's and the two play hoops two to three times a week.

If James Earl Jones ever wants to quit his day job he has one on the back burner. People actually ask him to do their answering machine messages. Jones says, "Okay," but only if the people write out a check to a charity of his choice. The only stipulation is people requesting the tape have to spot him in person — no mail or phone requests are accepted. What a guy! He get the "Kudos" award for the week. Material for this column has been compiled from various news and wire services by Tara MK Connelly.

Following the 8 p.m. performance of international recording blues singer Sam McClain in the Bluewall.

John Travolta stars in this comedy about a Miami-based cash shark, Chili Palmer, who decides to embark on a filmmaking career in Hollywood. He finds a sucky script, a down-and-out actress (Rene Russo), and tries to get (and his fair share of) investments. Sorry, Danny DeVito.

While Chili tries to fight off other loan sharks and devious movie producers, a Bulgarian director (Gene Hackman) tries to prevent Chili from making his movie. Gangsters and actors have themselves and the magic formula for movies, a kiss and Travolta in Chili Palmer tops them all.

UM Spring Concert alum aces it with latest LP Platinum Blues

TAJ MAHAL
Phantom Blues
Private Music

Two years ago, most students at the University of Massachusetts only knew the Taj Mahal as an architectural wonder in India and a gaudy hotel in Vegas. However, following Mahal's performance at the 1994 spring concert, many remembered him as the cool cat who brought the house down with his solo act and his concert ending jam with The Violent Femmes. Mahal, a UMass alumni of 1963, brought the blues home to Amherst that day, just as he has on his new album, Phantom Blues.

The clever title conveys both the haunting nature of his songs, and the immortal allure of the blues. Mahal's stunningly vivacious performance proves that the blues are far from being dead. He is a competent guitarist, however, on this album guitar honors are given to producer, John Porter. The bluesman's raspy, whiskey and gravel voice brings to life both familiar and original R&B classics in toe- tapping style on Phantom Blues. Mahal explains that the album was, "designed to go down some familiar trails, but [also] to look for new things."

The album leads off with "Lovin' In My Baby's Eyes," a soothing blues number with a relaxing mellow rhythm, augmented by Mahal's only harmonica solo on the album. Along the way, the blues master puts his inimitable "spin" on Fats Domino's classic "Let the Four Winds Blow," complete with a rollicking piano. Blues disciple, Bonnie Raitt, duets with Mahal on the upbeat blues shuffle, "I Need Your Loving," backed by a bevy of vocalists echoing the title's assertion.

Consummate bluesman, Eric Clapton, handles guitar duties on "Here in the Dark" and "(You've Got to) Love Her With Feeling." On "Here in the Dark," Mahal's soulful blues laments are answered by the evocative riffs Clapton pours forth. The latter song, co-written by the late Freddie King, one time Clapton mentor, showcases Clapton's attempt to emulate his idol's guitar phrasings. Unlike recent efforts from fellow blues legend, John Lee Hooker, Mahal's album is not overburdened by guest stars. The presence of Raitt and Clapton enhance the character of their respective songs, rather than infringe on Mahal's performance.

Many songs on the album illustrate the gritty style that has influenced contemporaries like Robert Cray and Stevie Ray Vaughan. Over his 30 year career, Mahal has awed as many people with his sonic beauty, as his architectural namesake has with its visual beauty. On this, his third album of the decade, don't look for him to stop any time soon. Forget seeing the Taj Mahal, hear Taj Mahal. A- (Michael McCloskey)

MARIA MCKEE
Life Is Sweet
Geffen Records

As unexpected as it is exciting, Maria McKee's latest album, Life Is Sweet, moves lightyears beyond the singer/ songwriter/ guitarist's former band, Lone Justice, and her mediocre debut solo album, You Gotta Sin to Get Saved. As lush and orchestral in scope as John Cale's Paris 1919, Life Is Sweet is also laced with menacing Crazy Horse–style guitar, giving the album it's dark and explosive edge.

The opening track, "Scarlover," sets the tone for the album with its twisted mess of distorted guitars exploding into a monstrous string arrangement — all undercut with the beautiful voice and stellar songwriting of McKee. Despite its apparent excess, Life is Sweet never collapses under the weight of its arrangements. The strings (arranged by McKee with Bruce Brody) echo perfectly the emotional intensity of the tunes, never interfering or drowning McKee in schmaltzy orchestrations. McKee's guitar playing, too, is immense and imaginative, recalling, at times, the expressive noise of Neil Young, or the sonic wizardry of Mick Ronson.

Life is Sweet is a difficult album to pin down, both stylistically and emotionally. As McKee sings in the title track, "life is sweet — life is bittersweet." The sweetness of the string, and the bitterness of the guitars mesh beautifully into an album of immense scope and depth — pulling McKee's lyrics, and the listerner's own emotional investment, in unforeseen directions — an engaging and exciting album that bodes well for McKee's artistic future. A (Bradley Skaught)

GIRLS AGAINST BOYS
House of GVSB
Touch and Go

If you haven't already heard about Girls Against Boys, they're a hip New York City band that plays noisy trance music and have the cool attitudes to go along with it.

Although Girls Against Boys started in the same Washington D.C. hardcore scene that yielded Fugazi, they've managed to break away from practically any scene due to their unique sound, fueled by two bass players and a vocalist that speaks more than sings. On their previous record Cruise Yourself, Girls Against Boys showed that they were the kings of heavy drone music as singer Scott McCloud sang cynical and humorous lyrics with a raspy voice that sent chill down your spine.

While that album spawned an awesome song like "Kill The Sex Player" (which was also featured on the Clerks Soundtrack), the album as a whole didn't convey the consistent

Synaesthesia to take over Iron Horse tonight

By Mike Burke
Collegian Staff

SHANE KEENAN / COLLEGIAN

Synaesthesia will play the Iron Horse stage tonight with two other local bands.

Tonight is a college fest over at the Iron Horse Music Hall as three local bands, all with University of Massachusetts' connections, take over Northampton's intimate club for an evening of improvised jams, funky riffs and alternative rock.

Headlining the three band bill are local favorites Synaesthesia, recently named most popular UMass band in the Collegian poll. Four years ago, the band arrived on the local music scene and quickly gained a die–hard following.

The band has always excelled live on stage and this has allowed the band to perform at many notable shows including the Spring Concert as well as recent gigs with such national acts as the Aquarium Rescue Unit and Government Mule, featuring members of the Allman Brothers.

Musically Synaesthesia are often lumped into the broad Phish/ Grateful Dead as the Amherst band is known for their extended jams featuring a mixture of everything from ethnic tunes to jazz and straight ahead pop. And don't forget the band's unique light and sound display which meshes brilliantly with the music.

Recently the band has jumped up to become a popular headliner at local clubs playing virtually anywhere they can. Find out for yourself why no one else can jam like Synaesthesia.

Playing in the middle slot tonight are Clovis Point, a local band named after an 11,000 year old arrowhead found in Clovis, New Mexico. This four piece band, with members hailing from as close as Northampton and as far away as the distant shores Sunnyvale, Calif., originally formed in early 1993 at Brandeis. After many name changes and some time off the band regrouped a year ago in the Amherst area.

Since the band's relocation they have extensively performed at local establishments such as the Hadley Pub, The Grotto, Pearl Street, Mike Billiards and UMass.

Musically the band sights rock, jazz, funk and fusion as main influences; all these styles come together on the band's trademark — their improvisational jams.

Opening up the triple header is Migrant Groove, a semi– local band performing their first gig in the Northampton area. The band features one UMass student; the other three fourths of Migrant Groove live in Poughkeepsie, NY.

The band has been playing several east coast dates in support of their upcoming full length album, Grid, due out in a few months. Migrant Groove's sound falls less under the Phish grouping and more average alternative rock. Live and Seven Mary Three, are musical reference points, but the band sights blues, jazz and rock as influences.

Synaesthesia, Clovis Point and Migrant Groove perform at the Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton tonight. Tickets are $5 and available at the door. The show is all ages. Doors open at 8:30 p.m. Call the club at 584-0610 for more information.

Shrewd lawyers out; gangsters in

Gere can't instill Primal Fear; Palminteri a favorite in Faithful

Richard Gere plays an attorney in Primal Fear.

COURTESY TRI STAR PICTURES

By Laura Stock
Collegian Staff

PRIMAL FEAR
Directed by Gregory Hoblit with Richard Gere, Laura Linney
Playing at Hampshire Six

Ripped from today's headlines! A shrewd, ruthless lawyer is under the microscope for taking on a highly publicized and controversial case of an altar boy murdering an archbishop. Throw sexual abuse in the mix, and you have all the makings for "Geraldo," "Maury Povich" or Gregory Hoblit's Primal Fear.

Richard Gere plays the seemingly heartless lawyer, Martin Vail. Martin is known for being as bloodthirsty as a shark in the courtroom — or as the State's attorney calls him, "worse than the scum you represent." He is the Johnnie Cochran, F. Lee Bailey-type defense attorney of this fictitious Chicago- based lawyer flick — and Gere pulls off the role perfectly.

Though he owns his own lucrative, personal practice, schmoozes at blacktie parties and is featured on the cover of various magazines, Martin's callous reputation is validated by his "ambulance chasing" behavior.

When he sees the news report on the slain archbishop and the bloodstained teen who is caught running from the crime scene, he speeds down to the jailhouse in his Mercedes and tells the 19-year-old boy, Aaron Stampler, he will represent him pro bono.

Martin epitomizes the tough lawyer who will do everything in his power to get his client off. He doesn't want to hear anything from Aaron, except for the fact that he is innocent. Martin's unwillingness to probe into the boy's story actually winds up creating a major problem for the lawyer, as his little legal loopholes begin to tighten like a noose around his neck.

For example, new evidence surfaces midway through the trial which hands the prosecution motive on a platter — a pornographic video starring the accused boy, directed by the archbishop himself.

Martin is placed between another rock and a hard place — the prosecutor (played by Laura Linney) is none other than his ex-girlfriend. Bitter blood between the two lawyers makes for some feisty courtroom battles, but there still remains a mutual attraction that contributes to the romance factor in the movie.

Though Gere and Linney's performances are on the mark (another decent performance is turned out by "Traiser" star John Mahoney), Primal Fear is not as gripping as its title may indicate. Unlike other courtroom suspense dramas, such as those derived from the novels of John Grisham, Primal Fear (based on the novel by William Diehl) feels tailor- made to fit into something society has been subjected to for years. It's like O.J. all over again. It simply plugs the characters into a foolproof formula — taking no risks.

Primal Fear serves as a mere reminder that unless there is some new, revolutionary trial idea, it's time to take the camera out of the courtroom. Case dismissed. C

FAITHFUL
Directed by Paul Mazursky with Chazz Palminteri, Cher, Ryan O'Neal
Playing at Mt. Farms Four

Paul Mazursky has crafted a dark comedy masterpiece that puts a new spin on the vow of loving, honoring and cherishing "'til death do us part" in Faithful.

Hot Hollywood prospect of the moment Chazz Palminteri wrote the play which the film is based upon. Slipping so adroitly into the lead role of Tony, it is entirely possible Palminteri had himself in mind when scripting the disturbing comedy. Riding high off the success of his latest film, The Usual Suspects (I'll ignore his little role in the flop Diabolique, which is in current release), Palminteri is the one to watch.

Palminteri brings his thick New York accent, brash sense of humor and citified sarcasm to the role of Tony — a Mafia hitman hired to bump off a depressed housewife by her cheating husband.

The housewife, Maggie, is played by Cher — one of her first decent roles since Moonstruck. We meet Maggie on her 20th wedding anniversary. She is strolling down the streets of New York City, tearfully looking at wedding gowns, wondering why her husband, Jack, can't be faithful. Then she hops in her Rolls Royce, and drives to her elaborate mansion, musing something about how all of their money still doesn't make them happy.

While her husband tells her he has to take off on a day- long business trip, she sits down behind her desk in her bathrobe, staring at a pill bottle, contemplating suicide. Then someone enters her life who will change it, as well as change the initial slow flow of the movie.

Tony breaks into her house, under indirect orders from her husband, to rape and kill Maggie. Tony has been instructed to wait for the signal: two rings of the phone, then a hang- up. During the interim, some of the most creative dialogue of this year's films ensues between Maggie and Tony — equal parts hilarious and morose.

The two rich characters gradually unwrap a convoluted plot that keeps the audience guessing until the end. Did Maggie actually hire Tony herself? Is Jack really on a business trip? Who is the one being unfaithful here?

While Maggie is tied to a chair, she actually manages to probe into Tony's being, learning about his checkered past and what he intends to do with his future. Their banter is occasionally interrupted by phone sessions with Tony's therapist, Dr. Susskind (played by Mazursky).

The backbone of this movie is definitely the script — taking risks with the characters' lines proves fortuitous. The story, which spans a mere 24 hours and involves only four characters, is absolutely riveting. Faithful has a screenplay that smacks of irony, and Mazursky weaves the scenes together expertly, spicing it up with changing camera angles and shots of the beautifully landscaped mansion.

Mazursky also uses flashback techniques which bring to life the fuzzy memories of both Maggie and Tony. Maggie has flashbacks of her wedding day, and Tony has memories of his crimes as a hitman. We never forget that the film was initially a play, as its themes and settings are easily transferable into three acts.

While most critics felt that Palminteri could do no better than A Bronx Tale, the actor has proved this to be a myth again. Though he still has that stereotypical mafioso mannered gangster role, he takes advantage of every line given to him. The script is so solid, even Cher shines in her role. She is vulnerable, yet crafty. She leaves us wondering whether she is truly depressed, or a sly little maven trying to get back at her cheating husband.

Though this film may be one of April's best kept secrets, have faith: it will surprise you. A

Truth about actress Janeane Garofalo

By John Horn
Associated Press

Janeane Garofalo survived "Saturday Night Live." But can the fast-rising actress also triumph over Uma Thurman?

Garofalo, who plays the talent booker Paula on "The Larry Sanders Show," stars opposite Thurman in the new movie The Truth About Cats and Dogs. The romantic comedy follows two women friends — Abby and Noelle — and Brian, who isn't sure if it's Abby or Noelle he's crazy about.

A modern retelling of Cyrano de Bergerac, the movie asks the tricky question about affection and attraction: What's more important — looks or personality?

Abby, played by Garofalo, isn't drop-dead pretty, but she is adorable — a quick-witted radio host whose talk show centers on pets, hence the film's title. Her neighbor Noelle, a model played by Thurman, is everything Abby is not: tall, blonde and curvy, but also a little vapid, boring and humorless. Thanks to a deception concocted by Abby, Ben Chaplin's Brian thinks he's fallen for Abby's great brains and Noelle's terrific body.

It's Garofalo's first major movie starring role and quite a challenge, too: For the movie to work, Garofalo's short and slightly beefy Abby must prove more appealing than Thurman's stunning Noelle.

"This is just an amazing gamble that (producer) Cari-Esta Albert and (screenwriter) Audrey Wells took on me, to give me one of the leads," the 31-year-old actress says. "I can guarantee the studio probably didn't want me."

Director Michael Lehmann says 20th Century Fox suggested several other actresses, but was easily convinced Garofalo was right.

"The studios always want to get someone who's a box-office star," Lehmann says. "They don't say, 'Great actress! Let's cast her!'

"But the first time I read this script, I put it down, called (the producers) and said, 'You know who would be great for this part? Janeane Garofalo.' "

Last seen as Winona Ryder's smart-aleck roommate in Reality Bites, Garofalo was coming off a miserable stint in the typically unfunny '94-'95 season of "Saturday Night Live" when Cats and Dogs was made. "It was less than one season," Garofalo says. "But it felt like 20 years."

As a senior studying history at Providence College, the lifetime stand-up comedy fan decided to try it herself. Her first time with a microphone, she was named "Funniest Person in Rhode Island" in a statewide competition.

Was she funny? "I doubt it," she says. "I'm sure everybody else just sucked 'cause Rhode Island is not known for its funny people."

Shortly thereafter, Garofalo started working full time as a comedian (she still does stand-up) and appearing on TV. Her film credits include a turn as a bad blind date in last year's Bye Bye, Love.

The Garofalo of today doesn't look like the Garofalo of Cats and Dogs.

"I realized I was getting the same scripts and not getting parts where I had really good auditions. ... I just knew it was a weight issue and a looks issue that I wasn't getting the parts.

"So I tried as an experiment to lose some weight and see what happens. It's remarkable the difference in the feedback you get after an audition weighing 140 and weighing 105. Oddly enough, you do get more talented as you get thinner."

Together forever. Or else.

For last relief from the nagging ache of taxes, we recommend TIAA-CREF SRAs. SRAs are tax-deferred annuities designed to help build additional assets—money that can help make the difference between living and living well after your working years are over.
Contributions to your SRAs are deducted from your salary on a pretax basis. That lowers your current taxable income, so you start saving on federal and, in most cases, state and local income taxes right away. Historic Oregon Trail Explored Anew in PBS Documentary

By Bob Thomas
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — The Oregon Trail has been chronicled in history books, novels, songs and movies. Now it comes to vivid life in a PBS special, "In Search of the Oregon Trail."

Co-produced by the Nebraska ETV Network and Oregon Public Broadcasting, the three-hour documentary is broadcast this Monday.

One of the great sagas of American history, the Oregon Trail is depicted through maps, paintings and drawings, and recently filmed depictions of the pioneers. Commentaries are delivered by historians, along with recitals of the diaries and recollections of the travelers themselves. Stacy Keach narrates.

The Oregon Trail stretched 2,000 miles from Missouri to western Oregon. Partially blazed by the Lewis and Clark expedition in the early 1800s, it became the route for westward settlers in 1843. As many as a half-million people made the six-month journey, averaging 15-20 miles per day. Most of them walked alongside oxen pulling their wagons.

"In Search of the Oregon Trail" corrects some of the movie depictions of the historic trek. The mile-long wagon trains existed only in the early years. The pioneers were mostly independent-minded farmers who traveled with two or three wagons.

Indian raids were rare. Most of the gunshot fatalities were caused by accidental misuse of firearms.

The documentary amounted to a five-year project for the producer-director, Michael Farrell of Nebraska ETV.

"The folks at Oregon Public Broadcasting, which is also a statewide network, approached us five years ago about the possibility of doing something on the Oregon Trail," Farrell recalled. "We spent the first couple of years developing a script and working to find funding."

The first script failed to attract enough backers to finance the show. A second script did the trick, and filming began in May 1995 and lasted until August. Two cameramen followed the trail from Missouri westward, and Farrell shot 30 hours of aerial photography.

"In certain parts of the country, quite a bit of the trail can be seen. But those places are in areas where it's hardest to get to."

Latin singer storms into Amherst

By Seema Gangatirkar

COURTESY J&N RECORDS
Kinito Méndez

Kinito Mendez, a dominant force not only in his native Dominican Republic, but also in the international market, will make his first ever appearance in Amherst tonight at 8:30 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium. The concert is sponsored by AHORA, Concepto Latino and the Office of ALANA Affairs.

Mendez began his musical career with the formation of the Cocoband, which became one of the most popular groups in Latin America at the time. In fact, Mendez became so popular that in 1989 his song "Mamito" earned a spot on The Kindergarten Cop soundtrack.

1993 saw the creation of La Rokaband, a group Mendez formed with Bobby Rafael. Through this group, Mendez was able to revolutionize the merengue industry, creating a new form of "Merengue Crado." That same year, Mendez won many prestigious awards, including Latin America's equivalent to the Grammys, the Casandra. He shared the Casandra with other great Latino artists, Tito Puente and Celia Cruz.

Mendez not only directed his own band, but in 1994, he took interest in some talented young musicians and formed the band Rikarena. Rikarena also took direction from Mendez and went on to be highly successful.

At the end of 1994, the singer decided to leave in order to explore the different realms of merengue, without destroying the principle essence of the music form.

Some of Mendez's more famous songs include "La Grua," "Santo Merengue," "La Pegua" and "Cauhainba." Mendez's most recent hit was in 1995, which broke all previous records on the charts and made inpressive sales.

For all fans of Latino music, this is a performance that should not be missed.

Kinito Mendez will perform at the Campus Center Auditorium in the basement of the Campus Center. The concert begins at 8:30 p.m. Tickets are $15 for Five College Students and $15 for the general public. For more information, please call (413) 545-2479 or 545-2517

Popular Les Ballets Africains to unveil new dance tonight

By Seema Gangatirkar
Collegian Staff

The dynamic and powerful Les Ballets Africains: The National Dance Company of the Republic of Guinea will bringing their energy and enthusiasm tonight at John M. Green Hall in Northampton.

Known for their spectacular and electrifying performances, Les Ballets Africains are known for bringing audiences to their feet. The 35-member troupe perform dances set to traditional music. Tonight will mark the American premiere of their new dance production, Heritage, a piece that reflects the artists' role of traveling ambassadors of their country and culture.

Heritage combines music and dance with mime to tell the fantastic story of demons, spirits, fabulous creatures, brave and honorable men and women. Heritage, however, is more than just a story — it also proclaims an important unifying message which is passed down from generation to generation. This message contains the codes for right-living which includes respect for the elders, nurturing and education of the young, compassion for the less fortunate and appreciation of beauty. All these themes are blended together to provide the elements of the story.

The Africain Ballet has enjoyed an illustrious and prestigious career which has spanned over four decades. The company was created in 1952 by the distinguished Guinean choreographer, Keita Fodeba. In 1958, the Africain Ballet became the National Ensemble of the Republic of Guinea, shortly after independence.

The current artistic director, Italo Zambo, took his post in 1986. He has enjoyed fame with Guincan television audiences as a comic mime artist and has had several film credits including Ben Ilur, Sheena and Mimuit.

Mohamed Kemoko Sano was appointed choreographer to the company in 1986 and he has been associated with the company for over 30 years. He also served as Director General of the Ballets DJOLIBA from 1973 until 1986.

The show begins at 7:30 p.m. John M. Greene Hall is located on Elm Street. General admission tickets are $12.50 and may be purchased by calling the Northampton Box Office at (413) 586-8686 or 1-800-THE-TICK. Special donor seating is available at $22.50 by calling the Northampton Center for the Arts at (413) 586-7282. For more information, please call the Center for the Arts.

Reality doesn't bite for Loeb

Singer to bring songs and Nine Stories to NoHo's Pearl Street

COURTESY MARK SELIGER
Lisa Loeb

By Lisa M. Oliveri
Collegian Staff

Known for her catchy melodies and quirky lyrics, pop superstar Lisa Loeb will bring her guitar and Nine Stories to Pearl Street this Friday night.

Loeb is perhaps best known for her No. 1 contribution to the soundtrack to Reality Bites. The success of "Stay (I Miss You)" bolted the virtually unknown Loeb into the spotlight, and guaranteed her a record deal.

She was discovered by Reality Bites star, Ethan Hawke who heard her singing in a local New York club. Impressed by her songwriting ability, Hawke brought Loeb to the attention of director Ben Stiller who immediately recognized her talent.

Selling over 750,000 copies worldwide of her hit single, Loeb and her band Nine Stories were catapulted into the spotlight and Lisa Loeb soon became a household name.

Loeb began studying music during her childhood, first playing the piano and then switching to guitar in junior high. Heavily influenced by Sting, Loeb said that he was the reason she decided to learn to play the guitar. At the suggestion of her teacher, Loeb began to write songs and perform at school events.

But it wasn't until college that she decided to pursue a career in music. Loeb and her roommate Liz decided to form a duo and started playing around campus, gathering many devoted fans.

The two moved to New York after graduation in 1990 and formed Nine Stories. Eventually Liz left the band and Loeb took on the role as leader.

In the spring of 1992 Loeb recorded her first effort, The Purple Acoustic Tape which sold thousands at her gigs. She sent her tapes to club owners all around the country, and after "Stay" was released, began to receive call backs.

Tails is the debut release from the young superstar. The songs are about a multitude of feelings and emotions. Loeb described the first track, "It's Over" as a song about death and survival. Loeb wrote the song about a friend of her brothers whose death made her think about "how some people relieve their depression through dying."

Many of the songs on her album are about relationships, being overwhelmed by them, or decided when to call it quits. The first single, "Do You Sleep" is no different. A maven at writing songs about lovers, Loeb said this song is about, "the full range of emotions you go through in and after a relationship."

Showcasing her talent as both songwriter and singer, Loeb is sure to please the crowd tomorrow with music from Tails.

Lisa Loeb and the Nine Stories will perform at Pearl Street tomorrow night. Doors open at 6:30 pm and tickets are $11 in advance.

Prism IV to showcase new style

By Lisa M. Oliveri
Collegian Staff

Sunlight reflecting through a stained glass window is the image Malcolm W. Rowell, Jr. hopes to accomplish in his latest musical endeavor.

Rowell, the Director of Bands at the University of Massachusetts returns to the Fine Arts center this evening to present Prism IV, an unconventional musical spectacle.

"I felt the need to explore new ways to present our concert programs," said Rowell.

The Prism concert is like no other. Various ensembles such as wind, strings, vocal and dance perform in succession to one another, utilizing different parts of the auditorium. The performances are constant, without even a break for applause, producing a breathtaking and mesmerizing effect.

Without the limitation of one performance place, audience members are overwhelmed by both the sounds and sights around them.

"The end product is one hour and fifteen minutes of seamless music," said Rowell. "Like sunshine being reflected off of colored glass."

Rowell said that he always wanted to experiment with different mediums in his concerts which were limited to wind ensemble and concert band.

After seeing a similar concert at the Eastman School of Music, the idea of having a Prism concert was born. Achieving much recognition and praise of his previous Prism concerts, Rowell has returned to present another.

Prism IV incorporates both music and poetry. It includes classical pieces by Mozart and Schumann, as well as contemporary pieces by Bernstein, Bozza and Schuller. Prism IV also features a multitude of jazz.

The poetry will be read by Professor Ron Welburn of the UMass English department. Welburn specializes in 19th and 20th American literature, Native American literature and Jazz Studies. He has contributed to many publications including Jazz Times, The Village Voice and Contemporary Native American Poetry.

Rowell said that the preparation for Prism concerts is an intense challenge. He begins a year in advance, choosing a producer and planning the ensembles. Rowell said that performing in Prism is a very exciting experience for many of his students.

"Students exhibit great pride in the product," said Rowell. "It is a joy to see absolutely everyone working at his/her best."

Prism IV will be held at the Fine Arts Center at 8 pm. Tickets are $5 for students, $10 for general public, and UMASS students are admitted free with a valid ID.

song writing and smooth production of their latest album House of GVSB.

On "Super-Fire," McCloud sings, "In dust we trust" over music which has your head spinning from the bass sounds that come from all around. Another killer tune is "TheKindaMeKYouLike" which begins semi-funky and ends in the traditional Girls Against Boys heaviness. Meanwhile "Cash Machine" has sounds of coins dropping into a slot machine over a bass heavy stomp groove.

House of GVSB brings heavy music and attitude all at once. Enter the House of GVSB! A (Jason Flax)

BRETT LOVINS
La Verkin Thunder
self-released

Brett Lovins has the playful mind of a beat poet, the soul of a Delta bluesman and a musical palette diverse and colorful enough to rival any folk musician.

La Verkin Thunder defies categorization as song after song winds Lovin's beautifully eccentric wordplay around slide guitars, dulcimers and even "dashboard percussion" — most of which are played by Lovins himself. The subtle production, again by Lovins, supports beautifully without cluttering up the songs. "All Ye In Come Free" is especially powerful, with its thundering percussion and wash of acoustic guitars framing the almost dreamlike lyrics. The title track, too, benefits from the full band arrangement with the expected Lovins twists thrown in — a tenor banjo and background singers chiming in atop a solid folk-rock groove.

Lyrically, Lovins plays with words the same way he plays with sounds. "Glob in a Car" is full of his slanted worldview observation: "In my tank my ancient dinosaurs," he sings, "and I burn them through a sieve." In "Climb In Your Box," Lovins sings, "Love you — gonna say it loud and clear, I'm afraid that one of these days that word will up and disappear." The fantastic lyrical journey Lovins takes us on throughout the album is full of such sentiment — observations of the often unobserved, and a healthy dose of what those observations might mean.

Recent live shows (with the addition of slide guitar virtuoso Phil Suttile) are evidence of new and exciting directions in Lovins' music, but until the next album redefines the wild world of Brett Lovins, La Verkin Thunder will stand as a worthy testament to the fantastic creative imagination of Lovins working his way through an amazing world of sound and imagination. Reds rally, beat Mets behind Davis

By Joe Kay
Associated Press

CINCINNATI — Eddie Taubensee drove in four runs and Eric Davis doubled home the tie-breaking run in the seventh inning Wednesday night, rallying the Cincinnati Reds to a 9-7 victory over the New York Mets.

The Mets' pitching staff walked 11 — four shy of the club record — as it wasted a four-run first inning and a four-hit performance by Bernard Gilkey.

Taubensee had a three-run homer and an RBI double to help the Reds tie it 7-all in the fourth. The four RBIs matched his career high.

The game turned on the Mets' 11th walk. Bob MacDonald (0-1) walked Mike Kelly to open the seventh and scored on Davis' two-out double to right off Jerry DiPoto. Reggie Sanders doubled home Davis for a 9-7 lead.

Tim Pugh (1-0) pitched two scoreless innings in relief of Dave Burba, and Jeff Brantley struck out the side in the ninth for his second save.

Burba and Mets starter Paul Wilson got rocked from the first inning, when each team sent eight batters to the plate to set the tone for the night.

Wilson, making his second major-league start, gave up seven runs on seven hits and six walks in 3 2-3 innings. He threw 88 pitches, only half of them strikes, and walked five of the first 11 batters he faced.

Burba gave up seven runs on 10 hits and two walks over five innings and had a rough time all around. He also got grazed on the back of the head when home plate umpire Paul Runge and Taubensee, the catcher, tossed him a ball simultaneously. Burba also was hit on the leg by a comebacker.

Gilkey had three hits in the first four innings to jump-start the Mets' offense. His RBI double started the scoring in the first, which was prolonged by second baseman Eric Owens' throwing error. Wilson, who walked just two in six innings of his debut April 4 against St. Louis, gave up a pair of walks with one out in the first ahead of Taubensee's first-pitch homer, his second.

Carl Everett and Rico Brogna had run-scoring singles to push the lead to 6-3 in the second, but Owens singled home a pair of runs in the third to make it 6-5.

After Gilkey doubled home a run in the fourth, the Reds tied it 7-all in the bottom of the inning on Taubensee's double and Hal Morris' single.

Notes: The four hits matched Gilkey's career high. He has collected four hits in a game eight there times, most recently last June 11 in St. Louis against Atlanta. He has hit in all eight games and is batting .444 (16-for-36)... John Franco needs three more saves to become the first left-hander with 300 career... The Reds designated reliever Xavier Hernandez for assignment Wednesday and called up outfielder Curtis Goodwin from Triple-A Indianapolis... X-rays Wednesday found no fracture in catcher Joe Oliver's right thumb. He sprained it slightly while making a tag at home plate Tuesday night... The Reds have played just one game under 3 hours this season.

Cardinals 4, Expos 1

ST. LOUIS — Rookie Alan Benes, making his fifth career start, pitched a four-hitter Wednesday to lead the St. Louis Cardinals to a 4-1 win over the Montreal Expos.

Benes (1-0), the younger brother and teammate of Andy Benes, took a shutout into the ninth before Rondell White led off with a homer. Benes, 24, struck out a career-high 11 — six looking — and walked two in his first complete game.

In his first start on opening day, Benes was roughed by the New York Mets for seven runs in 3 1-3 innings. He limited the Expos to three singles, including two infield hits by Mark Grudzielanek, before White's homer.

Ray Lankford homered for the Cardinals, who won despite going 0-for-8 with runners in scoring position. St. Louis is batting just .183 this season with runners at second or third.

Lankford, who led the Cardinals with 25 home runs last year, hit his first off rookie Jose Paniqua (1-1) to open the third. St. Louis added three runs in the eighth, with two coming in on a throwing error by Expos reliever Dave Veres.

Ron Gant walked and Willie McGee bunted on to open the eighth. After fielding Gary Gaetti's bunt, Veres thought about throwing to third before throwing the ball away trying to get Gaetti at first. Both Gant and McGee scored on the play, and the Cardinals added a third run on a double by Pat Borders.

The Cardinals missed an opportunity to blow the game open early, leaving the bases loaded in the first and stranding two more in the second. St. Louis stranded 14 runners in its home opener, a 4-3, 10-inning loss to Montreal, and left nine on Wednesday.

Paniqua, replacing the injured Carlos Perez in the Expos' rotation, gave up seven hits in five innings.

Notes: Cardinals shortstop Ozzie Smith sat out the game with a tight hamstring. He didn't start the first six games of the season and was removed after nine innings of the home opener, his first start... The Cardinals have scored first in seven of their first eight games... Catcher Borders has thrown out both runners who've attempted to steal... Luis Alicea, who had started the first seven games, was 0-for-5... Montreal's Mike Lansing, who led the league in hitting entering the game, singled in the sixth and is 1-for-29 for the season... Dave Silvestri struck out twice and has fanned eight times in eight games.

Tigers 7, Mariners 3

DETROIT (AP) — Omar Olivares pitched a five-hitter for his first American League victory and the Detroit Tigers hit three more home runs Wednesday in a 7-3 win over the Seattle Mariners.

Mark Parent, Melvin Nieves and Cecil Fielder homered for the Tigers, who have hit 17 home runs in their first nine games, including 14 in their last six.

Olivares (1-0), signed as a free agent in the offseason after pitching for Colorado and Philadelphia last year, became the first Tigers pitcher to go the distance this season. He struck out eight, including Jay Buhner four times, and walked two.

Seattle starter Edwin Hurtado (1-2) gave up five runs and seven hits in five innings.

The Mariners have lost nine straight games at Tiger Stadium over the past three seasons. Seattle has not won in Detroit since May 8, 1994.

Olivares gave up a leadoff homer to Joey Cora in the first and was behind 2-0 after three innings before the Tigers scored four times in the fourth.

Curtis Pride hit a one-out single, stole second and scored on Mark Lewis' single. Parent, another former National Leaguer, then hit his first homer with the Tigers.

Hurtado then walked Chris Gomez and Chad Curtis. Bobby Higginson followed with a single to right that Buhner booted, allowing Gomez to score.

The switch-hitting Nieves started the Tigers fifth with an opposite-field homer to left, his second this season.

Ken Griffey Jr. hit an RBI single in the sixth to cut it to 4-3. But Fielder put the Tigers ahead for good in the sixth with a two-run homer. Paul Menhart relieved Hurtado and retired the first two batters before Travis Fryman singled. Fielder hit a liner to left that glanced off a padded railing and bounced into the seats for his fourth homer.

Cora's homer into the upper deck in the first was his second this season.

The Mariners made it 2-0 in the third on a sacrifice fly by Alex Diaz.

Notes: Cora has hit three of his nine career home runs against Detroit. All nine homers have come off right-handed pitchers... Entering the game, 45 percent of Detroit's hits were for extra bases... Seattle catcher John Marzano made his first start this season. Dan Wilson had started the previous seven games.

Off–season brings many changes

The off–season has brought about many new faces to different NFL places, including the arrival of the Cleveland Castoffs... eh... Browns to Baltimore. America's team is in dire straits after winning their third Super Blowout in four years, as not only are free agents leaving but their 'Playmaker' might soon be a license plate maker. With a lot going on, let's get to the news...

It was bad enough when Jerry Jones hired Barry Switzer to replace Jimmy Johnson at the helm of the Dallas Cowboys. Even his stubborn attempt to try the same play twice on fourth down couldn't keep them from a fifth Lombardi Trophy, but the loss of key parts of what made Dallas 'Big D' so big will prevent a return to the Super Bowl.

Linebacker Darren Smith left for Minnesota to become a purple people eater, and last year's undeserving Super Bowl MVP Larry Brown followed Russell Maryland's lead to Oakland where they will wear Al Davis' Silver and Black. (Along with the re-signed Jeff Hostetler, look out for the Raiders in '96.)

Michael Irvin has been indicted on two drug related charges after being found in a room with drugs and two 'personal escorts.' Cocaine was found in the same room as the former Miami Hurricane and he could spend some time in jail. Speculation of more wrong-doing with drugs surrounds his teammates.

Four fellow Cowboys are said to have had drug tests turn up positive, but the tests were conducted three days before the starting date set in the NFL Players Union's deal with the league. Thus, the results of the tests were thrown out.

It's not just current Dallas players that are finding themselves in trouble these days as Harvey Martin was arrested last week for assaulting his wife.

JUSTIN SMITH on the NFL

The Cowboys are America's team, but I don't think Jerry Jones had the inclination that it meant they were going to highlight America's problems as well.

• Dallas isn't the only team from Super Bowl XXX to have its problems with personnel. After the man who made Brown the MVP, quarterback Neil O'Donnell, left for the Jets, Byron 'Bam' Morris has also been detained by authorities. Maybe you just shouldn't go to the Big Show when the numbers all X's. Asks fans in these parts about what happened to the Patriots after they lost to the Bears in Super Bowl XX.

• O.K., so 1995 wasn't the Arizona Cardinals year to make the playoffs, as it turned out Dave Krieg was not the answer at quarterback Buddy Ryan's vaunted defense had more problems than the weather is causing to the start of the Major League Baseball season.

Vince Tobin is now the captain of Bill Bidwell's ship that hopes to lower the 'Boomer' on the opposition next season. Norman Esiason will be under center in the desert to start 1996, which is what he said he wanted to do — be a starter, but the question remains for how long?

Esiason is still trying to find out what state he is in after the clean, yet tractor-trailer type hit by Bruce Smith last year. The helmet–to–helmet blow caused headaches that lasted three weeks for Esiason and may have made him overlook one part of the Cardinals offense. The Arizona offensive line gave up more sacks than any other team in the NFL. Not necessarily a good career choice Norman, as the only person worse for that job would have been Chris Miller.

• It's almost conceivable that if you were to take the best 45 professional football players that called the Meadowlands their home, they might make a contending squad. Normally it's Jets fans who can complain about the lack of motion in the front office. But last week George Young, General Manager of the Giants, was being besieged with questions why he hadn't done anything so far this off–season.

Yes George, you were able to match the offer sheet to Rodney Hampton that the 49ers had with the Giant running back, but you really had no choice. Who were Giant fans going to come out to cheer for, Dave Brown?

The Jets signed former Giant Jumbo Elliot and David Williams of Houston, (yes the same man who missed his flight for a game to see his child being born) to prove to O'Donnell they were serious about protecting him. Tight end Johnny Mitchell may be a very interesting piece of trade bait in order to move up from their second round position, to early in the first to select either Lceland McElroy or Eddie George. Lawrence Phillips has impressed in workouts thus far, but if Keyshawn Johnson says he'll play for the Jets then they will most likely take him with the first pick.

• The New England Patriots are looking to have another decent off–season in terms of moves to better the club. Former Charger wideout Sean Jefferson, and secondary specialist form Detroit Willie Clay, are both positive additions to Bill Parcells roster. Clay will replace the man who would be the answer to why the Pats' secondary was so bad in 1995 — Myron Guyton. But the release of one Vincent Brown does leave me a little baffled.

He was the anchor of the New England defense and more importantly the glue that kept them together. Brown was the captain of the defense and there was no one better on game day. I realize his knees aren't what they once were, but when it came down to true grit, he was the definition. They rallied around him, now they must press on without their leader.

• The franchise that moved from Cleveland to Baltimore will officially be known as the Ravens. I'm pretty sure that's so next time Art Modell isn't happy with where his team is playing, it will be a lot easier to just fly away.

Grand jury clears accused VaTech football players

By David Reed
Associated Press

BLACKSBURG, Va. — A grand jury decided Wednesday that there was insufficient evidence to indict two Virginia Tech football players accused of raping a woman in their dormitory room. The finding came following a state police investigation. The criminal aspect of the case is now closed.

But, Antonio Morrison and James Crawford remain defendants in a civil lawsuit filed in U.S. District Court in Roanoke by Christy Brzonkala. The two-month state police investigation requested by attorney general James S. Gilmore III drew no conclusion about the players' guilt or innocence. Montgomery County Commonwealth's attorney presented the evidence from the investigation to the jurors. The only charge that could have come out of the investigation was rape; the statute of limitations has expired on lesser charges such as sexual battery.

Brzonkala, who has requested that her name be used in news stories about the case, said Morrison and Crawford raped her in September 1994 while another football player, Cornell Brown, watched. She reported the alleged rape to campus authorities the next semester.

She also contends in her lawsuit that Virginia Tech sexually discriminated against her by giving favorable treatment to Morrison in university judicial proceedings because he was a valuable member of the football team.

A school panel found Morrison, who said, whatever happened was consensual, guilty of sexual assault. The panel suspended him for two semesters, but the university charge later was reduced and the suspension vacated. Crawford was cleared of all university charges by the same panel. The school never charged Brown in the alleged attack, and he was not a subject of the criminal investigation.

The lawsuit seeks $10 million from Morrison and un-specified damages from the other players and the university. Morrison and Crawford are accused of rape, aggravated sexual battery and assault and battery in the lawsuit, and all three players are accused of false imprisonment for alleged by confining Brzonkala against her will.

The case is the first major test of the federal Violence Against Women Act, which was passed a week before Brzonkala visited the football players' suite on the third floor of an athletic dormitory at Virginia Tech on the night of the alleged attack.

NBA to get involved with women's hoop

PARIS (AP) — The NBA took a step closer to big-time involvement in women's basketball Wednesday when commissioner David Stern said it would examine whether the time was right for another shot at a national league.

"If we get involved, we would get involved in a substantial way," he said.

"We are going to air thoroughly the issue of a professional women's basketball league and see whether there exists the right circumstances for its launching," said Stern, who is in Paris for the European final Four for men's club champions.

"Women's basketball in the United States is not as advanced as it is in Europe in support," Stern said. "This is a subject that deserves a great deal of attention because it will bring numerous people to basketball and we encourage growth in our sport." Stern said he had no qualms about the NBA being involved even if a try at national women's league failed some years ago.

"We obviously don't feel it's a bad risk at all," Stern said. "There has been a level of participation that previously didn't exist in women's sports. Circumstances have changed."

Baseball owners have lost more than $700m during past two seasons

By Ronald Blum
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Baseball owners lost more than $700 million during the 1994 and 1995 seasons, according to financial data obtained by The Associated Press.

The 28 teams had an operating loss of $376 million in 1994, when the players' strike wiped out the final 52 days of the regular season, the playoffs and the World Series. The teams lost $326 million last year according to preliminary estimates compiled by the commissioner's office.

Baseball's 232-day strike, the longest ever in U.S. pro sports, appears to have cost owners more than $900 million in revenue and cost players about $350 million in pay.

Teams combined for an operating profit of $36 million in 1993, the last year before the strike, the industry's eighth consecutive profitable year.

Losses the last two years dwarfed those in 1981, when a 50-day strike canceled a large part of the season. Owners sustained a $105 million loss that year, not including $47 million in strike insurance payments. Owners did not have insurance during the latest strike.

As a result of the strike and a decrease in national TV money, operating revenue dropped 35 percent in 1994 from a record $1.87 billion to $1.21 billion.

Revenue rebounded 12 percent to $1.36 billion last season, according to the preliminary estimates. Average attendance per game dropped 20 percent and the strike cut the regular season from 162 games for each team to 144.

Operating expenses, however, did not fall by nearly as much. They dropped 14 percent from $1.83 billion in 1993 to $1.58 billion in 1994, then rose six percent to $1.68 billion in 1995.

The statements on losses were compiled by the commissioner's office and obtained by the AP from sources on the condition they not be identified.

Players lost about $243 million in 1994 due to the strike; $229.7 million in salary and approximately $13 million more in performance bonuses. In 1995, they lost about $90 million in salary because the season was shortened 11.1 percent.

Van Exel suspended and fined for shoving referee

By Ron Lesko
Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS — Nick Van Exel of the Los Angeles Lakers was suspended for the final seven regular-season games and fined an NBA-record $25,000 Wednesday for shoving a referee, a message to the rest of the league to leave officials alone.

"I think everybody understands that if this happens again the penalty will be even more severe," said Rod Thorn, the NBA's director of league operations.

The Los Angeles point guard's suspension, which began with Wednesday night's game against the Minnesota Timberwolves, came less than a month after Chicago Bulls forward Dennis Rodman was suspended six games and fined $20,000 for head-butting a referee. Rodman's suspension had been the third-longest in NBA history for an on-court incident until Wednesday.

"It was more than Rodman did," Thorn said of Van Exel's actions in Tuesday night's loss at Denver. "Therefore, the fine was $5,000 more and one more game. I think we got Mr. Van Exel's attention."

Thorn said he considered suspending Van Exel for the playoffs. The league's action will cost Van Exel about $187,000, including $161,000 in pay during the suspension. It also jeopardizes the Lakers' playoff chances just three weeks after the team was splintered by Cedric Ceballos' unexcused four-day absence.

"It's inexcusable," Magic Johnson said Tuesday night of Van Exel's actions. "You just don't do that. Now you're going to have to sit... the rest of the season. Just when I thought we were smart, and then wham!"

The incident occurred with 3:25 left in the Lakers' 98-91 loss to Denver on Tuesday night.

The exchange between Van Exel and referee Ron Garretson began after a foul was called on the Nuggets' Dale Ellis. Van Exel apparently made a sarcastic remark about the call, and Garretson, after a brief conversation with Van Exel, signaled a technical during a timeout.

Van Exel had turned away before the technical was assessed, and he then followed Garretson to the scorer's table to protest. Courtside observers reported that Van Exel called Garretson a "little midget" during the subsequent argument, and Garretson gave out the second technical, which results in ejection.

Van Exel then erupted, using a forearm to shove Garretson onto the scorer's table.

"I turn away from him. He pushes me... He pushed me onto the table from what I remember," Garretson told the Rocky Mountain News. "Instinctively, I started to do something that I think I quite possibly would regret, and caught myself, and his players took him."

Van Exel's suspension is the third longest in league history for an on-court incident. Kermit Washington was suspended for 26 games in 1977 for punching Rudy Tomjanovich, and Vernon Maxwell received a 10-game suspension last year for going into the stands and hitting a fan.

Just three weeks ago, Van Exel had been among the Lakers most critical of Ceballos when Ceballos left the team.

"He abandoned us, you know," Van Exel said at the time. "At a time like this, at a time we have to stick together. It's going to be hard."

Pistons 92, Sixers 76

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. (AP) — The Detroit Pistons had a hard time convincing themselves they had much to fear from the Philadelphia 76ers.

After all, Detroit had beaten the Sixers three straight times this season by an average of 21 points, including a 108-87 rout at Philadelphia last Friday. And the Sixers had limped into the Palace with just eight players after a run of injuries that included leading scorer Jerry Stackhouse.

As it turned out, the Pistons struggled for a while before blowing the game open for a 92-76 victory.

"When you play a team like Philly that is struggling, it's really hard to get up for the game," Detroit's Allan Houston said. "You really have to concentrate, as opposed to games against teams like Chicago or Indiana."

Otis Thorpe led the Pistons with 24 points and a season-high 16 rebounds. Grant Hill contributed 11 points, 11 rebounds and nine assists.

"They were double-teaming me, and Otis was just on fire, so I concentrated on getting him the ball," Hill said. "I'd rather worry about getting triple-doubles or scoring 30 points in a game where we need it, not one like tonight."

Detroit led 55-41 at the half, but Philadelphia got a quick start in the third quarter and pulled within 58-47.

Thorpe scored the next six points, and the Pistons went on a 13-0 run to take a commanding 71-47 lead.

"They just wore us out inside with Otis Thorpe," Sixers coach John Lucas said. "We are in over our heads, and I believe in miracles but this was one that wasn't going to happen."

Terry Mills scored the last four points of the run, and his 12 in the quarter helped Detroit move ahead by 79-55 with 12 minutes to play.

"At the start of the second half, we were really lethargic, and I started to worry," Pistons coach Doug Collins said. "Once we got some movement again, we broke the game open. Otis was great inside, and then Terry had a surge that really got us going."

Detroit led by as many as 26 in the fourth before the 76ers rallied. Detroit scored only 13 points in a sloppy fourth quarter. Allan Houston added 17 points and Mills 16 for Detroit. Clarence Weatherspoon led the 76ers with 24.

Three-pointers by Rex Walters and Trevor Ruffin pulled the 76ers within 12-10, but six points by Thorpe led a 12-2 surge that put Detroit ahead by 12.

It was 29-15 after one quarter and Detroit expanded the margin to 38-18 early in the second before letting the 76ers sneak back within 14 at the half.

"Our last three or four games have been against teams that are basically playing out the season, and the intensity hasn't been there," Hill said. "Luckily, unlike the Boston and Milwaukee games, tonight we had enough of it to win."

Notes: The 76ers only dressed eight players after recent injuries to Richard Dumas (foot), Jerry Stackhouse (thumb) and Sean Higgins (elbow)... The 76ers return to action on Friday at Chicago, while the Pistons are at Indiana on Saturday... The Pistons set a team record for 3-pointers in a season when Allan Houston hit their 495th in the first quarter.

Jazz 103, Suns 79

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Karl Malone had 15 points and 10 rebounds and the Utah Jazz beat Phoenix 103-79 Wednesday night, the Suns' second straight loss and third in four games.

Michael Finley led the Suns with 15 points, Kevin Johnson added 14 and Charles Barkley 12 in 29 minutes. The Suns lost 98-91 at Portland on Tuesday night.

Utah, which won for just the second time in seven games, broke a three-game home losing streak. The Jazz remained four games back of Midwest Division leader San Antonio and 3 1/2 games ahead of the Los Angeles Lakers, who are fourth in the Western Conference race. Phoenix dropped 1 1/2 games behind Portland for the sixth spot in the Western Conference.

Utah jumped to a 33-16 lead after an 18-4 run late in the first quarter and early in the second. Malone had 10 in the run. A 9-2 run in the final 2:48 of the half gave the Jazz a 55-35 advantage at halftime.

Phoenix came as close as 59-48 after an 11-0 run, led by Barkley with eight. But Utah scored the next five points and led 75-61 at the end of the third quarter.

The Jazz outscored the Suns 10-4 to start the fourth quarter to lead 85-65. The Suns got no closer than 18 thereafter.

Bullets 122, Celtics 108

BOSTON (AP) — Juwan Howard scored 26 points and grabbed 11 rebounds to lead the Washington Bullets to a 122-108 win over the Boston Celtics on Wednesday night.

The Bullets' winning streak was extended to five games. They have won seven of the last nine.

David Wesley scored 19 to lead the Celtics who have lost two straight and four of six.

Boston cut the Bullets' lead to 94-91 when Todd Day hit a 3-pointer with 8:10 left. Chris Whitney, who came off the Washington bench to score eight fourth-quarter points, answered with a 3-pointer at 7:48 to give the Bullets a 97-91 lead. Washington then went on a 9-4 run, taking a 106-95 lead on two free throws by Howard with 5:14 left. The closest the Celtics got after that was 109-101 when Greg Minor hit a 17-foot jump shot with 3:28 left.

Strange, cold start to '96 season

By Ben Walker
Associated Press

Ah, those sweet sights and sounds of the summer game.

A stadium organist playing "Let It Snow." Hitters sticking their bats in portable heaters, pitchers wrapping their hands around hot water bottles. Umpires wearing ski masks, fans wearing whatever.

"When I saw Santa Claus in the first row, I knew this would be a strange day," Paul O'Neill said after the New York Yankees played their home opener in a snowstorm Tuesday.

A strange season, actually.

Bad weather has been the big winner so far, with a combination of snow, rain and cold causing 10 games to be postponed. And many of those that have been held, well, they haven't been too comfortable.

It was in the mid-30s last week at Wrigley Field when the Chicago Cubs began the year with a six-game homestand. It was 34 degrees in Detroit on Tuesday, the coldest Tigers' home opener since they began keeping records in 1934.

The Cincinnati Reds played host to the New York Mets in freezing temperatures Tuesday. The Boston Red Sox, after having their home opener snowed out Monday, found it just as chilly a day later at Fenway Park.

"Toward the seventh, eighth and ninth innings, it got real cold," Red Sox third baseman Tim Naehring said. "That's when you're glad you're up, 7-8-9 to 1, and not tied at 3-3 hoping somebody won't hit a fine drive at you."

Injuries, though, have increased. Whether it's a minor cramp for an outfielder chasing a fly ball or Los Angeles pitcher Ramon Martinez hurting his hamstring running out a grounder in Chicago, there's been trouble.

Picking out why there have been so many problems is easy. This season began on March 31, the earliest start in major league history, to ensure the World Series didn't stretch way into November. But, that gave winter one last chance to wreck things. Also, this week's weather took a freak, wicked turn, causing more trouble.

Pointing out what to do is more difficult. There are several possible solutions, such as:

• Pushing back opening day and condensing the schedule by playing more doubleheaders. Only one doubleheader was scheduled in the majors this year.

• Having teams on the West Coast, in the South and in domes play at home in the first two weeks of the season.

• Going back to a 154-game schedule.

Owners, however, are hesitant to do anything that will cut down home dates. And many teams might resent being forced to play on the road at the start of every season.

"There are a number of things we can do differently, but we have to look at all the options," acting commissioner Bud Selig said. "But there's no question that we need to examine those options because this has been very traumatic."

"You worry about players' health, players like Ramon

Martinez," he said. "When I say it's traumatic, that's what I mean. This is something we really need to review."

In the meantime, the games go on. Or, at least, they try to in both the majors and minors.

Baltimore's home game against Cleveland was called off Tuesday. "It's just as well," Orioles manager Davey Johnson said. "It's early in the season, you've got a wet track out there, and you don't want someone getting hurt. I know this field drains well, but..."

Eight minor league games were postponed Tuesday, including snowouts in Pawtucket, R.I., Reading, Pa., and Salem, Va.

The Yankees, already with three games wiped out by bad weather, were glad to play Tuesday — sort of — despite blinding snow that fell from the first pitch to the last.

"This time of year, everyone is losing games," O'Neill said. "You've got to get them in."

NBA fans know, the Supersonics have been eliminated in the first round of the playoffs the past two years. Guys, do you think the third time is the charm or what?

San Antonio has been hot lately, but so is the desert. The two teams to watch here are LA and Houston. Led by Magic Johnson, the Lakers have been rolling since his return. The brash, bold, trash-talkers of a year ago have turned into willing students, learning how to win from their elder teacher.

Houston, are you kidding me? With the "always dangerous" Tim Breaux in the lineup. Yes, those same defending champion Rockets who have been rattled by injuries all season. Clyde Drexler has returned and Hakeem is on the way. Watch for the Rockets to make life interesting in the West.

Once again, Utah has won 50-plus games and most likely will lose in the second round. What else is new?

Portland, Phoenix and Sacramento round out the rest of the field. Poor Charles Barkley, after recording about 20 straight double-doubles the Suns still won't get far. Boy do they miss Dan Majerle.

Predictions

First Round: Seattle over Sacramento, San Antonio over Portland, Utah over Phoenix, LA over Houston (it'll be a war).
Semifinals: Lakers over Seattle (hopefully), San Antonio over Utah.
Finals: Lakers vs. San Antonio
Western Conference Champs: Lakers

Although a Chicago/Lakers matchup in the finals is unlikely, it is certainly possible. Chicago would win such a pairing, but than again Chicago should win most any matchup. Trust me, the last thing you will read here is a nice thing about the Bulls. However, reality should prevail — like it or not.

two whole sports franchises for that amount of money. There are only six teams in the majors whose highest paid player doesn't make at least $5 million; the lowest salary of a player who makes the most on his team is $3 million. That slim paycheck goes to Moises Alou in Montreal, the cheap capital of baseball.

Cecil Fielder is the league's highest priced player at $9.24 million this season. I wasn't aware that Detroit paid by the pound. The league minimum is a scant $109,000 — poor guys.

• Brain Buster Answers: 1. Fred Lynn and Jim Rice; 2. Willie Hernandez, '84, Roger Clemens, '86, Dennis Eckersley, '92.

• The Sox have pitching problems, huh? Patience is a virtue.

Jeff Suppan and Rafael Orrelano are legitimate, big-time pitching prospects polishing their skills down on the farm. Along with the two home-grown hurlers, Dan Duquette has gone after a Japanese model... sort of. Robinson Perez Checo, a native of the Dominican Republic pitching for the Hiroshima Carp of the Japanese Major League, has reportedly worked out a deal to be traded to Boston for the beginning of next season. Checo is a big-time talent who went 16-5 for the Carp in '95.

plenty of beer). The $3.75 cheeseburger can now be accompanied by Chinese food or fried clams.

Corporations jumped on the bandwagon as well. True Value gave out free Opening Day hats, while a Lojack- sponsored plane flew over the park with the slogan "Steal bases, not cars."

Perhaps the best promotion of the day came in an unusual place. A local bar's fliers that said "Beer Cheap," hung over the urinals in the men's room. Talk about reaching your target audience.

On the field, it brought back memories to see uniform No. 24 patrolling Fenway's spacious nightfield, but the fact that it was Kevin Mitchell's feet in the stirrups instead of Dwight Evans' didn't seem right.

Mitchell won the hearts of the Fenway faithful early on. He joked with the crowd seated in right field and had two RBI on a fifth inning single.

Mitchell was thrown out trying to stretch the base hit into a double on a close play at second. Despite the fact the play was well out of the vision of the outfield fans, it didn't stop them from vulgarly protesting the call.

In a scene that has played out at every game since the beginning of time, the under-15 fans giggled at the blatant profanity, while their parents cringed at the thought of their kids hearing it.

Despite the fact that the hometown team stumbled into Boston after a 1-5 start to its season, the fans still embraced their team. On Tuesday, the Red Sox looked like the team that the optimists thought it would be.

The meat of the order, led by Mo Vaughn's first dinger of the season, drove former Red Sox pitcher (and now Boston basher) Frankie Rodriguez to an early shower. Mike Greenwell added three hits as well, continuing his surprising success in the leadoff spot.

Free-agent signee Tom Gordon was brilliant as well, giving up only one run, while striking out eight to pick up the complete game.

Along with the crocus and the first red-breasted bird to return from the South, Opening Day is a rite of Spring. Despite the fact that snow dusted the sidewalks of Yawkey Way, an outbreak of not only Spring Fever, but Red Sox fever, will take over New England.

And the die-hard optimists will ask "Could this be the year?"

I hope so.

who is considered to be the nation's No. 3 recruit, is facing a situation more serious than deciding whose uniform to wear next year.

While his academics are in question (he hasn't qualified yet), it's his personal life that worries coaches. O'Neal has stated that he would rather perform community service than face trial for rape.

The rape charges he faces are a result of consensual sex with a 15-year-old girl. The girl's father walked in on the two "in-the-act" and pressed the charges, despite opposition from his wife and daughter.

• Corey Benjamin, the No. 4 recruit, has a list of possible schools as long as Camby's list of Player of the Year awards. Connecticut, Syracuse and Oregon State (his brother Sonny plays there) are front runners. Also included are Fresno State, West Virginia, Southern Cal, Kansas, UNLV, and possibly UCLA, UNC and Ga. Tech.

• It is expected that Shaheen Halloway of Elizabeth, N.J., will attend Seton Hall, after considering Duke, Syracuse and UMass.

• In coaching news, Fran Fraschilla was announced as the new head coach of St. John's, after Brian Mahoney was released from his coaching responsibilities.

Mahoney had been the coach of the Red Storm for the past four seasons, compiling a 56-58 record, including three straight losing seasons. In the same span, Fraschilla had a 85-35 record and two trips to the NCAA Tournament at Manhattan.
